INTRODUCTION TO VOLUME I.
OF THE CALENDAR.

THE present volume contains a Calendar of one section of the large and valuable collection of manuscripts belonging to the Duke of Portland. It deals with twenty-two volumes of papers of the seventeenth century, which were found by Mr. Maxwell Lyte in a cupboard in the library at Welbeck Abbey, and were at once recognised by him to be the Collections of Dr. John Nalson and Dr. Philip Williams, from which he had seen extracts in Peck's Desiderata Curiosa and elsewhere. A twenty-third volume contains a list of the different papers in the others. While this Calendar has been in course of preparation, the original documents have been repaired and re-bound, but in the same order as before.

The Collection was formed by the Rev. John Nalson, LL.D., Rector of Doddington, and Canon of Ely. The chief source, both from internal evidence and his own statements,¹ appears to have been the papers in the office of the Clerk of the Parliament, from which he was apparently allowed to take almost anything he pleased, although in June 1684 the Clerk of the House wrote for a list of the books in his possession belonging to the office.² He also had access to the Paper Office,³ though there he was apparently allowed only to take copies, and the Duke of Ormonde allowed him to see and copy the Ormonde papers, which now form the Carte Collection in the Bodleian. From these materials Dr. Nalson published two volumes, extending from 1639 to January 1641-2, the second appearing late in 1683, in the last words of which he expresses his intention of continuing the publication, an intention frustrated by his death, at the age of 48, on March 24, 1685-6. He left no son, but his daughter Elizabeth married in 1690 the Rev. Philip Williams, also Rector of Doddington, and had by him a son, also named Philip, and some daughters. After Nalson's death, his Collections appear to have been neglected, and a considerable part of them fell into the hands of Bishop Tanner, while he held a prebend at Ely between 1713 and 1724. Some notion of the number he obtained from the Collection may be obtained from the following fact. One volume, No. XI., consists of 356 transcripts by Nalson and Philip Williams, the elder. The originals of 164 of these are among the Tanner MSS., and doubtless came from Nalson's Collection; and in looking through the Tanner Catalogue one is continually struck by one part of a group of papers being there, while the other is here. For instance, four letters from Robert Wright were read together;¹ the first is in the Tanner MSS., vol. ix., fol. 337, the other three are here,² and no doubt the first also was once here. Again, Mrs. Gardiner, in the papers relating to Ogle's plot, published from the Tanner MSS., in the Camden Miscellany, vol. viii., mentions that the King's warrants to Devenish and Mosely are missing, both of which are here;³ and these instances are only specimens.

It is even stated by Rawlinson, in the letter herein-after mentioned, that the whole Collection had been deposited in the Bodleian; but this seems to be an error caused by his mistaking the meaning of a letter of Bishop Tanner's brother to Archdeacon Knight. However, the documents left by Dr. Tanner came eventually into the possession of Nalson's grandson, Philip Williams, the younger, successively Fellow, Tutor, and President of St. John's, Cambridge, and Public Orator in the University. They were by him arranged and bound before 1730. Many of the documents were published between that date and 1735, by Peck, in the Desiderata Curiosa, and by Zachary Grey, in his Examination of the Third Volume of Neal's History of the Puritans, and in his Examination of the Fourth Volume of the Same, and they found the Collection in its present form, while on the other hand it contains one or two documents in Williams's handwriting. Dr. Williams married, and took the College living of Barrow, in Suffolk, in 1742, and died there in May 1749, leaving two daughters and one son, Philip, afterwards Fellow of New College, Oxford, Fellow of Winchester College, Rector of Compton, and Prebendary of Winchester. The Collections were offered through Thomas Carte to Richard Rawlinson,¹ but he apparently saw only the Index.

It is stated in Nichols's *Literary Anecdotes*² that the Collection came into the hands of the Rev. William Cole, of Ely (not his namesake, the antiquary), the son-in-law of Zachary Grey, and afterwards into those of his brother, Charles Nalson Cole, who died in 1804. The subsequent history of the volumes now at Welbeck is unknown, till they were discovered there by Mr. Maxwell Lyte in 1885.

There is a circumstance that throws some doubt on the above relation. After the death of Dr. Williams, of Barrow, his widow married the Rev. John Gordon, and had by him a son, the Rev. George Gordon, Dean of Lincoln from 1810 to his death in August 1845. From his library, four volumes, being XXIV. to XXVI. and XXVIII. of this Collection, were purchased in January 1846 by the British Museum. Hence, it is fairly arguable that the account in Nichols is incorrect, and that the Collection, or some part of it, continued in the possession of the Williams family. I have endeavoured, but without success, to ascertain whether Dean Gordon's library contained any other volumes of the Collection.

The first eight volumes consist of letters, except that occasionally some other document, such as a deposition, occurs as an enclosure.

Vol. I. contains 54 "Royal" Letters, i.e. from Charles I. and II., from the last both before and after his father's death, from the Elector Palatine, and his brothers Rupert and Maurice. Prefixed is the following note by Williams: "There are many " original letters and papers . . . which Bishop Tanner had " from this Collection of Dr. Nalson's, and which are now lodged " in the Bodleian at Oxon by his last will . . . as appears by

“ a letter of his brother and executor J. Tanner to Mr. Archdeacon Knight, dated from Lowestoft, June 6, 1737.” At the end is a copy of the King’s speech at the opening of the Long Parliament.

Vol. II. contains 185 letters from the beginning of 1642, with a few earlier ones, down to March 25th, 1643. At the end is a copy of the printed letter, dated December 7th, 1681, of the Earl of Anglesey to the Duke of Ormonde, in answer to his of November 12th, concerning Lord Castlehaven’s Memoirs.

Vol. III. contains 168 letters, to March 25th, 1645.

Vol. IV., 152 letters, to the end of October 1645.

Vol. V., 119 letters, to the end of March 1646.

Vol. VI., 80 letters, to the end of March 1648.

Vol. VII., 127 letters, to the end of March 1649.

Vol. VIII., 127 letters, to June 1660, and eleven others undated, but of earlier date. These I have succeeded in restoring more or less exactly to their proper places in the Calendar.

Vol. IX. contains 301 documents, all but two or three relating to the Uxbridge and Newport treaties. All, with one or two exceptions, have already been printed, in Lords’ Journals, Rushworth, and elsewhere.

Vol. X. consists of 96 letters from Foreign Princes and States, chiefly interesting for the autographs, which include one of Louis XIV., several of Philip IV., of Christina of Sweden, of Kings Christian and Frederic of Denmark, of the Prince de Condé (including a holograph letter), and others.

Vol. XI. consists of transcripts of 356 letters, of which the first 82 are by Philip Williams, the elder, and the rest by Nalson. The originals of 164, as has been mentioned, are in the Tanner Collection, and those of 119 are in this. The originals of one or two of the remaining class must be in the Carte MSS. The originals of the remainder I have been unable to trace. The last class, with six exceptions, two of which are copies from Carte papers, occurs between No. 208 and No. 295, or between April 1 and July 1, 1643, so I conjecture that by some accident the bundle containing the originals for these months was lost or destroyed. In the Appendix a Calendar is given of those whose originals are neither in the Tanner nor in this Collection. This volume also contains in the hand of the elder Williams copies of 36 “Messages for Peace from the King,” which are all printed in Rushworth or Lords' Journals. The transcripts by Williams were made in Nalson's lifetime, as appears by his notes upon them.

Vol. XII. contains 273 documents. Fourteen of these are Nalson's transcripts of other documents in the Collection, the rest are mostly letters ranging from 1641 to January 1660, many of them undated.

The next four volumes contain various documents, such as speeches, depositions, orders of one or both Houses, informations, accounts, &c., &c.

Vol. XIII. extends from December 1640 (with two earlier documents) to March 1643, and contains 210 documents.

Vol. XIV. extends to March 1646, and contains 234 documents.

Vol. XV. extends to March 1649, and contains 187 documents. About 20 at the end are undated, and range over the period from 1641 to 1649. Most of these also I have been able to date approximately.

Vol. XVI. contains 170 documents, going down to 1660.

Vols. XVII. and XVIII. contain documents relating to Foreign Affairs, the first 177, relating to France, Spain, and Portugal, the other 180, relating to Sweden, Denmark, the United Provinces, and other States.

Vols. XIX. and XX. consist respectively of 213 and 211 documents relating to Scotch affairs.

Vol. XXI. contains 137 documents relating to Ireland. This volume is in very bad condition, having at some time or other been exposed to wet, and consequently nearly all the documents in it have suffered, some being almost wholly illegible.

Vol. XXII. contains 167 documents, mostly petitions or the like. It also contains a large number of documents relating to the Assembly of Divines, including the original drafts of the Directory and of the Larger and Shorter Catechisms, being the identical papers presented to the House of Commons.

These twenty-two volumes, with the Index volume, constitute the whole of the Nalson Collection at Welbeck. The other eight were :—

Vol. XXIII., consisting of "Miscellaneous MSS. and Printed Proclamations 40-63, in very large folio," of which there were 107. Of these, Nos. 36 and 37 are printed in Peck, and Commons' Journals, to which a reference is given on p. 407 of the Calendar. No. 62, "Proposals concerning the farming of the Post Office," is printed in Grey, iv., Appendix, No. 58, and Nos. 104 and 105 are copies of the Declarations of December 24, 1651, and January 31, 1651-2, calendared pp. 621, 626.

Vols. XXIV., XXV., and XXVI., being the original Journal of the Committee for Plundered Ministers, from January 1644-5 to January 1645-6, January 1645-6 to September 1646, and May to October 1647 respectively. Two other volumes of the Proceedings of this Committee are in the Public Record Office. See Calendar of the Proceedings of the Committee for the Advance of Money, Preface, vol. i., p. xvii.

Vol. XXVII., containing "Articles, Depositions, and Ejectments against Malignant Ministers of the County of Lincoln from July 29 to August 19, 1644."

Vols. XXVIII., XXIX., and XXX., containing the like for Cambridgeshire, Suffolk, and Essex, and the last also some particulars concerning the Reformation of the University of Cambridge.

Of these, XXIV., XXV., XXVI., and XXVIII., are in the British Museum, MSS. Additional, Nos. 15,669-72.

The numbers of the documents in each volume are taken from the Index, in which, however, there are omissions in nearly every volume; for instance, Wallis's five letters calendared at p. 683 are omitted. There are many mistakes too in the arrangement, and most of the volumes contain documents which either from date or subject should be placed elsewhere. Occasionally two copies of the same document occur in different volumes, sometimes with different titles. I take this opportunity of correcting a mistake noticed after the Calendar had gone to press. The document calendared at p. 35 as Additional Declaration against the King's going to Ireland, is a copy of that calendared last on p. 33, which is a draft in Pym's hand.

At the end of the Index volume are bound up extracts from the Earl of Manchester's Memoirs which Nelson states, in his printed work, that he procured through Lord Guildford. They are copied in the same hand as a large number of documents in the Collection, e.g. Lenthall's letters, the King to the Lord Mayor, "Advertisements what may content in London," Prince Rupert's letter, the Earl of Northumberland's letter, Considerations, the Earl of Crawford's letter, Owen O'Neale's and Monck's letters, the Extracts from Dr. Stewart's letters, the Relation of the battle of Worcester, A. B.'s paper, and the address of J. S., pp. 28, 29, 218, 275, 302, 444, 493, 513, 534, &c., 616, 679, 697. I conjecture that the writer was a scribe employed by Nalson. The parts of the Memoirs not printed by Nalson, and not contained in a certain MSS. in the British Museum, are given at the end of the Appendix to this volume.

The interest of the following Calendar is much diminished by the circumstance that many of the most important documents have already been printed. For instance, of the eight original letters of Cromwell, those announcing the taking of Bristol,¹ Winchester,² and Pembroke,³ the victory of Dunbar,⁴ and the surrender of Edinburgh Castle,⁵ and that about Colonel Lilburne,⁶ have been printed; while the other two,⁷ concerning Major Gill and the commissions granted to Fleetwood and Whalley, are unimportant. The intercession of the Dutch Ambassadors for the King⁸ has also been printed. Still, from the originals it has occasionally been possible to correct mistakes in the printed copies, and sometimes a change worth noting has been made from the first draft. For instance, in Cromwell's letter about Bristol, "who have wrestled with God for a blessing" is a correction for "waited on God," which the scribe originally wrote. Many of interest, however, remain, and the letters give a lively impression of the state of different parts of the country during the varying phases of the war. During the first years of the struggle, perhaps the most striking fact is the wretched condition of many of the Parliament's troops from want of pay and supplies, and their tendency to mutiny. It has sometimes been very difficult to ascertain whether a document has already appeared in print or not, and no doubt some have been over-looked. For instance, since the Calendar went to press, I have noticed that Sir John Meldrum's letter⁹ is in the King's Pamphlets, E. 71, No. 22, and that abstracts of the letter of Sergeant-Major Rosse,¹⁰ and of the examinations about the Earl of Antrim¹¹ are in the Appendix to the Fifth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission. I shall now proceed to notice the most remarkable documents, taking first those that fall into groups, and then the miscellaneous ones in chronological order.

From December 1640 to the following summer are numerous papers that passed between the English and Scotch Commissioners, most of which have already been printed. One in June¹ refers to the alleged plots of Montrose and Traquair. The Royalist victories in the summer of 1643 obliged the Parliament to apply to Scotland for aid, and a copy of the address of the English Commissioners to the Convention of Estates will be found on p. 127. The Commissioners, in October,² describe their arrangements for garrisoning Berwick, and the state of affairs in Scotland. In January and February 1644 are notices of the entry into England of the Scotch army,³ but before they were six months in England begins the series of complaints⁴ that lasted for the next two years and a half. The Scotch complained with justice that they did not receive the pay and supplies that had been promised them. A specimen of their complaints will be found in Lord Leven's letter of July 8, 1645⁵—"We are called to march, march, that a plentiful country is before us, where nothing will be wanting, but we find nothing by the way but solitude—pleasant places indeed for grass and trees, but no other refreshment." On the other hand the Scotch, deprived of their stipulated allowances, took the law into their own hands. All through the autumn and winter, and till mid-summer 1646, occur numerous documents complaining of the oppressive assessments they levied, and the plunderings and other outrages they committed in Yorkshire and elsewhere.⁶ On the other hand, the Parliament found it difficult to induce them to move or undertake any enterprise. In May and June 1645, the Scotch generals considered,⁷ that before the siege of any town was undertaken it was necessary to dissipate the field forces of the enemy, and though at the end of July they began the siege of Hereford, they raised it after a month, on the King's approach, their army having been weakened by detaching the cavalry under Leslie in pursuit of the King, which cavalry on the news of Kilsyth had marched into Scotland. Full accounts of the progress and raising of the siege will be found on pp. 244, 248, 263, 271. Before the commencement of the siege, communications with the King had been entered into by some of the Scotch officers.¹ Meanwhile Montrose had been carrying all before him in Scotland, and raising the hopes of the sanguine Digby,² while the Committee of the Estates write on September 10 in despairing language,³ they are "sensible of the many testimonies of the brotherly affection received from the Parliament, but of none more than this, that now they send up their prayers for pardon and pity to us." Philiphaugh soon put an end to their fears, though for some time the English Royalists hoped that the defeat had been not decisive, and that Montrose would be in England at the head of an army before winter.⁴ The strained relations between the army and the country where it was quartered culminated with the resolution of the Committee of the Northern Association of June 4, 1646,⁵ that it be recommended to Sir Thomas Fairfax to go down into the northern parts with such forces as shall be thought fit for the preservation thereof. In the autumn of this year, and also in the spring of 1648, there are a good many papers, most of them already printed, concerning the negotiations between the Parliament and the Scotch. In January 1651, are two interesting letters from General Lambert from Edinburgh,⁶ describing affairs in Scotland. In the following August are several documents about the Scotch invasion and the attempted rising in Lancashire under Lord Derby⁷ (followed in October by the holograph petition of the latter four days before his execution⁸) and two characteristic replies to the summonses addressed to Dundee and St. Andrews by General Monck. Throughout the early part of 1652, numerous documents, mostly formal, concerning the intended union with England, occur, being the commissions to the deputies for the several counties and boroughs, and their assents to (and in a few instances their dissents from) the union, sometimes with statements of their desires.

With the outbreak of the Irish Rebellion in October 1641 begins a series of notices of Ireland. The earlier ones are mostly given in Nalson's printed work. The Mayor of Pembroke writes on February 17, 1641-2,¹ that hundreds of poor English had landed, and that he apprehends that the Rebels may attack the town. On the next page are letters from Chester showing the bad condition of the reinforcements for Ireland. On April 23,² the Lords Justices and Council write dissuading the King from coming, on account of the want of fit accommodation for him, and describing how wide-spread the Rebellion, and how weak the army was, and "the high and inexpressible extremities" the soldiers are reduced to for want of pay and supplies. A year later, comes a long account of the miserable condition of the Protestants and English there, who were "as it were breathing out their last breath."³ Another letter, the following August, describing the arrest of Sir W. Parsons, Sir Adam Loftus, and others, tells the same tale—"All things here is very ill in the "highest degree, no expectation but ruin, and that all English and "Protestants will be quite rooted out of this Kingdom."⁴ The conclusion of the Cessation brought no relief to the Protestants, who apprehended they were in more danger than at the beginning of the Rebellion.⁵ The Scotch army in Ulster were, if possible, in worse plight, and three regiments had actually returned to Scotland in March 1644,⁶ but the remainder were induced to stay at the earnest desire of the Scotch Privy Council. Their condition the next spring was even worse,⁷ reduced, as they sometimes had been, to live on a pound of unground oats per man a day. The second Cessation concluded between Ormonde and the Irish through Digby's influence in 1646 brought no relief to the English Protestants,⁸ and Lord Broghill about the same time urges the necessity of reinforcing the Parliament's forces in Munster with at least 5,000 foot and 1,500 horse, and of sending over money, victuals, and ammunition.⁹

To secure, if possible, the co-operation of the Confederate Catholic forces, Lord Clanrickard entered into an engagement on November 19th, 1646,¹⁰ undertaking that all laws restraining the exercise of their religion should be revoked, that they should be left in interim possession of the churches and other ecclesiastical possessions they held, that a Catholic Lieutenant-General should be appointed, and that a number of the Confederate Catholic army should be admitted into each of the garrisons held for the King. A month later, the Commissioners of the Parliament in a long report¹ describe the condition of Ireland, stating the portions held by the different parties, and the forces at the command of each, with suggestions for holding the places still in the Parliament's power, and for reducing the rest of the country. In March 1647, Mr. Baron reported to the Assembly at Kilkenny the result of his negotiations in France with Cardinal Mazarine and the Queen of England. This paper, which is a transcript by Nalson, probably from an original now in the Carte Collection, is unfortunately illegible in several places. The Queen, it appears, was at first inclined to comply with the requests of the Supreme Council, but was afterwards diverted by Protestant influence. On the departure of Lord Lisle, the Lord Lieutenant appointed by the Parliament, in April 1647, a dispute about the command of the army in Munster arose between Lord Inchiquin, and Colonel Sidney and Sir Hardress Waller, of which Inchiquin and Sir Adam Loftus and Sir John Temple give their versions.² In June, Sir Charles Coote and Lord Inchiquin give long accounts of raids into Connaught³ and Waterford⁴ respectively. The Parliamentary Commissioners in Dublin, in July, describe a high mutiny of part of their troops, in which some were killed and several hurt on both sides.⁵ Part of the letter is printed in Haliday's Scandinavian Kingdom of Dublin (p. 165 note), from a copy in the Carte Collection.

Several letters in August, from Major-General Sterling, declare the intention of his army to stand for Presbyterial Government against the Independents in England.⁶ Lord Inchiquin, in January 1648, describes the wretched condition of his army—"It will be difficult for me to resolve whether the " want of food or clothing be likely to prove most destructive to " us . . . our men die daily of their mere want."⁷ This was followed by his declaring against the Parliament in April,⁸ and the Scotch in June promised to support him,⁹ and to conclude no peace without including him. In July, he invited Colonel Jones to join with him, who at first, with the privity of the Parliament, negotiated with him in order to sound his designs and, if possible recall him to his obedience to the Parliament.¹ Jones, in August, describes his operations in Meath and his intention to fall into the enemy's quarters to destroy their corn as far as possible,² which up to October³ he had not been able to do thoroughly. The only trace of Cromwell in Ireland are the Articles for the Surrender of Kilkenny⁴ already printed, but there are letters to him in June 1650,⁵ concerning Lord Broghill's operations in Kerry, who mentions that one of Lord Inchiquin's ships had been taken by some resolute troopers, who swam after her with their swords in their mouths and hands. A long Remonstrance by Lord Ormonde to the Popish Clergy at Jamestown in August charges them with being a main cause of the ruin of the nation, by not using their influence with the people to obey his orders, their disobedience arising indeed from the forgeries invented, the calumnies spread against the Government, and the incitements of the people to rebellion by very many of the clergy.⁶ There are letters from the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cashel and Lord Clanrickard in January and March⁷ about Irish affairs, and the last mentions the arrival of the Abbot of St. Catherine,⁸ the envoy of the Duke of Lorraine, whose mission and the Duke's expected aid are referred to in the letters of Colonel Plunket and Lord Taaffe.⁹

A year later, in January 1652, the Parliament still found it necessary to keep above 350 garrisons in Ireland, and their Commissioners¹⁰ declare that about 100 more would be required, while in Ireland itself or under orders for it were above 30,000 men. The enemy on the other hand had nearly as many, and had great advantages from knowing the ways through the bogs, and having constant intelligence of the motions of the Parliament's forces, who seldom or never had intelligence of theirs from the natives, who were possessed with an opinion that the Parliament intended them no terms of mercy. They suggest that the fighting men be allowed to transport themselves to the service of any prince in amity with the Commonwealth, that something be held out to the peaceable inhabitants for the security of their lives and encouragement to follow husbandry, that the Adventurers should at once begin to plant, and besides the well-known plan of the Pale behind the Barrow and Boyne, they propose another behind the Suir and More or Blackwater. They enclose a paper with a scheme of allotments to the Adventurers. In May, these particulars and others were again presented to the Council of State,¹ but the proposals for allotments and planting were disapproved of by the Adventurers for various reasons.² Meanwhile resistance was dying down, and the Irish forces were surrendering. Specimens of Articles will be found on pp. 645 and 648, and the Articles of Surrender in January 1653 of a fort on the remote Isle of Arran, one of the last that held out, on p. 668.

There is a copy of the Commission of the Earl of Essex³ with the blanks in that printed in the Desiderata Curiosa filled up, and the Commission of Sir Thomas Fairfax,⁴ being that delivered up by Rushworth when he resigned in June 1650. Of letters from the Earl of Essex there are none of any consequence, except that of June 28, 1643,⁵ to Lenthall, desiring that the army may be paid and some one placed at the head of it in whom they may put confidence. Three from Sir William Waller, in November 1643,⁶ describe his repulse from Basing House, and the mutinous spirit of his army, their utter want of necessaries (which is corroborated by a letter on the same page from Mr. Cawley) and a skirmish in Farnham Park.

There are several letters from the Commissioners with the Army. At the beginning of the campaign of 1644,⁷ they describe a muster, noticing particularly the prevalence of disease among the horses. Just before the second battle of Newbury, they desire supplies for the army. After the taking of Bridgwater, they were much embarrassed "in labouring both to satisfy the expectation of the soldier and continue the townsman⁸ in his propriety." Six weeks later, they send a narrative of the taking of Bristol,⁹ where they find the disposal of the captured property still more troublesome, there being conflicting claims on it, and as to some on the part of the Admiralty and East India Company. They have also difficulty in providing the gratuity promised the army, in lieu of plunder, though "the general had “ neglected no expedient to sweeten the soldier with money,” and for the supply of the garrison, and complain, that “ for want of able ministers, Directories and orders for the use of the same, the people here sit in darkness, and the collegiate men still chant out the Common Prayer Book to the wonted height.”¹

A letter of Fairfax of July 6, 1645, is mostly about the Clubmen.² Specimens of resolutions passed by those of Berkshire will be found on pp. 246, 247, and there are several isolated notices of those in the West, and one each of those in Wales³ and Sussex.⁴

All through the Calendar from the summer of 1642 to the spring of 1646, there are a great number of letters from Sir William Brereton and others, describing the state of affairs, and the operations in Cheshire and the adjacent counties. Of these the most remarkable are those just before the outbreak of the war,⁵ showing how the rival parties endeavoured to raise forces; that of October 21, 1643,⁶ describing the occupation of Wem, the siege of Nantwich and their relief of it, the enemy's attack on Wem and their relief of it, and their final defeat of the Royalists at Lee-Bridge; those of November 11 and 15,⁷ describing the forcing of the passage of the Dee, and the taking of Wrexham and Hawarden Castle; and others at the end of that month,⁸ describing how their hopes of taking Chester had been disconcerted by the landing of forces from Ireland. From the beginning of October 1645 onwards, till the following February, are numerous accounts of the siege of Chester, including one of the rout of a relieving force at Denbigh,⁹ and of a sally of the besieged.¹⁰ The last castle to surrender in North Wales was Holt, which held out till January 1647.¹¹

There are a good many papers about South Wales and the neighbouring counties in 1645 and 1646. The first from Captain Batten, in August, describes the defeat of the Royalists in Pembrokeshire, and the taking of Haverford Castle by his seamen,¹² and there is a whole series from General Laugharne describing his operations.¹³ Colonel Morgan announces the taking of Chepstow and Hereford,¹ in which subsequent documents show that he was assisted by the treachery of some of the officers of the garrison.² There are also several documents relating to the Royalist rising at Cardiff in February 1646, and its suppression.³

From Devonshire, at the end of 1642 and beginning of 1643,⁴ are letters concerning the first invasion of that county by the Royalists, the forcing of a passage into Cornwall by the Parliamentarians and their subsequent repulse, the invasion of Devon by the Royalists and their repulse at Modbury, and several concerning the proposed treaty, with copies of the documents that passed between the Commissioners of Cornwall and Devon, and its final rupture. From time to time come letters from the besieged garrison of Plymouth, ending with the raising of the siege in January 1646.⁵

In 1642 and 1643, there are several letters from Hull, the earliest from the Committee there about the Magazine⁶ and preparations for defence, and later on, from Sir John Hotham to the Parliament. Sir Christopher Wray and Captain Hotham, in November, describe their movements in North Yorkshire, and enclose intercepted letters from Sir M. Langdale and others⁷ and Sir Hugh Cholmely, in January, narrates his skirmish with Colonel Slingsby at Gisbrough.⁸ All through the winter and spring, there is a long series of curious letters from Captain Hotham to the Earl of Newcastle, beginning with one dated December 27.⁹ Of several of these only transcripts exist, which will be found in the Appendix, where also is Mr. Stockdale's letter describing the defeat of the Fairfaxes at Aldwalton Moor. In September and October, are letters concerning the siege of Hull, and the raising of it.¹⁰ The only trace of the campaign of Marston Moor is a letter of Prince Rupert to Goring from Liverpool, on his march northward.¹¹ In August 1645, are several letters describing the mutinous condition of the Yorkshire troops, and the writers' apprehensions of the consequences if the King should penetrate into the county.

There are a considerable number of documents relating to religious matters, most of which have already been printed. The first is a long series of Queries by some of the London Clergy, about the legality and meaning of the "Et Cetera" oath.¹ There are a great many papers presented to the House of Commons by the Assembly of Divines, including the original drafts of the Directory,² and of the Services for the Solemnization of Marriage, for the Burial of the Dead,³ and the Visitation of the Sick,⁴ which last is remarkable as showing the clauses struck out by the House of Commons, and also the drafts of the Directory for Admonition, Excommunication, and Absolution,⁵ and of the Larger⁶ and the Shorter Catechisms.⁷ All through 1645 and 1646, papers occur concerning the controversies, which arose between the Assembly and the House about the power of Excommunication and about Church Government. Most of them have been printed, but occasionally the originals are of interest. For instance, it appears that in Questions concerning Church Government,⁸ the Question "Whether any particular Church Government be jure divino, and what that Government is?" was an afterthought. By far the most remarkable is a Declaration of the House touching their proceedings in the matter of Church Government, which vindicates the right of the civil power to regulate, by appeal or otherwise, the power of Excommunication.⁹ This was read a second time November 8, 1645, but laid aside in consequence of the opposition of the Presbyterians, and, as far as I know, it has not been printed or noticed by any historian. There is also a draft Declaration of Parliament, dated August 7, 1649,¹⁰ which, as originally drawn, established a Presbyterian form of government, and public worship according to the Directory, but this clause was struck out. There are occasional notices of proceedings against Papists and Recusants, and also against the Clergy who were opposed to the Parliament. The King's party sometimes resorted to reprisals, for instance, the King's warrant to Goring in February 1645¹¹ orders him to arrest Ministers who teach or countenance rebellion, who are not to be exchanged except for any of his Chaplains or other Orthodox Divines detained by the Rebels.

There are a very large number of examinations, depositions, informations, and the like throughout the Calendar. Of these the most remarkable are the examinations of Pollard, Ashburnham, Wilmot, and Goring, in June 1641, concerning the Army Plot,¹ the examinations of Michael Hudson and others in June 1646,² and the examinations of Thomas Coke in April 1651.³ The second group relates to the King's journey to the Scots, the negotiations between him and them through the French Agent, the objects of Hudson's intended journey to France, &c. Peck printed in the Desiderata Curiosa as much of them as he or his copyist could read, observing "here follows a great deal more, but in so ill a hand I cannot read it." This description is quite correct, the papers being the statements of the witnesses taken down very hurriedly with numerous abbreviations, which for some words become a sort of shorthand. However, most of them have now been deciphered, though occasional words could not be made out at all, and others not with certainty. The third group reported on May 28, 1651, contains a full disclosure of the Royalist plots in England. The Council of State reports,⁴ "Many have been apprehended, of whom he hath informed, and many more yet to be apprehended. His general scheme of the transactions of the King of Scots hath much confirmed what we had before, and our intelligence hath confirmed what he hath said to be truth. We also know how to put together many things, which before were but hinted and brokenly suggested." Many passages in the Nicholas Correspondence⁵ show how the Royalists were thereby disconcerted, particularly p. 237, while Nicholas speaks of Coke's retaking as "as sad and fatal misfortune to the K. as hath befallen him since his father's murder, and like to prove the ruin of most of his Majesty's best affected subjects." Thomazon, the collector of what are now the King's Pamphlets, was one of those arrested in consequence, and the Duke of Richmond was examined before the Council on Coke's information.⁶

Of miscellaneous letters and papers, the first that deserves notice is a copy of a letter in Spanish from the Earl of Strafford to some Spaniard of high rank, dated July 18, 1640, concerning the proposed loan of 400,000 crowns in exchange for Irish levies. From the endorsement, this letter apparently came into Pym's hands. A letter in French, of May 6-16, 1641, gives a foreigner's view of affairs just before Strafford's execution, and describes the marriage of the Princess Royal.¹ The original of the well-known letter of R. E. to Mr. Anderton² is in the Collection.

The Hampshire Committee on August 12 describe the progress of the siege of Portsmouth,³ and send news of its surrender on September 7,⁴ while Captain Swanley⁵ on August 28 narrates the securing of the Isle of Wight and the neighbouring castles for the Parliament. On the other hand the members for Oxford City early in September⁶ describe the intended fortifications, the first occupation of the city by the Cavaliers, and what followed, and on November 21⁷ is a detailed account of the seizure of Chichester for the King. Lord Edward Herbert, afterwards Earl of Glamorgan and Marquis of Worcester, on September 18⁸ desires to be excused coming to London, as he fears affronts of stopping and searching by the way, though his coming is "most necessary for the accomplishing of that great and beneficial waterwork in attaining the perfection whereof hath cost me many thousands, not so much out of covetousness to gain unto myself as to serve my country." Early in the following year, some one at Oxford⁹ sends a sketch of affairs from a Cavalier's point of view to a friend at Cambridge, while "Philo-Brittanicus" (said to be Sir Thomas Peyton by Nalson, who had means of knowing, his wife being a Peyton) describes a slight put on the Lords by the Commons.¹⁰ On March 2, 1643, the King writes a holograph letter to the Queen,¹¹ partly in cipher, which has been printed, but with mistakes now corrected in the Calendar. The cipher is the same as in the other letters between the King and Queen, printed in the Appendices to the First and Sixth Reports of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, pp. 4, 5, and p. 217. From this cipher I have been able to interpret a few words in the letter of January 25,¹² undeciphered in the printed copies. Another intercepted letter, from a Royalist agent at Rotterdam, in May¹³ is chiefly concerned with the despatch of arms, &c. to England, and Strickland's proceedings in Holland. It is partly in cipher, which I have deciphered, except some symbols for proper names. Another long letter, partly in cipher, from a Cavalier at Oxford, dated July 5,¹ to some one at the siege of Exeter, is written in high spirits at the Royalist successes, and shows that the current belief among the Royalists was that Essex, Manchester, and others had offered to come over with the whole army. The signature has unfortunately perished, the paper being exceedingly worn and frail. At the end of October and November, are several letters about the incursions of the Royalists into Bedfordshire and Northamptonshire, and the occupation of Newport Pagnell,² and also three from Sir John Byron to the Governor of Aylesbury,³ making proposals for its surrender to the King. A long intercepted letter, partly in cipher, from Sir E. Nicholas to Lord Goring, dated November 1,⁴ relates to affairs in Holland, the arrangements for procuring arms and ammunition thence, and the Queen's influence. It should have been noticed in the Calendar that the draft Ordinance on p. 168 for the appointment of the first Committee of both Kingdoms was identical with that appointing the second Committee, printed in Gardiner's Constitutional Documents, p. 192.⁵ In December 1644, Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper sends Essex an account of the first relief of Taunton,⁶ and expresses his astonishment at its defence, the "works being for the most part but pales and hedges and no line about the town." The paper of March 29, 1645,⁷ headed "Advertisements of what may content in London," is curious as being apparently that to which the notes by Sir E. Nicholas, printed in State Papers, Domestic, p. 373, were a reply. On May 19, Digby and Prince Rupert order Goring to advance to a junction with the King's army at Harborough.⁸ "For God's sake," says Digby, "use diligence and come as strong as you can. In my conscience it will be the last blow in the whole business." On June 15, the Prince of Wales writes to Goring about the insolencies and injuries alleged against the officers and soldiers who pretend to be under his command.⁹ Digby, in his letters of July 4¹ and August 12,² to Goring, describes the King's plans and prospects—in the second in his usual sanguine manner. Unfortunately much of each letter is in a cipher, which I have been unable to decipher. On July 6,³ Fairfax writes to Lenthall concerning the raising of the siege of Taunton and the enemy's movements, and a month later Rushworth sends him an account of the siege of Sherborne.⁴ All through August, September, and October, numerous letters from different parts of the country occur, describing the rapid movements of the King and the troops that pursued him down to his arrival at Newark in October. A copy of a letter from Digby to Jermyn,⁵ being one of those taken at Sherburne, is the last from him before he started on his expedition to Scotland, the final ruin of which near the Solway is described in letters⁶ from Sir John Browne and General Vandruske. Two letters from Massie, of August 30 and September 12,⁷ desire assistance on account of Goring's apprehended advance, and there are several from Culpeper to Goring in September and October about affairs in Devon, and suggesting that he should endeavour to break through with the horse to Montrose or the King. These schemes were soon rendered impracticable by the renewed advance of Fairfax, who took Tiverton on October 19,⁸ and on January 6⁹ Culpeper writes a long letter to Ashburnham apprehending that they will be forced into Cornwall. The Royalist army had become thoroughly disorganised, Culpeper observing that the horse would be very good if they would fight more and plunder less. That the Parliament, however, were still by no means out of danger is shown by the three remarkable letters of Robert Wright, their agent in Paris, dated December 12 and 28, and January 9,¹⁰ describing the negotiations in Paris between the Royalists and the Scots carried on by the Queen, and William Murray, and the plans for sending a foreign army to the West under Goring and Sir William Davenant. All these schemes failed, and the King was reduced to fly to the Scots, at whose instance he ordered Lord Bellasis to surrender Newark.¹¹ Through the summer notices occur of the surrender of various places that still held out, and in September Sir George Ayscue sends an account of the surrender of Scilly.¹

In the summer and autumn of 1648, there are a great many letters relating to the Royalist risings in different parts of the country.² There are several about the rising under Langdale from Lambert, the rising near Stamford, the insurrections in Kent, and especially about the siege of Colchester, of which the most remarkable is one to Lenthall,³ unsigned, but probably from a secretary of Fairfax, describing the beginning of the siege. The rout of the Duke of Buckingham's party at St. Neots is described in a despatch from Colonel Scrope.⁴ There are also several documents relating to the revolt of the fleet, including a long narrative by Peter Pett⁵ of what took place at Chatham. The victorious army on November 16th presented their Remonstrance demanding justice against the King and others. The original signed by Rushworth in the name of the army is in this Collection.⁶

After 1648, down to the expulsion of the Parliament in April 1653, the character of the documents changes, there being fewer relating to domestic matters, and many more concerning foreign affairs. The earlier part of the Calendar indeed contains some of the latter class, such as Strickland's letters narrating his proceedings in the United Provinces, the report of the skirmish in May 1647⁷ between the English and Swedish fleets near the Isle of Wight, because the latter would not strike their flag, and the letter of the Queen of Sweden of April 18, 1646,⁸ and the papers presented to Parliament in May 1647,⁹ concerning the affairs of the Elector Palatine and the negotiations at Münster. There is a very interesting series of letters from Blake and some of his officers, relating to his operations against Prince Rupert's fleet on the coasts of Portugal and Spain, the earliest being a letter to the King of Portugal, March 10, 1650.¹⁰ The most important are two from Blake and Popham and from Blake himself of August 15,¹¹ and October 14,¹² describing skirmishes with Prince Rupert's ships, and the capture of the Brazil fleet, and from Captain Saltonstall,¹³ of November 22, describing the Most of the references explain themselves. "Gilbert" is "A Contemporary History of Ireland, entitled, An Aphorismical Discovery of Treasonable Faction," edited by Mr. J. T. Gilbert. The second volume of this Calendar, which will contain abstracts of many papers of the middle of the seventeenth century belonging to the Duke of Portland, but not forming part of the Nalson Collection, together with an index to both volumes, is in preparation.

It remains to express my acknowledgments to Mr. Heitland, Fellow of St. John's, Cambridge, for procuring for me from the Rev. John E. B. Mayor, Fellow of the same College, information about Dr. Williams, to the Rev. E. The EARL OF STRAFFORD to —.

1640, July 18. London.—Your Excellency is not deceived in your confidence in my greatest diligence to form a league between the two Crowns which may be very firm and durable, not only for ourselves, while we live, but also for posterity, nor in believing, as far as regards my own inclinations, that I esteem in the highest degree the magnanimity and prudence of the Spanish nation, and desire its prosperity next to that of my own country. The King, my master, is no less satisfied with my zeal in his service, since I well know the strong inclination his Majesty discovers to me in private to form a firm friendship with that Crown, not only from his consideration of the advantage thereby to his subjects, but from his singular affection towards the person of his Catholic Majesty. To speak plainly to your Excellency, it appears to me that to effect everything we need nothing but mutual confidence; this established by the diligence of the Ministers of the two kings, I do not see what can prevent these two monarchs who are so powerful, from being able to divide the world between them, without the one touching the interests of the other. Yet it is right to confess that this confidence has been for some years so weakened on this side, that words, without real and reciprocal acts moving acquis passibus, will not be sufficient to restore it. Let us apply ourselves then in every way to undertake this great work which is to turn out so happy and glorious for both kings and their peoples, and not allow the occasion to escape, which presents itself to us. We on our part will hasten the Irish levies desired by his Catholic Majesty, and that your Excellency—in case they cannot previously be drawn from Flanders, as is desired—may hasten the loan of 400,000 crowns, according to what has been proposed to the Ambassadors of his Catholic Majesty at this Court, and that this loan may be quickened (se abrevie) so much the more because unless it arrives here with all speed, it will lose entirely its grace and occasion, and also because these good offices being done to each other by the two kings, there will be more confidence, which will facilitate henceforward with equal suavity and efficacy those greater matters, of which your Excellency made mention in the postscript of your letter to Don Alonso de Cardenas. Your Excellency, in the same postscript, which Don Alonso showed me, is pleased to command me to serve his Catholic Majesty, particularly in the business of the levies, having accepted the employment, and I honour myself therein, assuring your Excellency that as far as the working at this shall concern me I will serve that Crown with all truth and promptitude as far as there shall be opportunity in both kingdoms, so as to confirm the confidence he has of my affections.

Finally having discovered to your Excellency my mind and inclination with all plainness and truth, you will be able thereby to know not only my anxieties that the treaty now proposed may repay the labour bestowed on it, but also the singular esteem I have for the person and natural gifts of your Excellency, and at the same time the real respect and veneration which I shall always pay to the correspondence and amity which he deigns to offer me with such generosity, so that I shall consider myself a most happy man, when your Excellency shall deign to command me in whatever my power suffices to serve him. God keep the most Excellent person of your Excellency many and happy years. In Spanish. Copy. Endorsed probably in Mr. Pym's hand "Spanish letter transcribed] (?) Sr Th. Mallever (Mauleverer)." [N. XII., 1.]

Sundry of the CLERGY OF LONDON DIOCESE and parts adjacent.

[1640, latter part of.]—Queries "touching the oath enjoined by the late Synod, Canon 6, wherein they unfeignedly desire satisfaction that so they may the more heartily and willingly take the said oath, when authority shall tender it unto them or by the Canon it is appointed.

1. Whether the Oath be legal so as to bind all the Clergy to it?" The ground thereof being that since 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19 the Convocation is bound from decreeing ought repugnant to the laws or customs of the realm, and we find not that the oath is warranted by the laws and we believe it to be contrary to the customs.

2. "What is meant by the doctrine and discipline or government of the Church of England?" The ground thereof being that we know not whether by doctrine the Synod mean the 39 Articles of 1562, or extend it to other doctrine, as his Majesty by his commission to the Convocation to make Canons seems to enlarge it, and if so, we cannot safely swear to it till it be declared, and then no further than it may be declared to be taken out of Scripture.

"Secondly we know not whether by discipline they mean only the Canons and Constitutions of the Church or other things besides. And if the Canons then what Canons, some of the ancient ones being grown out of use, and others altered, neither of which as we conceive ought to be, if the discipline be necessary to salvation. And the Canons being so many and at so many different times so far asunder made how can any man swear to that part unless it be . . . set forth what those be we swear unto, and if the discipline contain ought else, why is it not clearly expressed.

3. Whether it is meant that doctrine and discipline contain all things necessary to salvation conjunctim or divisim? If conjunctim we doubt of it, because we take all things necessary to salvation to be contained in the Articles of 1562 . . . and not at all in the discipline as distinct from the doctrine” and admitting the discipline to be lawful we cannot concede it to be necessary to salvation, and he that swears it to be in both as we are required by the conjunction “and” and believes it to be in only one doth coast upon perjury. But if divisim, it must be understood of the doctrine only or discipline only or of both in different respects, in the last sense we think it needful that these respects be explained to take away ambiguity, but if it be meant of one only that ought to be expressed and the other cashiered as superfluous. And in any case to enjoin all to swear that the Discipline is necessary to salvation implies a condemnation of all Protestant Churches abroad as wanting what is necessary to salvation and the essential being of a true church. And it seems a large and wide step, since we have not heard of any such position in these terms so much as by bare assertion maintained, and the newness of the expression makes us afraid, especially considering the ancient Constitution under Archbishop Arundel against novel expressions about the faith.

4. “What is meant by the Clause ‘nor will I ever give my consent to alter the Government of this Church by Archbishops, Bishops &c.’”

If this be sworn absolutely, so as no revocation or alteration herein that can be made by his Majesty in or out of Parliament at any time shall make us consent to such an alteration, we think it contrary to the oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, and a binding ourselves to resist authority, if any alteration be made on any occasion whatsoever. If it be intended only to bind us till such an alteration why is it so peremptorily expressed? Albeit the Casuists tell us that such an oath—even though unlimited—binds not if the Government be altered by authority, yet they dare not acquit him of rashness, who swears without such a limitation.

5. “Whether there be the same reason of not consenting to alteration of Government by Deans [and] Archdeacons as there is of not consent to alter that of Bishops”? Because they were never esteemed as if they were of the same institution and foundation as Bishops, and therefore may more easily be changed, so that we see not cause to rivet them into an unalterable order by the sacred bond of an oath. The Canon of 1603 only requires acknowledgement that the Government is not repugnant to the word of God, which Canon is part of the Discipline established—as we conceive—and so the acknowledgement may suffice without an oath.

6. “What is meant by the ‘&c.’”? Because we never heard that an &c. was ever put into an oath either among Christians or Pagans, and believe it to be contrary to the perspicuity which ought to be in all oaths for either it implies some unnamed persons or things and then it is an ambiguous Clause, or else it signifies nothing at all, and then it is too vain and trivial for men to pawn their souls upon, and cannot be less than taking God’s name in vain, which Clergymen of all others should most shun.

7. “What is meant by ‘As it stands now so established, and as by right it ought so to stand’”? It is not clear whether the “now” be meant of any new establishment by the Synod, or the Establishment by Parliament in 1 and 8 Eliz.: “If the latter then it appears not what is that right by which it ought to stand, but only that which it hath by such establishment, viz. by the positive laws of the kingdom, which is a mere tautology . . . for who doubts but that which is established by the laws of the land ought to stand by the law of the land, and whether that will content the Reverend Bishops we much doubt, and if any other right be intended which we verily believe" then it ought to be expressed, especially in a point so much questioned and disputed of in the world and not positively decided in this Synod nor in any other in this Church of England.

8. "Whether our consent and suffrages are so involved in the new Canons and the Oath before mentioned that we cannot refuse" it? Because we conceive that the late Convocation ended with the Parliament May 5th, And that by the Dissolution our votes and suffrages returned back to us again, especially considering that the first Commission granted to the Convocation on April 5th was of force only during the Parliament, and the Proctors had no new election by the rest of the Clergy, and no new writ enabling them to continue the Assembly, but only a new Commission to go on with the Canons not concluded before the Dissolution, and that this second Commission is dated May 12th, so that they were without a Commission to make one perfect Canon formerly begun by the space of a whole week after the dissolution.

"These queries we find cause to insist the more on, because of the last clause of the oath viz. That we must swear all this according to the plain and common sense and understanding of the same words and that heartily willingly and truly upon the faith of a Christian, which we cannot do till the former doubts be cleared, and the oath made so plain that we cannot mistake the meaning which is so ambiguous now, that we cannot understand" it "so as to adventure an oath upon it, in case it should appear to be lawful and meet—which we much doubt—to multiply oaths or decisions de fide beyond great and unavoidable necessity." J. DU PERRON to the MARQUIS DE FONTENEY, Conseiller d'Etat et Maréchal des camps et armées de Sa Majesté. A Paris.

1641, May [6-]16. London.—“C'est pour vous assurer que M. de Montereuil se tiendra extrêmement honoré de vous suyvre en quelque condition qu'il vous plaise le mettre. Il est vray que l'employ qu'il à eu tant sous Monsieur de Bellieure que depuis son retour en qualité d'agent du Roy et mesme à Rome auprès du Cardinal Anthoine duquel il à esté domestique deux ou trois ans et duquel il à receu des marques d'agrement de ses services par un canonicat de l'église cathedrale de Toul qu'il lui à donné, luy eust fait desirer de vous cette grace si non d'estre le premier au moins d'estre en quelque sorte d'égalité avec l'autre. Toutefois il remit le tout à vostre volonté à laquelle il propose de se conformer entierement. Il est tres bien faiet et de cors et d'esprit il scait les belles lettres et est d'une conversation également agreable divertissante et complaisante. J'espère, Monsieur, que vous en serez servy autant bien que vous le pouvez souhaiter, cependant je vous remercie tres humble de ce qu'il vous à pleu agreer la supplication que je vous avois faiete pour luy. Il est vray que la Chambre basse à signifie à la haute qu'elle trouvoit le viceroiy d'Irlande criminel de Leze Majesté et desiroit que la justice en fust faite. Le Roy alla Samedy dernier au parlement pour dire que dans tout le proces la il ne trouvoit aucun chef qui le peust convaincre du trahison et partant qu'il ne pouvoit consentir à sa mort, qu'il n'empeschoit pas neanmoins qu'on ne Peloyast de la cour et des affaires s'il se trouvoit chargé de quelque autre faute. Lundy dernier le peuple s'assembla à Westmonster au nombre de six ou sept mille hommes demandans que les Mylors leurs fissent justice du député. Cela continua encor le Mardy, et la chambre la leur ayant promise, ils se retirent. Le mesme Mardy, les deux chambres firent un serment ou protestation que tout le monde jura, excepté les Catholiques. Je vous en envoie la copie en Francois. On dit qu'il aproche fort du convenant d'Ecosse. Aujourdhuy se devoit donner le jugement du viceroy d'Irlande, mais je pense que cela est differé cependant sur un soubeon que le parlement à eu qu'on vouloit faire evader le dit viceroy de la Tour de Londre ou il est prisonnier, et qu'un nommé Sir Jean Suclin levoit des gens pour y faire entrée, et que le Roy faisoit aprocher son armée qui est à York. Le parlement à prié le Roy de commander que tous les officiers de la cour eussent à ne point sortir d'Angleterre et de la Cour sans permission particulier. Cela fait croire qui le parlement vent rechercher les autheurs de ce conseil, M^r Germain et M^r de Percy frerr de Madame de Carlille estans particulièrement regardés en cela. Ils se sont retirez d'icy hier apres midi de resolution de passer la mer et eviter le malheur dont on les menacoit. Dimanche dernier se firent les noces de la Princesse Marie avec le jeune Prince d'Oranges, mais sans ceremonie ny danses ny autres rejouyssances. La Reyne Mere y assista et disna de mesme table, avec le Roy, la Reyne, les deux fils et deux filles de leurs Majestez et le Prince d'Orange. Elle ne se trouva pas au souper. On mist les jeune mariez à coucher ensemble une heure durant, mais de presence des Majestez des ambassadeurs et autres. Les ambassadeurs Hollandois furent traitez à part. Le Prince Palatin se trouva à la noce, mais non pas au disner ny souper. M^r Rosseti, agent du Pape s'en va d'icy car sa place (?) n'est plus tenable (?) pour luy ny pour les Catholiques. Je suis de grande peine de n'avoir aucune nouvelle de M^r de Chavigny touchant mon voyage, car les affaires [sont] si troublées icy et menacent de si grands malheurs si Dieu n'y mit le main, que nous ne sommes point * et moy principalement ; je vous supplie de luy en vouloir dire un mot. Je croy que vous aurez [reçu] les deux dernieres couvertures que je vous ay envoyées par M. du Prim (?)." Scal. [N. XVII., 2.]

I graunt that what I wrote to you in formal termes maye be such, but what you should suppose to be besydes and virtually included in them, which circumstances of tym etc. hindereth to laye down in writing, should induce you to graunt soe just a petition. I am certaine that if we weare boeth debating this matter before the great diffinitors that you would be convinced not to behave your selfe towards me according the prudent and charitable spirit of superiour maiors. Would you have me, if I have any of many motives for which change-ment is lawfull amongst us, or if I have many of them together, to sett them in writting to you, temporibus et rebus sic stantibus ut sunt. I am assured, that if I be as deare to you as the rest of your subjects that you cannot be but wholye persuaded in your selfe that it is not for lyghtnesse nor without good ground I doe soe insist, yea that I have as good raisons hereunto as any other these many years. That being, why should I be worse dealed with all then they? Am I onely a bastard amongst your children? You maye saye, I am necessarie heer, lett others stay as long as I and they will be more. You saye in yours to me you feare a ruine of our bodye; you may feare it well, when some are oppressed and wronged. I am not so burnyng to goe see friends or country, God be praised, and I pray His Divine Majestye that if I be not fit for them parts that I never goe, but I am resolved absolutly not to stay heer, inasmuch as a reasonable will of a subject maye have place. Extract. [N. XIII., 10.]

The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

1641, May 26.—Paper representing the prejudice caused by so many cessations and so much delay, and especially that since the charge of their army exceeded the 25,000*l.* a month a great part of the 300,000*l.* of the Brotherly Assistance would be thereby exhausted, and therefore desiring that the business might taken so into consideration as to bring about a speedy and happy conclusion. Copy. [N. XIX., 45.]

The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

1641, May 28.—The affection of Parliament in granting the Brotherly Assistance we can never forget; the difficulties to find money in a short time for both armies cannot be unknown to us, and we are so sensible of the diligence used that we are ready to accept most willingly what we conceive in any competency may serve for our present necessity and for the disbanding of our army, being no less confident of the payment of the residue in due time than if it were presently delivered; but when we look on the long time since our Commanders were first taken on, the great charges of the maintenance of the army, besides what is allowed for the relief of the Northern Counties, the hopes we have given of full pay before disbanding and the expectation of ship masters for rigging and their ships who are come from Scotland on our promise to receive money and in the meantime must cease from all trade, we are constrained to insist and still to desire that the Parliament may be pleased to extend themselves beyond the proportion of 80,000*l.*, which cannot be sufficient for so many burdens. We therefore earnestly entreat that this may be considered and the trade of our merchants set up by the payment of so much money in Scotland or the Eastern Counties as may make up their stocks, which they have exhausted by advancing money within the kingdom and by furnishing commodities abroad, and that the security of the remanent be so agreed on as may move the better acceptance of the proportion to be presently delivered. Copy. [N. XIX., 46.]

Examination of CHARLES ALLAINE.

1641, May 31.—Stating that he had been five years abroad mostly at Cambrai and Douai, that he had been a twelvemonth in England, that when in Derbyshire he received this letter from Mr. Roberts, and that the word Master in it means either Cardinal Richelieu or the Bishop of Chalcedon, that he was told both by Mr. Thorold and Roberts that Mr. Thorold was to go with him to the Bishop of Chalcedon. [N. XIII., 11.]

Examination of CLIFTON THOROLD.

Same date.—Stating that he had served in Flanders, and was going to France to serve there, that he met Allen by chance, and does not know Roberts. [N. XIII., 12.]

The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

[1641, June 2.]—As in our last paper we gave our reasons for considering that the 120,000*l.* of arrears, and the 80,000*l.* on account of the Brotherly Assistance would be insufficient for paying the debts of the counties and disbanding the army, so we have represented to the committee at Newcastle the great charge of the kingdom, the difficulty of finding such great sums and the diligence of the Parliament in providing them, endeavouring thereby to move them if possible to accept the Parliament's offer, from whom we shortly expect an answer that we hope may be satisfactory. And therefore we desire that in the mean time the treaty may proceed for answering our demands of the 1st April, and also that the Parliament would let us know the security and terms of payment of the remanent of the Brotherly Assistance, and what part thereof may be offered beyond seas and upon what conditions. Copy. [N. Examination of Captain POLLARD.

1641, June 14.--“(1.) That hee did not know of what Commissary Wilmott saide to him as hee went upp to the Committee Chamber.

(2.) Being examined if there were not discourses amongst them, that is Mr. Peirey, Mr. Wilmott, Ashburnham, Pollard and others, that they were disobliged from the parliament and not from the king, Hee answered there was noe discourse att all concerning that pointe and that hee did not thinke himselfe disobliged from the parliament, nor heard them say soe much. Generall wordes there were but not the particular. This there was: That the parliament had dealt severely with us, and that the Scotch had better pay then wee had.

(3.) Being asked; whether they did not resolve upon this, to make some expression of serveing the king in all things that were honorable for him, and themselves, and agreeable to the fundamentall lawes of the Realme, and that soe farr they would live and dye with him.

To this hee answered; If Mr. Peirey were here hee would not deny but that hee was the first proposer of it. Hee did propose it unto us and never left speaking to undertake it. Hee proposed it first out of some paper of his, which I thought to bee ridiculous more of folly then of daunger. Hee spake of it here in the Hall. Wee mett first in his chamber att Whitehall about the begining of Lent; I cannot say punctually to the tyme but as I guesse it was thereabouts. Mr. Peirey made the first proposicion and desired us to come thither and sent his man unto mee. These proposicions were to mentaine the Bishoppes, the King's Revenue, and keepe a foote the Irish Army till the Scottes were disbanded. Hee said it was good for the king and kingdome. Wee did dislike it, all of us. Mr. Wilmott, nor Mr. Ashburnham never approved of it, nor ever did anything from that tyme to this. Wee were diverse tymes with Mr. Peirey since that tyme, not about it, yet talked of it sometimes, but of noe reall designe. I will not tell a lye to save my life.

(4.) Being asked if this were not agreed amongst them hee answered; Noe, I never agreed unto it; neither was there ever any agreement.

(5.) And being asked whether Mr. Peirey by their consent was not to tell the king from them thus much, answered: Noe, I never did consent nor anybody else to my knowledge.

(6.) And being asked: whether the matter was to bee soe ordered as that the king might apprehend this as a great service, hee answered, Hee never heard him say soe much, nor gave him such direccions nor ever loved to heare more of it.

(7.) Being asked: whether they were not most confident to engage the whole Army thus farre but further they would not undertake because they would not infringe the lawe, and whether every one of them consented unto it; upon which Mr. Peirey drew a noate in writeinge of the heads.

Hee answered such discourses there might bee, but not any agreement, but the particular discourses hee doth not remember. That hee undertooke nothing att all, it was an impossibilitie.

(8.) Being asked whether Mr. Peirey haveing their sence, drew not the heads up in a paper, hee answered It was drawn before wee mett: true hee read a paper. I told you the heads of them. There may bee more, but I remember not. It was about Episcopacie, the Irish Army, and I believe the king's Revenew. What was meant by the king's Revenew I understand not, unless how to improve it. I heard the paper read but I gave noe consent. I did dislike it att that tyme when it was read. I did not meane to intermedle att all with it. I did not wish him to informe the king of it. I doe not remember hee did say to us hee would informe the king.

(9.) Being asked: whether they did not by oathe promise one to another to bee constant and secrett, hee answered

I did take the oathe att Mr. Peireyes chamber—the first tyme—before ever the proposicions were made. It was of secrecie onlic that wee should say nothing of what passed there att that tyme, and I confesse till of late I thought that oath did binde mee. Before such tymes as hee propounded any proposicion the inducementes were merely a secrecie.

Mr. Peirey, Mr. Wilmott, and Mr. Ashburnham, Mr. O'Neale, and my selfe did all of us take the oathe, and Sir Jo. Barkley. There was noe body else tooke it, but those six and noe more persons were then in the chamber. This oath was taken before the proposicion and Mr. Peirey can produce the oath, and you will finde it to bee an oath of secrecy only. Wee tooke it upon the Bible as all other oathes are taken. Mr. Peirey did read the oath out of the paper. It was only an oath of secrecie—That wee should keep secrett the debate that then passed. The doore was locked, noe servantes were there. I know not well whether the doore was locked or noe. Hee had noe commaund to give the oath that wee knew of.

(10.) Being asked; what particulars were propounded to Mr. Peirey whereby hee might bee enabled to serve them, he answered I know nothinge of it, nor any thing from any of these gentlemen.

(11.) Being asked whether in their particular discourses they did not fall upon a petition to the king and parliament for monyes there being soe much delay, hee answered there was a petition which Mr. Peirey had prepared, which hee did dislike and resolved of noe such thing. Never sawe it before nor since. One parte of the petition was for pay of monyes directed to this house as I remember, or rather to the parliament in generall, pressing our wants. The manner of draweing it wee did not like, nor of the way of it. It was to show noe discontent but a petition for our pay. The petition was brought with the proposicion att the same tyme or—as I remember—a day or two after.

(12.) Being asked; whether the preserveing of the Bishoppes' function and their votes in parliament and not disbanding the Irish Army, and the endeavour to settle the king's Revenue to the proportion it was formerlie, was proposed, and that if the king required their assistance as farre as they could they would contribute unto it, without breaking of the lawe of the kingdome, hee answered;

There was nothing agreed upon. Such things were discoursed upon, and diverse other discourses that I remember not, but noe agreement by any one of these gentlemen nor any thing intended. I thinke there were noe more proposicions in that paper. I wish they were all scene, the originall I meane. I thinke the oath was in the same paper where the proposicions were, or in severall papers.

(13.) Being asked whether they did acte and concurre in this as well as Mr. Peirey hee answered, I know noe acting; there was such a thing proposed, but noe pursuance of it by us. I see these proposicions written in a paper, but see noe body write them; wee mett a hundred tymes since that tyme but never mett about this but that night when Collonell Goringe was there wee were desired to bee there att that tyme, where Mr. Jermaine was alsoe.

(14.) Whether, this being all imparted to the king by Mr. Peirey from them, hee perceived the kinge had bene treated withall concerninge somethinge of our Army but inclined to a way more high and sharpe not agreeing with our way, not haveinge limittes either of honour or law. Hee answered, hee never heard of any of these proposicions.

(15.) This clause being read unto him : that Mr. Peirey saide the king would leave all other proposicions and take theires and that hee desired Col. Goring and Mr. Jermaine might bee admitted amongst them and that the king did presse it soe much as that att last it was consented unto, hee answered they were to come to us that night to meete and speake of some business I knew not then of. Hee sent to mee to bee there to meete Mr. Goring and Mr. Jermaine. Hee tould mee wee should know to what end wee came there, when wee were there. They spake to us there of a way of bringing of the Army. It was somewhat concerneing the Army about makeing a Generall of the Army. There was proposed—whether by Goring or noe I know not—to bring upp the Army hither, because if there should bee a disagreement between the king and the people that then the Army might bee here. I meane suche people as should oppose the king in just thinges. I heard of noe proposicions of putting any condicion upon the parliament. I doe not remember any particulars att all. Those three heades formerlie mentioned were not then propounded. Noe other things were then in proposicion. There were wilde extravagant discourses. But being asked what hee meant by nameing a Generall hee answered;

Some of us desired my Lord of Essex, some my Lord of Holland, others my Lord of Newcastle. I was one of those that named my Lord of Essex. Mr. Peirey named my Lord of Holland. Mr. Jermaine named my Lord of Newcastle. Saith there was no proposicion of arneing the Frenche or papistes; nor of the clergie findeinge a thousand horse; nor of my Lord of Newcastle's meeting with a thousand horse, nor no proposicion was made how to mainteine the Army. I never consented to the bringing of them upp nor ever disputed more of it.

They were there an houre att a supper, but not a minuittes tyme was spent in disputing of this. There were waiters at the table, but wee did not speake of this before them. Both before and after supper wee discoursed. Wee were takeing of tobacco. It was in a great roome: some were att the window, some elsewhere. Colonell Goring had the oath given him on the table nere the fire. Mr. Jermaine was sworne att the same tyme when Goring was sworne, but I cannot tell how long tyme it was betweene the first meetinge and the second, but not many dayes. There was an unwillingness of these two men's coming in. Wee were affraide to know their proposicions, and that was the truth of it. I did not care who knew oures. I had heard their proposicions were of ill nature. Mr. Peirey tould me of them; the particulars I doe not know. Wee disliked them because Sir John Suckling and they were in it. Wee heard they were ill proposicions and wee did not desire to medle with them. Wee did not very well like the men, for Suckling, Jermaine and Davenant were in it. I remember noe more persones in it. They were not made acquainted with oures. Wee did not debate our proposicions together. They did speake of their proposicion.

I have named unto you what Mr. Peirey propounded. I tould you they talked about makeing a Generall of the Army. Wee tooke the oathe before hee made any proposicion unto us. I doe not know of any one of us that did signifie to Collonell Goringe that wee had taken the oath. I did see him take the oath; the other gentlemen were in the roome; how nere I doe not know. Mr. Peirey did dislike the bringing upp of the Army. Mr. Wilmott and Mr. Ashburnham disliked it because inconvenience might happen to the king and subject by it. Wee did not agree to bring upp the Armie by our owne pro- posicion. Collonell Goring saide nothing to it. I never agreed to the proposition to maintaine Bishoppes etc., nor ever undertooke it. Mr. Jermaine and Mr. Goring propound[ed] them; Mr. Goring spoke about a Generall. I cannot remember what hee did propose. I doe not remember the particulars of the discourse. I doe not remember wee directed Mr. Peircie to propound any thing to Mr. Goring.

(16.) This being reade unto him; viz. 'where I remember Col. Goring made answer hee was soe engaged with Suckling that hee could doe nothing without him. But wee would not medle with him att all, but Col. Goring and Mr. Jermaine desired hee might bee brought in yet in the end, soe wee would not oppose Sucklynes imployment in the Army, they would passe it by. Then wee tooke upp the way proposed, the which tooke a great debate, and theirs, I will say, differed from oures in violence and height.'

To this hee answered, There was debate in laying aside Suckling but I doe not remember of speaking of this to the king. Wee went away altogether; one, one way and another, another way.

(17.) This being read unto him: viz. 'They left mee and Jermaine and to speake to the king and the king tould him those wayes were vain and foolish and would thinke of them noe more. Then Goring asked how the cheife commaundes would bee disposed of' . . ." [N. XIII., 14.]

Examination of Commissary WILMOT.

[1641, June 14.]—"Being asked what hee said to Captain Pollarde, as hee went into the Committee Chamber, hee answered that hee beleeved it would much prejudice them to answeare suddenlie to such a business, but Mr. Pollard made noe answeare to mee againe. Being asked what discourse hee had with Mr. Peirey and the rest of being disobliged from the parliament, Hee answered; Mr. Peircie did putt many things into his head, that the parliament had disobliged us, and that it concerned us in honour to regard the advantage of our Army, declareing what I spoke in this House uppon occasion of an order made to lessen the sommes intended for the king's Army. But I doe not remember any discourses of being disobliged from the parliament. I should doe him and my selfe wrong if I should say any thing positivelic in this. I doe not remember it.

Being asked what agreement there was betweene him and Mr. Peirey etc., concerning the undertakeinge of any particular proposition as to maintaine the votes of Bishoppes; to keepe afoote the Irish Army; and to keepe upp the king's Revenue, To this hee answered, Mr. Peirey did propound this to mee and to others before, any consent I must deny. 'The first tyme hee spoke of this was in this House tenn or twelve dayes after hee did speake to mee to come to his chamber. I cannot possiblie remember what hee said then. I beleeve many thinges of this nature you propound hee spoke then.

They were propounded in Mr. Peireyes chamber. I never mett them anywhere else. I beleeve there was some thinge written but whether this or somewhat else I cannot remember.

There were present there, Col. Ashburnham, Pollard, Barklett, O'Neale and my self and I remember noe body else but Mr. Peirey. All that wee spake of was concerninge the Army. They were many tymes spoken of butt never resolved uppon. An oath of secrete was propounded but I did not conceive I might discover it, though now I thinke I may. I confesse I did take the oath and it was Mr. Peircie's jealousy to presse us to an oath because wee should not reveale it.

I tooke it in a solemne manner yet remember not I laid my hand upon the Bible. It was an oath not to reveale what was there said, and that noe oath under heaven should absolve mee. It was in our covenant one with another that nothing should bee done by us to the prejudice of the parliament or saucinge of Straforde. There was never any agreement made amongst ourselves. I was never with them since. Wee were there debateinge these things. Some liked it, others disliked it. I heard Jermaine did take the oath. There were many things propounded there not justifiable for if they were wee should have consented unto them. I remember nothing but to serve the king and moderate things of our owne, which I hope will be justifiable.

I know not whose proposicions they were; either Peircy, Jermaine or Goringe, but who made them I know not. I tooke notice of those proposicions I had a mynde to. I rememb[er] in generall wee never consented to any thing but what was according to the fundamentall lawes and of my duty to this House. Mr. Peircy made the three proposicions. I made none myselfe. I never heard anything of bringing upp the Army hither, nor of making a Generall. My conceite was if any partie in England should oppresse the king then wee would serve the king in any just thing. I never heard any proposicions of the French. I suppose it doth runne in another streame.

I never heard of the bringing the Prince to the Army till within this fourteen dayes or three weekes I meeting the Prince asked him if hee would goe to the Army who answered with all his heart if his father would give him leave. I did it to see of what condition he was made. I remember my Lord Newcastle that night Mr. Goring was there was named to bee Generall by some of us, not by those among us but by Goringe. I propounded Essex, and others, Holland, and next day I sent und acquainted Essex with the proposicion for him to bee Generall. I heard nothing of Newcastle with a thousand horse nor of the clergie's thousand horse." [N. XIII., 15.]

Examination of Colonel ASHBURNHAM.

[1641, June 14.]—"Being asked what discourse he had with the rest concerning his being disoblged from the parliament and of engagement, etc.;

Hee answered; The occasion of such discourse—if there were any—was about the tyme when the Tenn thousand pound was kept backe from the king's Army. But when Peircy spoke to any of us, it was in a slight manner, and hee did it without any acceptance of it. I never engaged my selfe to those particulars. Mr. Peircy had proposicions of his owne but I hope my hearinge of that discourse shall not make mee guiltie. Hee had severall proposicions. When I was in his chamber: hee sent for mee. I did not knowe what hee would have proposed. Hee laide as a ground: If absolute disorders and confusion happend there must bee some way or other. I tould him thus: Mr. Peircy, what would you have by this? I know not if you have anything to say to me. If it bee dishonourable or dishonest or stopping the free Justice by parliament or to doe service to the Earle of Straford, I will not medle in it.

Hee said to mee that hee conceived it was safest for this kingdome the Irish Army were continuel till the Scoche Army were disbanded.

Hee spoke of the Kings Revnue, and saide those were just things; hee never spoke of any particular; nor was it inquired after, and except that in the paper I never heard of.

I was att Mr. Peireyes chamber when Mr. Jermaine and Collonell Goringe came there. That was the first tyme I ever spake with them together, before nor since.

There was some extravagant discourses. I sate by the fire and did not come into the discourse, but we had something of wilde discourse. But I remember they were of that wildness that they were discontented from. I shall not att all connive att the business; much of wildness passed, for it was excepted against by Wilmott, Pollard, and mysele. Wee never would nor ever came to condiscend unto it. It did concerne discourses about the Army. I would answeare with all my heart if I knew the particulars. I never heard that propounded of bringing upp the Army hither.

They spoke of the dispoicion of the Army, and about commaunders. My Lord of Essex was spoken of, for the king and the countrie, and if my Lord of Northumberland did not goe, to perswade my Lord of Essex. I never hearde a worde concerning the Frenche, nor of the horse of the clergie. I can remember nothing of it but a dispoicion of the Army. If confusion did happen, the king to goe one way, and the people another way. They saide if all sortes of law or (blank) stopped upp; that wee should breake in a confusion and the king one way and the people another. I cannot say those were the words; they were in generall. I never heard a worde of bringing the Prince to the Army. Mr. Peirey did endeavour to perswade us if any thing might bee undertaken by us to give informacion unto the king. I never heard from the king. Hee did say hee would speake unto the king. I never saide anything that hee should propound our condicions. They spake of the petition the Army should send. I never see any other writing but that of the proposicions." [N. XIII., 16.]

Examination of Colonel GORING.

[1641, June 16.]—"Sir John Suckling was the first that ever made such overtures unto mee. It was att my lodyeing, about three monethes since. I desire nothing else then to give a perfect relacion. Suckling tould mee as I remember that there were purposes of putting the Army in a posture of serveing the king. That the Army should marche towards London. But I must aske your pardon if I doe not remember directlie the words or the place, but either there they were spoken or in some other place or in both places. Hee tould mee that my Lord Newcastle was to bee Generall and that I might be Leint.-Generall if I would accept of it. I tould him I would heare uppon what terme it was and then I would give my resolucion. This was the discourse hee had with mee. Hee did not discusse the particulars unto mee then, nor att any other tyme, but heard of it afterwards in the consultacion. It was but the day before wee entered into the consultacion. It was uppon a Sunday morning. I said nothing, for I did conceive it had beene by publike autoritie, by the king's commaund; though I never heard that my Lord Newcastle should bee Generall, or that I should bee leiuetenant-generall. I did not question but that it had beene by autoritie, and going to court, I found that there was noe such purpose for either of us. Being asked if the Army was to bee putt in a posture to interpose in the proceedings in parliament, Hee answered: This was spoken in generall termes by him. I hearkened to the proposicions of the misery of the souldiers, being the first stepp to this. And a petition to the parliament was to bee drawne for pay to the Army. I spoke something concerneing this to my Lord Dungarven within few dayes after or the very same day. That there were some officers of the Army that had a greater zeale to the proceedings of this House then they did thinke of. I heard that there was an intencion some officers should meete about something concerning the Army. I came to Mr. Peireyes chamber with Mr. Jermaine, where they lett us know there was some thing ought to bee discussed of, and that it was necessary wee should take an oathe of seecrecie before wee did it. Mr. Peirey tooled us soe. This was in Mr. Peireies chamber. Himselſe, Wilmott, Pollard, Jermaine, Ashburnham, Bartlett, O'Neale and my selfe being present. Hee saide it was necessary to take an oathe and that their consultations were for the good of the Realme. Noe proposicion offered till the oath was taken. The oath was not directlie nor indirectlie ever to acknowledge any parte of the consultacion, nor ever to thinke our selves disolved from the oath by any other oath that should bee imposed uppon us hereafter. It was tendered out of a paper, and Jermaine and I laid our hands uppon the Booke when wee tooke the oath. The rest said they had taken it before. There was nothing said but that they might heare. They were about the table. I remember not their particular posture. Those three proposicions were made unto us by Peirey.

I doe not remember any particular discourse of the Irish Army, nor any generall discourse att all of it. It may fall out that where seven or eight are together that some two of them may speake one to another and others not heare it. It was a generall proposicion of Mr. Peireies, read in a paper. I shall as nere as I can reporte the discourse but lett mee not bee tyed to words, least I prejudice others. I found when I was there, it was a very tickle and nice pointe to interpose in any the proceedings in parliament. Either I or Jermaine asked whether the Army was to marche towards London or noe, for I did not know it. They answered all that it was not their intencion the Armies should marche towards London till the Declaration had bene first sent upp to the parliament. I, thinking it to bee a nice pointe to interpose in the proceedings in parliament, I asked them what inconveniences would ensue of the Acte, and to informe my selfe and rebuke their intencions, I propounded some difficulties in it to allay the business that was the sense of our discourse there, Whether to marche towards London. I asked what amunition they had: whether they were sure of the amunition in the Tower, and how they intended to goe through with it if there should bee such disorders as might bee expected. They answered they had noe purpose to goe to London for the surprize of them att London would bee to conquerr the kingdome; which was said by Wilmott. Ashburnham, and generally those that were there wee found averse unto it. All that I propounded there, it was not possible to effect it for I propounded impossibilities to divert them from their thoughts, to give over all other consultations. Wee did not proceed to particulars.

There was another meetinge, and the matter being impious on the one side and foolish in the other, therefore my thoughts were to rej[e]ct it; and howsever I tooke my selfe out of it. I did declare my selfe att that very tyme I was there, both in speaking in contempt of the counceill which I am confident will bee justified by them. This was att the first meetinge. I cannot distinguish betweene the one tyme and the other. I doe thinke the second meetinge was the next night after the first or next night after that. And the reason why I propounded as I told you was to divert them from a thing unjust, by propounding a thing impossible, for that was my purpose from the beginning. For how could the Army that lodged in severall quarters in such a distance one from another, an Army unpaid and discontented. It was impossible to gather them so suddainlie into a body to surprize them before they came upp. I did speake as a souldier, not accordinge to the sence of my owne hearte, and particularly Wilmott and Ashburnham said theire purpose was not to marche towards London, for if that were done and that they had the Tower in theire hands, that were to conquer the kingdome, whereas theire intent was to present their greivances: that if they had the Tower they would not make use of it, for the kingdome was conquered if they had noe amunicion. This was the debate of the second meeting. My declaration was to have nothing to doe in the business. I told them there was noe intencion of violence, and upon this, we broke of that meetinge, being in the same roome and same company.

Being asked some further questions hee answered There was discourse of marcheing towards London by himselfe and Mr. Jermaine, but whether his purpose was to informe himselfe I know not. They saide before they gathered themselves together they would send upp the Declaration. Every person that was there was absolutelic against the bring upp of the Armies. I did not heare any body consent to any thing for there was nothing concluded. Suckling was not att all with us. Hee only brought mee a generall nocion of the business.

Being asked upon the reading of Mr. Peircyes letter entered in a paper severall other questions distinctly, hee made this answeare: I desire I may hee excused to name such persons as I have confarred withall, being not safe for mee to speake it, but confident noe member of this house, nor of the lords' house spoke to mee in this business—except as aforesaid—.

I must rely upon the testimony of some noble Lords and others, how I protested against all this in the birth of it: My Lord Newporte, my Lords Say, Mandevile, and Bedford. I told it them altogether. The tyme was the next day after wee broke of from the last conference. I appeale likewise to my Lord Dungarven what I saide unto him. I doe not remember any consultaicion att all of Portsmouth. Being asked further questions upon Mr. Peircies letter beinge read unto him, answered,

I and Jermaine did make objeccions against their designes, and whereas Mr. Peircy saith that I did sollicite for the commaund of the Army by letters and sending downe persons none can produce that ever I sent or writt for any commaund: nay, I can make it appeare I did write to the contrary when they of the Army did make it a proposicion unto mee.

I did not know att all when Captaine Chudley went downe to the Army, nor doe not know what hee went downe withall for I was out of towne then, and a captaine brought a letter signed with severall officers of the Army to shewe their willingness to accept of mee to bee their lieutenant-generall. I never see Chudleigh's face but that tyme. This letter came to mee att Portsmouth three weeks after Suckling told me of that.

Being asked if Jermaine propounded the bringeing upp of the Armie and what reasons hee offered for the same, answered,

As I remember it was Jermaine that did propound it but I remember noe groundes nor reasons. Hee seemed to resist their mocion, they propounded their proposicions and wee came to heare what they said. There was a discourse of a Generall. Some named Essex; some Holland. Jermaine and I propounded Newcastle. Jermaine and I came together there. I mett with Jermaine in the Queene's drawing chamber. I doe not remember any discourse betweene us from thence, but to harken to their propositions. Hee spoke to mee the day before, and then afterward said, It must not bee till next night, and wished mee to meeete him att the Queene's drawing chamber, and I mett with him either after the first meetinge or second in the litle gallery in the Q[ueen's] chamber. Mr. Jermaine tould mee The reasons you dislike these propositions is not but that you are as ready for any wilde mad thing as any other, but you dislike the persons in it. Afterwardes hee mett mee in St. James' Park, and tould mee there would bee noe more meetinge.

Being asked concerninge the Tower and of their coming upp, answered,

That the whole kingdome would bee upp in armes against them, and they would bee accounted as enemies and rebels. There was no such thing voted of the Tower. They said they had amunicion. I said if they seized upon the Tower, it had beene to conquer the kingdome. It was by the way of question, whether they had the Tower in their hands. I and Mr. Jermaine did aske them whether they had the Tower in their hands showing in tyme of confusion they could doe nothing without it.

They said they would send a Declaration first, and would come up if not satisfied.* (See Commons' Journals, ii. 177; and Rushworth, iii. 1. 253, where there is another report, but differing considerably from this.) [N. XIII., 17.] All these examinations are in Rushworth's hand.

1641, June 25.—Deposing that “a little before Easter in Sir Richard Harrison's house he heard Mr. Richard Nevile say much in commendation of the Earl of Strafford, and inveighed much against the citizens of London, and said that they deserved to have the city burned about their ears and . . . that it were easy for six or seven of them to get into a chamber and fire it. He said further that he would bring his troop into Berkshire and plunder them if they would not pay. This he conceives that Mr. Nevile spoke in a light way.”

THE SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

1641, June 25.—The occasion of the narration made by the Scotch Commissioners proceeded from the letters and informations sent from the Committee of the Parliament of Scotland, showing that there have been wicked and false calumnies invented against the Parliament and Earl of Argyle, and some plots contrived by the Earls of Traquair and Montrose with the assistance of Lord Napier, Sir George Sterling of Keir, and Sir Archibald Stewart of Blackhall to make a faction and division in that kingdom, and that there have several passages passed betwixt the Earls of Traquair and Montrose and instructions have been given by them to Colonel Walter Stewart to that effect, which were, that the Earl of Montrose desires the king to come down to Scotland to hold the Parliament in his own royal person, disband the armies and keep all offices and places in state undisposed of till then, to be conferred on the Earl of Montrose and his confederates as they should deserve, and further the instructions were that the Duke of Lennox was desired to combine with their faction and to be accessory to their plot. In the instructions are also some malignant expressions laying imputations against the Marquess of Hamilton, and showing that they have bad intentions and designs towards him. The names in these instructions are set down in a mystic way by letters of the Alphabet and the names of beasts, as the lion, elephant, dromedary &c.

The reason the Scotch Commissioners discovered these passages to the English was to move them to mediate with the king for removal of these incendiaries from the Court, nor do we find anything which proves that the king has been upon the knowledge of this plot, although Colonel Walter Stewart averred that the Earl of Traquair reported to him that he had imparted the Earl of Montrose's designs to the king and received his answer thereon, which appeared clearly to be a calumny forged by Stewart or by Traquair to him for the encouragement of those who were upon that plot. As for delivery of the papers and informations we conceive this to be unfit as they were for our own information and are not to be used or intermeddled with by the Parliament of England, but in so far as they were used for removing the incendiaries from his Majesty's presence and the Court, which his Majesty hath from his own royal justice granted. (See Rushworth, iii. 1. 290.) [N. XIX., 49.]

Memorial from the ELECTOR PALATINE for SIR RICHARD CAVE of that which Mr. Speaker of the Honourable House of Commons is to present to that House.

[1641, July 5.]—"That his Majesty having been pleased to recommend the Queen his mother, himself, his whole family and their very being to their propitious and grave consideration, he esteemeth that his Majesty could not have put his business in any so good a way, as that he and his people should join for so good and just a work as the restitution of the Palatine House.

That he entreateth them to believe that as he hath hitherto deferred to press the consideration of his business by reason of the weighty affairs of this kingdom which have been and are still in agitation so he should have yet longer foreborne had not necessity pressed him to this importunity.

That he thinketh himself infinitely beholding to their affection and generosity, that notwithstanding the foresaid important affairs of this state they have been pleased so cheerfully and suddenly—as indeed the present difficulty of his affairs require—to take his business into their serious and favourable deliberation.

That he beseecheth them to persevere in their good intentions towards the Queen his mother, himself and his family, so far as the convenience and present posture of the affairs of this state will permit, and beyond those limits his Highness will never press them, supposing and believing that the care of the religion abroad, the peace of afflicted Germany, their own goodness and honour will persuade them to as much as he can desire.

That therefore his Highness concludeth as the king, his uncle did yesterday—when he recommended his Manifest unto them—that by the effects hereof the world shall see how well his Majesty and his people are together, for the continuance whereof his Highness heartily prayeth, as the greatest blessing which can befall the king his gracious uncle and this kingdom.” Signed “Charles.” [N. THE EARL OF HOLLAND, Lord-General, to the LORD VISCOUNT GRANDISON.

[1641, September 3.]—Instructions. 1. You are forthwith to repair to Edinburgh and let his Majesty know that I have received by the Lord Macklyn (Maitland) the desires of the Parliament of that kingdom according to the instructions his Majesty was pleased to sign with them for the disbanding of the English army and removing the garrisons of Berwick and Carlisle.

2. You are to declare the present state of this army, whereof the horse troops are totally disbanded, and orders given for the disbanding of four regiments of foot by the 11th instant, and four more—the remainder—by the 18th, and that I have delivered to Lord Macklyn a memorial thereof.

3. You are to represent to his Majesty that the 8th article of the late treaty imports no more than that the garrisons of Berwick and Carlisle on the disbanding of the Scotch army now in England and of all such forces as are in Scotland be likewise presently removed so as there ought to be a precedent act on the Scotch part before they can require the performance of this article on the part of England. The same concerning the fortifications.

4. In conformity to his Majesty's pleasure I have written to the Parliament for money for the payment and discharge of the said garrisons and for ships to remove the ordnance and munition there. I must receive some positive answer and directions how to proceed before I can appoint any certain day for that work, but I have begun by giving orders to the Governors to prepare their accounts and all other requisites for their retiring.

5. You are to represent that the general expectation of this whole kingdom is, that for the better establishing of peace and the removal of all jealousies his Majesty will be pleased to take order that the army in Scotland according to the example of this may be forthwith and totally disbanded, and the fortifications reduced to the condition they were in before the late troubles. JOHN SLEIGH, Mayor, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1641, December 27. Berwick.—Acknowledging his letter and thanking him on behalf of the town for the care shown them by the House. We signified to Sir Thomas Widdrington, one of our members, that there were divers Papists living here for some years, and others resorting hither, and a common rumour of more, and the town, being now unable to resist any strong violence, we desired some order either for the expulsion of those already here, or at least to restrain others from coming, whereunto we were the more occasioned concerning some fears which might ensue in those dangerous times, wherein we are left a naked and indefensible people without arms, for having petitioned his Majesty for some arms and powder when he was in Scotland, he did not grant them, holding it—as I understand—a breach of the treaties between the two kingdoms. Since then I and the others appointed by the ordinance of Parliament searched all the Papist houses here for arms and ammunition yet found none of great offence. Have not had time since receipt of your letter to execute the orders of the House, but will do so as speedily as I can, according to the commission sent. Further there are divers persons have lived here divers years, who have repaired to church themselves and their wives and divers of their children and servants recusants, whom with all Papists here I shall charge to be gone or else take the oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance as I am commanded.

1641[-2], February 17. Pembroke.—I have sent you here enclosed the examination of William Lurtine master and owner of a ship of Liverpool, which confirms the former report of aid to be sent the Rebels in Ireland by the French, the Lord prevent them. Since my last letter sent you the 18th of January last there have hundreds of poor English landed in Milford stript by the rebels, who do increase daily. If aid be sent to the Rebels it is very likely some of them may be driven or willingly will come into the river of Milford, where 500 or 1,000 armed men, as I conceive, may possess themselves of the whole country, and fortify Pembroke town with the Castle and other strong places in the said county which will not so lightly be regained. "I desire you to move the House, that order may be taken that the Trained Bands and all other persons fit to bear arms in the town and liberties of Pembroke may be put in a posture of defence in these dangerous times, and that course may be taken with all persons that are rated at arms, and for providing of powder lead and match in this town—for many are backward in the service—. I desire that it may be speedily looked into. For the Trained Bands of the town and county of Pembroke in general for want of exercise are not fit for sudden service, if they should be required. Their arms are much defective, for punishment is not laid on the offenders. I likewise certify your worship that I lately viewed the arms of the store of the whole county of Pembroke kept in the town of Haverford. I assure you that those arms on a sudden service will not arm 200 men—as I conceive—they are so defective. I have divers times desired the Deputy Lieutenants of the County to deliver me arms for 40 or 50 musketeers with powder match and lead out of the same store for the safeguard of the town of Pembroke, if occasion should be offered, but they have refused to deliver me any, notwithstanding this town hath paid for the providing of the said arms powder and lead, neither have they given any order or directions for watch to be kept in this town, either by night or day. We have not in this brave river of Milford one piece of ordinance mounted, the Trained Bands are not exercised, arms provided, or power granted for punishing of persons refractory in this service.” I desire you to acquaint the House with these particulars. DUDLEY WYATT to “my very good Lord” (the EARL OF LEICESTER, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland).

1641[-2], March 5. Westchester.—“The four troops of horse are now all come hither, but neither the arms nor that little sum of money of which we have heard often is arrived, which breeds great distractions here, nor will that sum cure them when arrived. Captain Baker is very much behind. The four troops which are gone hence have left a great debt, the company of firelocks makes strange complaints and besides all this the mayor and county are so perverse that they will not trust the soldiers. Abroad the Justices of the Peace are willing to do what they can, but they wonder that no order or notice or direction was sent unto them, but the Mayor of Chester, though he knows the Captains are exceeding careful to pay, yet he commands the town to trust no soldier beyond one meal, so that it is impossible for the Captain to subsist without pay, having no credit. If money were here I conceive it would be exceeding well to pay here and send all the troops both of horse and dragoons to Liverpool, especially if your Excellency will be pleased to send a letter to the mayor there and gentlemen of the country about to give them notice of the coming of these troops and to desire them to further their quartering and dispose of them, as they shall find it most convenient either in Liverpool or the country. It is absolutely necessary they should embark in that place, the other country which lies near Chester water and Birbitt Wharf being so eaten up that it is almost impossible for one hundred horse to subsist in all Worrall which is the country between those two rivers. This if your Excellency will be pleased to give order to Mr. Battier to do this post, it will render the quartering, providing for and embarking of these troops exceedingly expeditious and convenient." A complaint is likely to be presented at the instigation of one Bevon, a mere common barrettour, who has persuaded the country of Worrall, that they will not be paid at all for the last troops. I have been much troubled to procure quarter for these four troops and to settle the dragoons, which proceeded from want of notice to the gentlemen of the county and want of pay in due time. I hope that this will hereafter be seen to. I apologise for troubling your Excellency with such particulars. "There is nothing extraordinary from Ireland, only a report which comes from many, but I cannot fasten it on any that I will deliver it from as assured; that the Rebels have summoned three score thousand out of every division of the kingdom a proportion to fall upon Dublin as a design which may compass the utmost of their ends. As I am now writing Mr. Parsons says that the money made over by Mr. Loftus in several parcels is not yet heard of here at all, neither doth he know how it can be got, which makes the disturbance the greater, because it was reported money was come down and none is issued to the soldier or country." Captain THOMAS SANDFORD to DUDLEY WYATT.

1641[-2], March 5. Chester.—On removing from country quarters, "I adventure to this town in expectation that a common respect might be shown my men, but since Tuesday last was sevensnight myself and company has importuned for quarter from the magistrates here, yet nothing can prevail. Some of my soldiers for entreating billet were threatened, others sent to the gaol with much abuse and sufferance. Above 50 of my men do yet want quarters, and abundance are lodged among extreme poverty and infection of the Pox, and many are so cruel that they thrust my men out of doors to perish in the streets. Money is wanting, and none will credit or deliver a pint of beer or a peuny loaf to a soldier without payment for the same. It lies much in your power to work a redress therein. I have engaged my reputation to the mayor no inhabitant shall suffer by my men, yet nothing will prevail but ready money, and that being wanting my poor men want all things, and I fear in a short time, unless you please to assist me, myself shall by reason of this their want of accommodation want some part of my men. I make bold to send you this written entreaty, whilst myself in person do endeavour to suppress disorder amongst my distressed men and their cruel landlords." [N. II., 11.]

1642, April 9. And finding therein sufficient grounds to proceed against him for treason upon the law made against men of his quality did cause him to be indicted arraigned and tried and the jury having found him guilty I gave judgment on the verdict as in case of High Treason.” I have directed the sheriff however to stay execution, as he was stayed amongst other Popish Irish by command of the House, till the return of the messenger to receive their further commands. “The story of this man’s life and behaviour to bring him within the case of High Treason is amply set forth in his examination.” I ask pardon if I have done wrong in not waiting for the direction of the House. 1. His “absence will cause men to believe that it is out of design to discourage the Undertakers and hinder the other propositions for raising money for defence of Ireland.”
2. It will very much hearten the rebels there and disaffected persons in this kingdom as being an evidence and effect of the jealousies and division betwixt your Majesty and the people.
3. It will much weaken and withdraw the affection of the subject from your Majesty without which a Prince is deprived of his chiefest strength and lustre and left naked to the greatest dangers and miseries . . .

The LORDS JUSTICES and the COUNCIL OF IRELAND to SIR EDWARD NICHOLAS.

1642, April 23. Dublin Castle.—We have received the King's letters of the 13th inst., a copy of his message to the Parliament in England, and your letters of the 13th, by which we observe his Majesty's gracious resolution to adventure his person in this kingdom for suppressing the cruel rebellion. We have written to him, to express our thankfulness. For his information we now send you an account of the present state of affairs.

(1.) We gather by your letters that it is believed that on his Majesty's appearance in this kingdom, divers great men who have hitherto sat still, will declare themselves heartily for him against the rebels. We know no great men here but such as have already declared themselves either for the King or for the rebels. The former have few or no English left, and their Irish tenants being Papists are openly or underhand joined with the rebels. Both sides have put forth their full strength.

(2.) The rebellion has now overspread all parts of the kingdom, notwithstanding all our endeavours, and those of all those great men who are not joined with the rebels. The rebels are generally masters of the field.

(3.) The whole strength of his Majesty's army in this kingdom is about 9,000 foot and 1,200 horse, and 300 dragoons, besides the small forces in Munster, Ulster, and Connaught. They are in want of wholesome food, clothes, shoes, and medicaments. We have not money to buy them here, or to provide skilful chirurgeons. Many die daily, and in truth the number of fighting men cannot be accounted above 6,000.

(4.) The forces are disposed into several apt garrisons, as at Dublin, Drogheda, Dundalk, Athy, Catherlagh, and Naas. They have no more strength than is necessary for guarding those places.

(5.) We cannot, without deserting those places, draw together into the field a body of more than 2,000 men, and those not fully armed.

(6.) To pay all in list here and in the other three provinces, and other charges incident to the war, we have received out of England since the 23rd of October—when this rebellion began—only 37,000*l.*, which has not paid a sixth of the charges due in that time. The soldiers have been “disappointed and reduced to high and inexpressible extremities.” Those in the remote parts have not had one penny since these troubles began, except 1,000*l.* sent to Knoekfergus. They undergo many hazards against the enemy, and at home they endure the misery of nakedness, cold, hunger, and thirst. We cannot therefore deal with disorders among them which arise to the oppression of the good subjects of this town, who have besides been despoiled by the Rebels, as severely as we would.

(7.) If the 2,000 men were drawn into a body to march, our stores would not victual them for above a month. We are in want of horses and carriages, nor is there much victual in the country, and that not to be gained but by fighting for it.

(8.) There is no fit accommodation here for the entertainment of the King and his retinue, all places near this City and for many miles round having been wasted partly by the Rebels' forces and partly by the King's in vengeance for the inhabitants adhering to the Rebels. The provisions here are not fit for his Majesty's table. Provisions for horses, and firing are equally scarce.

(9.) We have no money to buy provisions from England, his Majesty's revenues being wholly taken away by this Rebellion. We send a relation of our late good success against the rebels. Of the 9,000 foot mentioned above, no more than 3,400 came from England, the rest having been raised here with much difficulty. Copy. [N. XII., 13.]

Kingston-upon-Hull.—On receipt of the order of both Houses yesterday we instantly hired two ships, and this day put on board half the cannon with a good quantity of powder match and bullet, and prepared a considerable number of muskets to be shipped tomorrow morning with the rest of the cannon. We hope within a few days to have dispatched the greatest part of that which is most needful, having two men of war, part of the Earl of Warwick's fleet, ready to waft them to London, which arrived here on Sunday last sent for that purpose. We have likewise given the Sheriff the opinion of the House concerning his warrants of restraint. "There is much expectation of a great meeting at York on Thursday next by all the Gentry and Freeholders of the County summoned thither by his Majesty's appointment and by a

The COMMITTEE AT HULL to SIR PHILIP STAPILTON.

[1642, July 3-12.]—"Since our last of the 3rd of June (July. See Lords' Journals, v. 182), the Providence hath landed six great pieces of battery, whereof three are demi-cannon of 24 pound bullet. You may see by the Declaration that a speedy course of violence is intended against us here. We have by our former advertised you how unable without present supply of more men we are to subsist. We have, as we conceive, certain intelligence that this ship hath within her 24 pieces of ordinance besides 14 of her own, which, if she cannot get of herself off the sands, then they will have the addition of those. We believe they have at this instant together 300 horse and about 2,000 foot. They have arms, powder and other ammunition, and so take up all men that come. We believe that they will instantly, if not opposed, be a considerable body, yet of such men as, if the Parliament take a quick course—but it must be without delay—as will not hazard much for them. We shall, God willing, do our best, but our outwork being not yet tenable 'tis not much we can do without we suddenly have more men sent us by sallies to hinder their approaches. You have oft had it reiterated from hence the necessity of a good Committee here, you have appointed some, but we are no better. We are not at this instant four. We desire you will be pleased to send down Sir William Strickland, Sir Hugh Cholmeley, Sir Philip Stapilton, Sir Henry Cholmeley. They are gentlemen that in these times may do good with their credit in the country. If, while you sit voting, these others be doing, you will soon find but a bad issue. Horse speedily sent down, whereof great use. We shall earnestly intreat you will take to heart this, as sent from them, whose utmost endeavour if you will enable them, shall be to serve you. Postscript.—We have certain intelligence, they intend instantly, if they can, to make quick work with us here." THE EARL OF WARWICK TO THE KING.

1642, July 5. Aboard the James in the Downs.—“I have received your Majesty’s letter of my dismissal to this service and with it an Ordinance of Parliament for my continuation in this employment. I beseech your Majesty to consider into what a great streight I am brought between these two commands as also of the weighty trust your Majesty’s greatest council hath put me in for the defence of your Majesty and your kingdoms wherein I shall ever be ready to sacrifice life and all I have to serve your Majesty. Yet, Sir, I most humbly beg your pardon that I did not lay down my charge, your Majesty’s command not coming by that way that it was imposed on me. And I hope your Majesty hath always been as well assured of my fidelity as of Sir John Pennington’s or any other. And therefore I shall humbly beg of your Majesty I may not be divided between two commands, whereby your Majesty will lay the greatest of favours upon your servant, that night and day prays to God for your Majesty’s long life and happiness.” (Copy. See Lords’ Journals, v. 216.) Signed. [N. II., 31.]

Lieutenant WATERS to Captain SLINGSBY.

1642, July 12.—Yesterday walking in Westminster I heard people talk of you, and say how much Parliament was incensed against you. I met Sir John Mennes who told me he was newly cleared by the Parliament, but that they were much incensed against you. You have gained a fair name and much applause from such as wish well to the King. I exhort you to adhere to the course you have taken. (See Lords' Journals, v. 216.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 35.]

Two Seals*. [N. II., 40.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON TO OLIVER CROMWELL.

1642, July 27.—"By my enclosure you can perceive with what violence and severity the Commissioners of Array proceed against those who oppose them in order to strike terror into the minds of those well affected to the peace and liberty of the kingdom. They have contented before them divers of our best ministers, as Mr. Ley, Mr. Holford, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Oseley. Some of whom have been summoned by such warrants—whereof a copy is inclosed—as it would seem they intend to enawe or expel our best ministers to the discovery whereof they are guided by their refusal to publish such books warrants and commands in their churches as they have sent into them. Indeed it is most apparent they intend so much to enawe the country as that none should dare oppose discover or speak against their courses, whereunto they are much encouraged by the expectations of the king's presence in those parts for whose entertainment great preparation is made, and he is expected within this three days. Though there are two messengers here there are no warrants save only for Earl Rivers and Sir Thomas Aston and Sir Edward Fitton who are under the protection of so strong a guard of horse that it is not to be expected the messengers should be able to seize them or to bring them up if they were apprehended. Some of the inferior delinquents might have been more easily apprehended. Should Parliament find out any course for the enlargement of this man Thomas Bennet, who is a very honest man, it would be of great advantage to the cause. I have already taken order for demanding the Habeas Corpus. I desire that some such provision be made for the security and protection of our good ministers, and that they be not exposed to so much violence and discouragement, for, as Mr. Ouseley himself informed me, Sir Thomas Aston came to his house with no less than twenty horse completely armed, and it was said there were near 40 more not far distant. But they shut the doors of the house upon him and kept him out so as the worthy minister was not then delivered into their hands, but still remains very couragous." Seal. [N. II., 41.] Enclosed :

i. THOMAS BENNET TO SIR WILLIAM BRERETON.

1642, July 21, Chester.—Am glad you are in the county that the trouble which is like to come on many in Worall by the Commissioners of Array may be made further known by the vigorous execution of your Commission. I, being one of the Constables of Williston and being troubled in my conscience whether to obey the warrant or no, was resolved not to go to the place. The other constable did also stay at home. One of the trained soldiers was examined on his oath what was the reason I was not there. He said he knew no reason, but thought the Constables might be excused, the trained soldiers being there. The other was called and examined and he said he heard the other soldier say that I said I cared not if the warrant which came from the Head Constable was burnt. He also complained that his armour was not scoured and for his pay though he had it with him. Therefore why I was dealt with and the other Constable spared was I was against the Commission of Array. Also I would acquaint your worship with the passage of the Under Sheriff. Myself, Thomas Hickeoocke, [and] John Bevan were all in a warrant, and I supposed a friend had sent a letter to Thomas Hickeoocke, did meet him at the two miles, at 7 o'clock, and if John Bevan had been at home we both had been together. When we came there the Under Sheriff with bilies (bailiffs) was there to take us. We paid for the change of ale, then we paid for sack at the Sun tavern in Chester. We paid for his dinner at his house in the city and his man's and the beer that was drunk, and I thought all day he had intended to have took bail for us both, but after dinner he called Thomas to him in the chamber and was content to bail him, but would commit me and now I am in the Castle, but I hope it is for no evil that I have done. I desire your advice for my carriage." [N. II., 39.]

ii. HUGH CALVELEY, High Sheriff of Cheshire, to the CONSTABLE OF CHESTER CASTLE.

VIII., 136.] N. XII., 18, is a copy thereof enclosed in Sir William Brereton's letter.

Interrogatories for the Examination of the said three MAYORS.

[1642, July.]—[N. XIII., 81.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, July 30.—“So soon as we were assisted by the addition of some other Deputy Lieutenants to join in the other Hundreds we proceeded to assemble the Hundred of Northwich upon Tuesday last at Northwich; where there was a full appearance about three hundredth and twenty musketeers and four score pikemen well armed and near six hundredth other volunteers, who, though they brought not arms so complete yet I believe their hearts as well affected as the other to the safety and peace of the King and Parliament. And though the number was not so great as in the former Hundreds, which were much larger and more populous than this, wherein divers of the Trained Bands and some others charged with arms absented themselves by reason of their relation to the Commissioners of Array, yet the number of those that were completely armed was double to those that are ordinarily charged with arms, besides the other 600 volunteers; so as you may be confirmed in the assurance of the good affection of many in this country if they receive encouragement and protection, and many more I am confident would discover themselves if they were not enawed by their remoteness from your assistance and exposed to more than ordinary peril in regard to the disaffected in Wales, Lancashire, Nottinghamshire, and some other neighbouring counties. . . . Postscript.—There remains a considerable sum in the hands of the Head Constables, Petty Constables, and Church Wardens collected upon the Act of Contribution who demur to pay it to the Sheriff, because they observe how he stands affected to the Parliament, and therefore desire your direction. By the enclosed letter subscribed by Sir Thomas Aston you will discern their designs to enawe or ensnare our best ministers, four or five of whom have been already convented and given security to appear at the Assizes. Thomas Hiccocke and Thomas Bennett were apprehended last week by warrant from the High Sheriffe for opposing the authority of the Commissioners of Array. The one is bailed, the other remains in prison, a copy of whose commitment I have sent to Mr. Cromwell. There is violent pursuit against John Bevan and Robert Harvie and others who dare not return to their houses, by the terror of which examples many are much discouraged, and the other party much animated to advance both in numbers and courage." (Probably the original summons to Mr. Ouseley, of which a copy was enclosed in his letter to Oliver Cromwell, was enclosed with this.) Seal. Endorsed "Read Aug. 1, 1642." [N. II., 42.]

He came from Shafton to Sarum, where his guide reported of 30 men he had entertained at Shafton for service at Portsmouth, who were to lie at Downton that night. Mr. Wroughton was arrested at Sarum on information of the same and placed in the gaol. Alderman Johnson went to Downton to stay the soldiers, but found some, hearing about Mr. Wroughton, had returned home, and the rest encouraged by the evil counsel of Captain Abarron of Charford had gone on for Portsmouth, of which we gave notice to the Committee near that place, and hear the said soldiers are taken in consequence. levelling thereof and the building of the Armoury having been chiefly borne by the officers and soldiers of the said Company,—and praying that the petitioners may persist in their military discipline as formerly. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 717.) [N. XXII., 149.]

THE HAMPSHIRE COMMITTEE to [WILLIAM LENTHALL].

1642. August 12. Southwicke.—We have not received the ammunition you wished us by your letters of the 9th and 11th to expect at Sir William Lewis' house by a troop that was to march westward. Sir William Waller with 43 horse and Captain Hurrey with his troop came hither on Wednesday last, which we presume you think not any strength to impeach the preparations at Portsmouth, wherein the ships that are fallen thither are of great use, being ready to fasten on all opportunities to express their forwardness and affections to the service they are in. On Tuesday night last, one Mr. Browne Bushell, being Master of Captain Martin's ship, manned out a long boat. And his boldness was such in encouraging his men as that they took in the Maria pinnis carrying six pieces of ordinance, and thereby hath prevented those prejudices that the coast was liable unto by her roving. And she is now laid up near Faireham, where we have given order to have her unrigged and to unlade her of her ordinance. On Wednesday morning last we took a course for the surprising of two barks laden with about 80 quarters of wheat by Captain Badd, and one Riggs, and other ill-affected persons for the supply of Portsmouth, whereof those hands that were employed in the service shared some part; and five quarters were allowed to be distributed among the poor along the coasts, the better to encourage discoveries, if the like preparation were again attempted, and the part we appointed to be kept for the use of our men here as occasion shall require. And on that day also we seized on two great horses of one Mr. Waigrave's, a known great Recusant, having received information that he provided them for Portsmouth, and that they also stopt one Mr. White a Dorsetshire papist with his servant and one Mr. Knowles, another papist who were going thither. We presume you have heard from Salisbury how that they have there in custody one Mr. Wroughton, who had—in those parts—levied thirty men for the service of Portsmouth, whereof our watches have yesterday morning met with fourteen, who are now in hold. We on Wednesday sent a summons to Colonel Goring a copy whereof and of his answer thereto we have here inclosed, it being the opinion of the commanders here that it is scarce proper to send to require him to deliver up the town, till we have forces fit for the assault thereof should he refuse us, and that he could not but hang that trumpeter that should come to require his soldiers not to yield him any further obedience with those other commands that you have directed for the mayor and townsmen, which hath made us respite to proceed thereon. Goring hath so great a confidence of speedy supplies that he hath swept into Portsmouth all the provisions of cattle that were in the island of Portsea, and plundered the houses of the inhabitants there and hath already mounted his ordinance to batter down Gosport, which his threats make them hourly expect, his quarrel to them and to the islanders being his jealousy of their disaffection to his commands.

Sir, thus we are enforced to trouble you with the sad relation of our condition here, which makes such a distraction in the county, as that we do not find any horse—more than our own private horses—coming on to our assistance, and the ill impressions instilled into the people by some ill affected of the gentry, such as Sir John Mills, Sir Richard Norton, Sir Richard Gifford with others, hath slackened those foot supplies, which we were in hope of, and those that come hither expect pay, which will speedily exhaust the 1,000*l.* you sent down, so that we must entreat you to hasten down a far greater sum, if you hold a resolution to provide for the safety of this place, we hearing that the Marquess of Hertford is marching hither with a great strength of horse and the Earl of Southampton daily expected with the like, which we hope will quicken your intentions so as that you speed us down the residue of Sir William Waller's regiment of horse and a regiment of foot under some experienced commanders which we hope will be seconded with such forces here as shall give you a good account of what shall be directed to them.

Sir, our earnestness upon the outcries of the poor people here and the dangerous consequence that delay may bring by our want of timely supplies upon this part of the kingdom hath enforced the coming up of this bearer being one of us your servants here—whose assistance we shall want—to importune your despatch of our desires hereby . . .

Postscript.—We have such need of Arms here that we desire to be supplied with 400 muskets, bandileers, rests, and swords out of your storehouse.”

Signed “Will. Lewis, Tho. Jervoise, William Waller, John Fielden, John Lisle, Ro. Wallop.” [N. II., 53.]

LAWRENCE BALL, Mayor, to RICHARD KNIGHTLEY.

1642, August 12. Northampton.—We stayed last night here Mr. Harvey, Mr. Havers, and Mr. Smith as spies and intelligencers of the Earl of Northampton and countenancers of the Commissions of Array. Their examinations and two informations are enclosed, and also a warrant for summoning the Commissioners of Array taken from Samuel Wightwick, servant to the High-Sheriff, now in custody. We desire you to acquaint Parliament herewith and send us directions. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 719.) Seal. [N. II., 54.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to RALPH ASHTON.

1642, August 13.—“As the Mayor and citizens of Chester knew not how to prevent us but by raising a tumult so it was also in the County, for when we had summoned an appearance for Nantwich Hundred upon Friday last, the Commissioners of Array being conscious to themselves of their own weakness to make any opposition in that Hundred sent out warrants for all their forces in the whole county. And the Sheriff extended his authority for the raising of the Posse Comitatus to suppress the rebellious assembly—so he stiled that which was appointed by us—not containing themselves in this county but brought forces out of Wales, Shropshire, Staffordshire and other parts. All which we should not much have valued, if we had been furnished with one troop of horse, wherewith we were not enabled to encounter them, yet if this meeting had not been unhappily disjourned and disappointed by some of the Deputy-Lieutenants and some Gentlemen of that Hundred—to whom the managing of the business in that Hundred was referred—who had the warrants signed for the meeting in their hands twenty days since, some whereof were so apprehensive of the disadvantage and danger to encounter the Commissioners' power in the whole county with a part of this single Hundred—whereof the rest were by some of them disjourned—as that upon some motions arising first from one of the other party they did conclude before my coming to town that both parties should mutually withdraw and that there should be no training that day on either part. Which agreement was performed upon our part, and whereunto I would not have assented, but that we were prevented of a great part of our force that would have appeared before us. But there was no manner of performance upon their part, but they came in a triumphing insulting manner through the town of Nantwich after our departure and our forces dismissed." I ask, "that we may receive some manner of intimation from you what to expect, for if it be so that you cannot spare us any Horse, it may not then in discretion become us to implunge this country into too great an engagement, seeing we cannot but expect that great assistance will resort to them out of Staffordshire, Shropshire, Lancashire, and Wales, and therefore I beseech your advice how to proceed herein. For though I doubt not but that we may baffle them and beat them off the ground yet we cannot hope to make good the undertaking many days without assistance; so great multitudes will resort unto them out of Staffordshire, Shropshire, Wales and Lancashire and other parts. And this is our greatest discouragement and disadvantage that we cannot relieve and protect those that obey us, for they are imprisoned and that in the County Gaol, which is very near and convenient to carry them unto. But if we apprehend any malignant spirits for opposing our authority or for any other crime, we can take no other course but send them up to the Parliament, whom we cannot expect to be brought thither, but that they will be rescued by the way. I desire therefore to offer to your consideration whether it be not very requisite that we should have power to commit to common gaols, or rather that there may be some short order made and printed directed to the Lieutenant and Deputy Lieutenants and Constables of the County Palatine of Chester and all other his Majesty's loving subjects, commanding that no obedience be given to the Commissioners of Array, and that no officer or other presume to apprehend or imprison any man by virtue of any warrant or command from them, but that every man according to the Protestation should assist to protect and defend them from their arrest, and to rescue them out of their hands, and that no gaoler should detain any of those that are committed for no other cause but for not appearing before, or not yielding obedience to the Commissioners of Array. The reason why I omit to name in the Order or Declaration the Sheriff, Justices of the Peace and Head Constables is because the most of them are Commissioners of Array, and the rest are such as are very forward to advance that illegal commission. The bearer hereof, Richard Wirrall, was a late Head Constable who refused to obey their commands, and executed our warrants, who hath therefore thus many weeks been pursued by them, so as yet he durst not return to his own house. Many others are in the same predicament and it seems they intend—as they threaten—to fill all the gaols and prisons . . .

Postscript.—If relief come not down from you into Warwickshire and other counties you cannot make account of any better, but that they will be lost, for the people begin to despair of the Parliament's assistance, because they see nor hear of no force coming down for their relief. Therefore they conclude the Parliament wants power to protect them. I sent into Herefordshire to be informed touching the raising of Horse there and received information to this purpose. I beseech you excuse me that I have no sooner returned the acknowledgement of your respect in your letter, and let this be communicated to Mr. Ashurst and Mr.

Alderman Pennington and entreat their assistance for procuring such an order or declaration . . . to be printed and sent down." Signed. Seal. [N. II., 55.]

[1642, August 15-18.]—When sent with a warrant from the House of Commons to apprehend the Bishop of Worcester, he refused to go with me saying he had the King's protection and would not obey the Parliament. On Friday last being August 12th I was present when the Commissioners of Array met at Worcester and saw Lord Coventry and other Commissioners with a great number of men—of mean and base quality as they seemed to me—and having hedgebills, old calivers, shep pikes and clubs. It was commonly affirmed that they intended to surprise Serjeant Wylde and Mr. Salwey and carry them to York . . . Mr. Doldswell, an attorney in the Common Pleas, sent six horses and was a busy man in that service. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 729.) [N. XIII., 98.]

Captain RICHARD SWANLEY to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

1642, August 28. From aboard his Majesty's ship the Charles.—"Since my last I have Captain Terney of Cowes Castle in safe custody, and have put therein a sufficient guard. After that I sent Captain Wheller unto Yarmouth to demand that Castle, but Captain

Barnabe Burley stood so much upon His Majesty's commission, that he would not obey an ordnance of Parliament without His Majesty's consent of which I had notice. Presently myself with Captain Jorden went up in the ship Censer and anchored before the said Castle where we went ashore, thinking to have had a fair parley with the said Burley, but being before the Castle we saw him on the wall like a mad man, having a barrel of powder at each corner of the Castle with a linstock in his hands, saying that before he would lose his honour he would die a thousand deaths; and we, seeing him in that rage at present, gave him time to recollect himself, which after some consideration he proffered to come to parley on condition we would promise he might return safe into the Castle again, which we granted, and after some parley we suffered him to go into the castle and there to continue, we putting a sufficient guard over him, there to remain till further order. After that I sent Captain Jorden to Hurst Castle, who so much prevailed with the soldiers—the Captain being absent—that they admitted a sufficient guard of our men to keep possession for the King and Parliament and peace of the kingdom. And as for Sandown Castle the Gunner with other soldiers came aboard to me, desiring an order from me and they will keep the Castle from their Captain or any other malignant spirit for the peace of the island, yet notwithstanding the Captain remains in the Castle, but hath not any command there. These forts being secured to the great rejoicing of the inhabitants of the island, yet in a bodily fear, by reason that Colonel Brett with other cavaliers held Casbrooke (Carisbrooke) Castle, whereupon we took into consideration how we should dispossess the new made Governor, and with an unanimous consent we landed 400 men from the ships, who went with a full resolution not to return, until they had made the Colonel conformable to the Ordnance of Parliament. The first night we marched up to Newport from whence I presently sent Captain Jorden and Captain Martin with a letter to give him notice of our intention which was, that, if he would resign up the Castle for the King and Parliament, he with the rest of the Cavaliers should have free leave to depart, but he at that time stood upon unreasonable demands, as by the inclosed it doth appear. The next morning we drew up our forces upon the hill near unto the Castle joining with two Companies of the town of Newport which put them in great terror, yet nevertheless to prevent spilling of blood myself with Captain Jorden went near unto the Castle bidding him good morrow, and if he would send forth a man we would parley with him. Presently there came forth to us Captain Worsley who we gave to understand our resolution if the Colonel would not yield on fair quarter, whereupon he desired me to go into the Castle to treat thereof and I should be assured of my safe return which the Colonel protested on the faith of a gentleman, on which terms I went to him and after much debate it was surrendered on the conditions specified in the inclosed, so that now the i[s]land is in peace, and the Colonel with other Cavaliers are gone to their own houses, and the Countess (of Portland) remaining there until further order from the Parliament. In the mean time I have left forty seamen with ten men of the town of Newport to guard as well her person as the Castle under the command of Browne Bushell, until it shall be otherwise ordered. As touching the condition of Portsmouth I cannot at present give any full relation thereof, by reason I am yet at Cowes, only that I caused two Demi-Cannons and two whole Culverin to be landed at Gosport to make a battery against the town, which as yet I hear is not finished. All these my actions are not expressed in my commission, therefore I shall entreat your Lordship that you will be pleased to procure me an Order from Parliament to authorise me for what I have done if the same shall be approved of." (See Lords' Journals, v. 332; Commons' Journals, ii. 745.) Signed. [N. II., 59.] Enclosed:

JOHN WHISTLER and JOHN SMITH, members for the City of Oxford,
to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, September 3. Abingdon. — "We wrote last Monday, but as the Carrier's waggon was that day stayed, his trunks broken open and carriages, perhaps our letters miscarried. We therefore thought it our duty to acquaint you with the present state of the City of Oxford. On Wednesday the 10th of August the Earl of Berkshire, the Lord Lovelace, Sir John Curzon, Sir Robert Dormer, Mr. Branthwaite and Mr. Hone had a private meeting at the Star with the doctors of the University, and by a message—as we conceive mistaken—in the afternoon the Mayor and his brethren were sent for. At which time the Earl told us that the business did concern the University and not at all the City, and shewed us his Majesty's letters directed to him and others for the securing of the University, which were in effect the same which the King had formerly sent to the Sheriff of the County and the Mayor of the City, but withal advised us that howsoever differences had been between the University and the City we should now be at unity and peace and to consult with them for the public safety of the place to prevent sudden incursions for that the times were like to be dangerous.

The Mayor thanked him for his advice. The Lord Lovelace wished the doctors to be presently sent for to consult about it. We told their Lordships the manner of doing of it was a thing of more difficulty than could be suddenly digested and desired time to advise thereon. Thereupon the Lords wished us to give the doctors a meeting concerning it. That night the Vice-Chancellor sent word that the Mayor and his brethren should on the morrow morning give a meeting and withal sent word that Sir Richard Cave and another expert soldier would come with them and advised that if we had any men experienced in fortifications or matters of war we should bring them with us. On the morrow we met accordingly; and Mr. Vice-Chancellor made a long speech advising us to join in defence of the place. Then Sir Richard Cave discoursed of making a breastwork which he called a line with redoubts and a foot pace, and Dr. Pinck, the Vice-Chancellor, and he had much discourse of the nature thereof. After half an hour spent in their discourse we asked them where that line should be made. They said on the North side of the town from the Charwell to the Thames, for that they would leave out no colleges. Then we asked them in what time that would be done. Sir Richard Cave said presently, for that everyone would work having his portion of ground allotted him. We told him we had not shovels for 40 persons. Then we asked what the charge of such a work would be. Sir Richard Cave said he knew not that, but asked the stranger that was brought, who desired time to consider of it. Then we asked them how many men would man this work. Sir Richard Cave said a 1,000. We told them, the work being a mile in length at the least, we conceived many 1,000 men would not do it and that we had not arms for above 100 men, and told them plainly we did not like the business, and thought it would draw enemies upon us, and make it the seat of a war, so nothing at that time was concluded, but that we would join with them for the keeping a diligent watch both by night and day. That night Mr. Whistler's windows were broken, and it was generally given out that he should be mischiefed for speaking against that fortification.

After this many days together the Scholars and privileged persons with such weapons as they had, trained up and down the streets, in Christ Church College quadrangle, and other College quadrangles, and kept no good rule either by night or day.

On Tuesday August 23rd, the Vice-Chancellor caused another meeting, and discoursed only of unity and peace between the two bodies, which we did very well approve of, but told him we must then be used as brethren, and called to their council, otherwise we would not maintain their resolutions, which they said was reason and promised so to do. We told them our Constables were threatened and beaten, and other citizens abused, and required justice from him, which he promised, but as yet hath not performed.

We told them we heard that they had sent for Chivalleers, to come into the city. The Vice-Chancellor and Dr. Fell both denied it and protested against it. Notwithstanding all those promises that afternoon and the morrow the University—without our privity or allowance—made a bulwark of timber against the East Bridge under Magdalen College tower, and a redoubt or trench a little beyond Wadham College with a pentice of boards to sit dry, in which a watch was diligently kept and managed by the Scholars until Sunday night last. In regard to these promises and protestations and of the great defeat at Coventry we rested secure conceiving that the University would not bring in and that his Majesty could not spare any forces to trouble us but on Sunday last about 12 of the clock in the night at this redoubt they let in a troop of horse and at Smithgate the entrance into Cat Street they came suddenly upon the Watch, which, albeit it were not very strong, it staid them for a good space, until some part of the City were armed, but having so great a number before them and the Vice-Chancellor and his company being ready behind them the Vice-Chancellor commanded the watch to let them in, and bid the Chivalleers 'Welcome, gentlemen,' and said they were their friends and he, with Dr. Baily and others, did conduct them to their inns, and caused the inns to open their gates and entertained them. How they have broken up houses and pillaged citizens and others we doubt not but you have sufficiently heard already.

There was a noble gentleman of the House of Commons upon Sunday last sent us a letter of intelligence truly suspecting that these troops were bound for Oxon, which letter being sent by one of New College was kept from us until Monday night, which if we had had might have prevented the disaster, for that the number were not—as we conceive—200 whereof not above 160 some soldiers and the rest grooms and guides, and the most of those ragged starved companions, having lost their arms in their flight from Brackley, and their horses tired and spent with hunger and travel. Their behaviour hath been so injurious that many that stood indifferent before or were seduced by the persuasion of some scholars do now detest them, in so much as some of them attempting to pull down the bridge going to Bottley called Bull-stake bridge, the citizens did arm themselves and drove them away, and had the Mayor then done his duty by all likelihood they might have driven them out of town.

Some part of the County of Oxford near adjoining and a great part of the County of Berks are very well resolved and willing to afford us their best assistance, and do now so guard the country that the Chivalleers dare not scout abroad, as usually they did at their first coming. Most of the sober and religious gospellers have left the University and most of the gravest citizens have done the like, this dissolute crew having threatened that as they had lost by Roundheads—for by that reproachful expression they call men that fear God—they would repair their losses upon them. The city of Oxon and country adjacent is in great distress and likely to become desolate, unless God's mercies, with the assistance of the Parliament, shall in due time prevent it. Both of us have of late been publicly scorned and derided and direfully menaced, and Mr. Smith hath received some blows for no other reason but because he is of the Parliament. We both of us by the advice of our friends both of the University and City have for the present left Oxon. Your own estate, Mr. Speaker, lying near is concerned, therefore we shall not doubt of your best affection advice and assistance, and you knowing the place can help without our dark and weak expressions." Signed. Addressed to the Speaker "at his house near Charing Crosse." [N. II., 61.]

Captains ANTHONY WILLOUGHBY and THOMAS ASHLEY to the LORDS JUSTICES and COUNCIL OF IRELAND.

1642, September 3. His Majesty's fort near Galway.—Forasmuch as we perceive that grievous complaint is made against us by the County and Town of Galway to the Earl of Clanricarde and we are able and were willing to justify all our proceedings before the said Earl and the Lord President of Connaught and Lord Forbes, our accusers being brought face to face with us, which offer being made to the said Earl and to the Mayor of Galway was refused, and whereas the County promise to the said Earl protection to the English amongst them and reparation of the injuries done by them provided we give satisfaction for the injuries done by us we desire that clause be rightly and equitably interpreted, and that all those that complain will enter into Bond to answer to any complaint of us or any of the English against them, and we hereby bind ourselves to answer any complaint against us and being found guilty of having done contrary to our Commission and instructions to make reparation. Signed. [N. II., between Nos. 61 and 62, but not numbered, or noticed in the Index.]

THOMAS NORWOOD and JOHN MALMES to FRANCIS, LORD DUNSMORE.

1643, September 5. [Northampton Gaol.]—On the 27th of August last Sir John Byron's troop with two of his brother's troops marched from Leicester and marched all night and all the next day till 4 o'clock at night without any injury committed to any man by us till we came to Brackley and there we were to be quartered 4 hours, but before we could get meat for ourselves or our horses, being almost all tired out by that long march, there was of a sudden a sound To horse, and our enemies coming so fierce on us before we could get horse that after a little scrimmage being but 3 hurt of our side, [we] was forced by the command of our captains to fly every man for his safety, and the country had got such force and strength of a sudden that separated us into several parts that before 8 o'clock next morning there was 44 of us taken, our captains and officers being fled towards Oxford, and so taken prisoners, our horses swords money and all our arms and other materials taken from us and so brought prisoners pinioned as traitors to the state to this lamentable place of prison. The Committee of Northampton allow us 6*d.* a day, but the gaoler is so hard that he constrains us to pay 4*d.* a man every night for our bed, so that we are almost starved for want of maintenance. We entreat your Lordship to make this our petition known to the King, and to our Colonel Sir John Byron hoping that we shall have some relief or order taken for our liberty out of this woeful place of prison. Scal. [N. II., 70.] This petition was annexed to the following letter.

THOMAS NORWOOD to FRANCIS, LORD DUNSMORE.

1642, September 5. The County Prison, Northampton.—Stating that he had been apprehended at Daventry the day Sir John Byron's troop came by, and asking as his tenant to assist him in recovering his liberty, and stating that the same day John Malm of Bilton had been imprisoned at the instance of Bartholomew Gutteridge for speaking some words in your Honour's behalf. [N. II., 62.]

JOHN WHISTLER and JOHN SMITH to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, September 5. Abingdon.—“ On Saturday last this printed paper enclosed was with trumpets and other solemnity in divers parts of the City of Oxford publicly proclaimed and pasted up in several places of the city, we know not by what warrant or authority. But as yet do not hear of any considerable success that it hath had.

The University are making new lines and fortifications over against St. Giles' church, where the scholars do night and day gall their hands with mattocks and shovels, and for that use have taken from the Star the shovels and mattocks provided for the County Magazine.

On Friday last the University had a Convocation for the taxing of Colleges, Halls, and privileged persons for the maintenance of these new come soldiers.

On Saturday last they procured the Mayor of the City to call a Council where he first proposed that the town should join with the University in the charge of making these fortifications, which upon long debate the citizens denied. Then the Mayor proposed that the City should join with the University in a defensive war. Some citizens demanded who was the enemy and what Delinquents the city had that were in fear. But on long debate nothing was done.

Many motions have been made and earnestly pressed for training the citizens with the scholars which as yet hath not been agreed on. Yesterday there came in a load of arms unto the Cross Inn; some say from my Lord of Danby, some say from Sir William Walter, the truth whereof we yet know not. The scholars generally feed themselves with an expectation of Prince Rupert's coming to their aid with a great army. Our Mayor's weakness we can neither defend nor excuse, which is a great part of our present misery. One of our Bailiffs—the honestest man—is much distempered. His distracted thoughts sent unto us we have enclosed out of which at your leisure you may perhaps pick something of the occasion." We conceive that we may do better service here than in the House. Signed. Seal. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 754.) [N. II., 63.]

SIR GILBERT PYKERINGE, SIR RICHARD SAMWELL, JOHN CREWE and EDWARD HARBY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, September 6. Northampton.—We admonished Edward Lord Mountague and others to desist from executing the Commission of Array. JOHN FIELDER, SIR WILLIAM LEWIS, and RICHARD NORTON to JOHN PYM.

1642, September 7. Stubbington.—Our troops were so successful as to take Southsea Castle on Saturday night last without any loss of blood on either side. This became such a disadvantage to Portsmouth in seconding a battery we had at Gosport that our ordinance from both places played so on the town, as to occasion a mutiny there, and brought Col. Goring on Sunday to write to Sir William Waller for a parley, which began on Monday last and ended to-day in the Articles enclosed, for which we have great cause to praise God, considering the great terrors the design there menaced not only [to] these parts, but the rest of the kingdom. We think that of the forces sent to our assistance we shall need to keep no foot and only one troop of horse. We desire that the money ordered for this service be hastened down, that we may be able to pay the soldiers and prevent their committing any outrages, and also that the orders for removing the Countess of Portland and certain Delinquents from the Isle of Wight be hastened. Signed. Seal. Addressed to Mr. Pym “at his lodging at Mr. Manley’s house in Westminster near the King’s Fishyard.” [N. II., 71.]

JOHN DORNEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, September 9. Gloucester.—The Ordinance for the Militia for this City and County was put in execution on Monday last, and the Gentry Citizens and Trained Bands cheerfully submitted thereunto with the increase of a band of Volunteers and a troop of horse, which are to be weekly exercised, but the adjacent counties are much disaffected. I therefore desire you to further the safe conveyance of those pieces of ordinance concerning which some four Deputy Lieutenants lately wrote, and, if the House thinks fit, the horse in the inclosed shall be paid.

Postscript.—Being in great want of horsemen's arms we have written to Mr. Holford of the City of London for 20 cases of Petronels, which we conceive can hardly be obtained without an order of the House, which we therefore solicit. Seal. [N. II., 72.]

EDWARD [LORD] HERBERT TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, September 18. Ragland.—I desire to wait on the House of Commons, "my coming to London being also most necessary for the accomplishing of that great and beneficial waterwork in attaining the perfection whereof hath cost me many thousands, not so much out of covetousness thereby to gain unto myself as to serve my country . . .” I would not stay, but that I fear affronts of stopping searching and abuses by the way, and ask for an order of the House to protect me.

Postscript.—My coachman comes from Gloucester with a copy of an Order of Parliament. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 763, 766.) The information given of my horses hath been false, they are none other than coach geldings. Signed. Seal. [N. II., 77.]

Lieutenant ROANE to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1642, September 18. — Petition stating that for executing his Majesty's Commission he had been apprehended stript and left destitute by the magistrates of Walshall in Staffordshire and desiring some competent allowance for his relief. At foot is an order for his removal from Northampton Gaol to London there to remain in safe custody. Signed, “Essex.” [N. XXII., 68.]

Examination of JOHN ROANE, Yeoman Pricker to the King.

1642, September 19. Northampton.—That he was employed by Lieutenant-Colonel D'Ewes in a regiment assigned by Lord Paget to Colonel Bolls with a commission under the King's own hand to raise volunteers, which he shewed to the Mayor of Walsall who refused to let him beat up his drum and apprehended him. [N. XIII., 101.]

THOMAS WHITE to his son FRANCIS WHITE, a prisoner in Ilchester Gaol.

1642, September 21. Limerick.—It is vain to expect that Mr. Mansell and his company being 13 in number will be exchanged for you, inasmuch as Sir Geoffrey Gallway took him and his company prisoners for committing robberies in the river of Limerick and betraying Edward Gould and his ship to Captain Cole, who by Mansell's persuasion brought them prisoners to Cork. I cannot prevail to get Mr. Mansell disguised, till he or his friends procure that you and the rest of our friends there committed with their goods be sent to Cork. Am sorry your imprisonment and that of others in England is like to prove a dear purchase, for others here are like to pay dearly for you. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 714, and letters of the Earl of Cork and John Ashe, dated September 30 and December 30.) [N. II., 78.]

JOHN NANSON to SERJEANT WILDE and HUMPHREY SALWAY, Members for Worcestershire.

1642, September 26.—Excusing himself for having intermeddled in the Commission of Array. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 791.) [N. II., 79.]

JOHN WASTELL to SIR HENRY ANDERSON.

1642, September 30.—Sir John Savile of Lupsett is taken prisoner to Pountfract Castle which is replenished with soldiers. Two of his servants were slain before he was taken. Upon Tuesday last Sir Richard Hutton put 800 men into Knaresborough Castle, as my uncle Arthur Beckwith told me yesterday. He came that way on Wednesday from Leicestershire . . . Seal. [N. II., 80.]

The EARL OF CORK to LATIMER SAMPSON, of Freshford in Somerset.

1642, September 30. Youghal.—Concerning the means for procuring the release of Mr. Mounsell. Had sent an Irish footman to Limerick with Francis Whyte's letters, who is returned with the answers. Those from the merchants of Limerick show what high and insolent demands they made for exchange. I suggest therefore that the order should be procured from the Parliament to apprehend Thomas Power, Francis Rice, Oliver Bourke, Edmond Bourke, and Thomas Stritch, merchants of Limerick, and one Carney, merchant of Kilmallock, now skulking in or near London, and am confident Mr. Mounsell will thus get freed on better terms than had been proposed. I have a commander of theirs, Captain Prendergast, in prison, but they refused to exchange Mr. Mounsell for him. Signed. Seal. [N. II., 81.]

SIR EDWARD RODES and Captain JOHN HOTHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, October 1.—Enclosing a most disadvantageous agreement both to the service of the kingdom and the safety of the County, and asking for instructions for raising horse money and plate, for money to be sent down and for two regiments and four troops to march to us with all speed, we being now but betwixt 800 and 900 foot and one troop of the Hull forces at Selby, having left 300 foot and the other troop at Doncaster. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 792.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 82.]

WILLIAM CONSTANTINE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, October 5. Wimborne.—“This country was in itself divided, for a main party of the chief gentry laboured with all their industry to bring war into their own houses and to supply the Marquess of Hertford with men, victuals, and ammunition. But God . . . frustrated their endeavours and we see their party vanished. Our forces had no sooner left pursuing the Marquess, but they were—with great prudence—lodged in such towns here as had shown themselves violently ill-affected, where at leisure they gleaned up such of the great Malignants as were left behind; some were seized by force, others yielded voluntarily and now we see here a unanimous consent and joy to be pliable to the Parliament . . . The horse troops behave themselves with great moderation, but the foot are something violent upon the Papists, several of whose houses they have endeavoured to plunder, but the commanders use all diligence to prevent them as too uncivil and not agreeable to the sense of Parliament. This day they all march towards London.” Seal. [N. II., 83.]

The MAYOR and JURATS OF DOVER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, October 5.—Forwarding the examination of Richard Pay. [N. II., 84.] Enclosed:

THE EARL OF WARWICK TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

ROBERT REYNOLDS and ROBERT GODWIN TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, October 17. Bristol.—“The 2,000 men long since designed for Munster for the raising whereof 2,000*l.* hath been paid to the Lord of Kerry above five weeks since are in no readiness as yet, neither do we hear of my Lord here, but it is reported . . . that he intends to stay till he hath a Commission from the King. The officers of Colonel Bamfield's regiment lie at Bath, visit this town, take their pay and do nothing for it. Captain Constable hath been here with his ships ten weeks at 400*l.* a month, there is 1,000*l.* charge upon the State for lying still in safe harbour. He and Mr. Dobbins have made a protestation before a notary by which it will appear where the fault lies . . . The wisdom of the House will find a way . . . that the Commonwealth may not pay for ships when they do no service. Last night came Captain Bellfore to this town, his men unruly and his horses out of case, but he himself very well affected to the service of the Parliament.

We both hasted them and saw them out of town this morning to go towards the Lord General with all possible speed. We find both the Mayor and many others very well affected to the Parliament, if we may judge by verbal expressions, but no horse, plate or money subscribed. We assembled the Mayor and Aldermen to day and put them in mind of their duties to assist in the saving of the Commonwealth at this time. After they had heard us with a great deal of regard and attention, they desired time to consider their answer.

We mean to treat with them touching the payments of their customs which they do forbear to pay to the ill example of other towns.” Signed. Seal. [N. II., 86.]

LADY ELIZABETH STAWELL TO SIR NEVILL POOLE.

Same date.—Requesting him to make known to the Parliament that she has sustained a great loss at one of her houses in Somersetshire where a company of troopers under pretence of searching for arms, have rifled her goods to the value of 400*l.* and upwards, and she still fears that the like may be done at her other house—which also hath been lately disarmed by Mr. Pine and Captain Pym—the same troopers and others ill affected being still in these parts, and intreating him to procure her a protection. SIR JOHN HOTHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1642, end of October. Hull.]—I wrote to you it was best for your service to send for Mr. Pelham to the House which you accordingly did. Had he obeyed I should not have needed to have gone any further. . . . I had then heard of mutinous words he had given out against the Grey Coats—which were those southern forces you had sent down—as that the town must keep a guard against them. . . . The gentlemen that command them are men of sober condition and do their utmost to restrain their men from doing wrong. Some few faults were committed in the county, which as far as our power gives—not having martial law—we have endeavoured to remedy. Six I have delivered to be tried and suffer according to law. But for any hurt done in the town or towards the townsmen I believe in any garrison never was less cause of complaint. On the receipt of your order I sent it to him, and expected a long time obedience to it, and if he had not proceeded in a great measure to have disturbed the peace of the town, I had left him to himself to have made his own answer. But you will perceive by the testimony enclosed . . . to what height his anger had drawn him to accuse me in plain open English that I meant to plunder the town, with other words at his pleasure. . . . I hope you all believe that accusation deserves no answer. If I had such an intent surely I chose a most unfit time, having at the same time 600 of my foot forces at Cawood Castle, my son with his troop of horse, my major I had sent in one of the ships riding here to Scarborough with 120 men more to surprise a hoy from Holland with 2,000 arms—which were gone just half a day before we could get thither—and I had yielded to Sir John Gell of Derbyshire to lend him 120 more of my men to give a beginning to settle the Militia in Derbyshire, which county rightly settled—as they have assured me with those men they quickly can—gives great security to Yorkshire, Derbyshire being the best pass into Yorkshire should any forces be sent from the King's army, and at that time Mr. Aldred's troop was wholly in town you will think not much amicable to me. Explaining the case of Mrs. Watkinson whom he was accused of turning out of her house, and inclosing a note generally signed by the town. The cause of Mr. Pelham's anger was my refusal to admit into the town his brother-in-law Mr. Toppin, who had been concerned in the plot for betraying the North block-house and setting the town on fire. By the advice of Sir Hugh Chomley and Mr. Wharton I sequestered Mr. Pelham and sent him by one of the King's ships now riding here to you to be proceeded with as you should think fit. Whilst I sent my men abroad I had need have all occasions nipt in the head that shall mutiny the town against me at home. Postscript.—"I shall only propose to you my Lord of Essex now being at Worcester with his forces, if one of the Aldermen of Worcester had said to the townsmen, my Lord of Essex intends to plunder you, 'tis fit we stand upon our guard, if he had presently called a Martial Court and hanged that Alderman could you justly have blamed him? One word of mirth. Upon Sunday night last, as the neighbours of Sherborne tell our men, they drew certain forces out of York to have set upon my son's men at Cawood. When they came in Sherborne, a village three miles from Cawood, they espied a wind-mill, which they took for my son's colours marching to meet them, and certain stooks of beans which they took for his men in order. Whereupon they returned in more haste than they came. I enclose information of the proceedings of my Lord of Newcastle and their associates, that you may see the necessity there is of somewhat to be done. We have long heard of two regiments, Constable and Fairfax, to come to our aid, but none yet appears. If they had come in any time I am confident your business had been done before this." (See Commons' Journals, ii. 863.) Remains of Seal. [N. II., 153.]

DENNIS WISE, Mayor, and THOMAS PURY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, November 1. Gloucester.—80 watermen and 70 firelocks came hither on October 21st. They complain greatly at not receiving their advance money and pay. We have lent them some money for their present necessities but fear they will mutiny, unless some course be speedily taken for their payment. This morning two regiments from Worcester are come to be billeted here, and last night we received Captain Charles Price and six others sent here by the Earl of Stamford. Many dangers are threatened us on the West part by the Welsh and on the East by the Cavaliers. Signed. Seal. [N. II., 91.]

JOHN PEERS to his fellow servant GEORGE BAYNES.

1642, November 2. Westminster.—We came into Thames Mouth Sunday after we set sail from Hull. My master (Mr. Pelham) was very well received in Parliament. The Houses think Sir John (Hotham) is mad. They hear of all his carriages. I think ere long he will be sent for . . . There is a great many soldiers in the City and trenches made about it. They took 2,900 muskets at Lambeth House on Saturday last and abundance of arms and money from those who they suppose to be naught. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 863.) [N. II., 91 b.]

SIR CHRISTOPHER WRAY, Captain JOHN HOTHAM and THOMAS HATCHER to [the COMMITTEE OF SAFETY OF THE KINGDOM].

1642, November 12. Northallerton.—“On Wednesday . . . the 9th we with our three troops and three companies of foot marched from Tadcaster . . . to hinder the relief that York could expect, both of men and victuals, because we were certainly informed that divers Yorkshire gentlemen were gone to my Lord Newcastle to solicit him to march with what power he could raise to York, and after he had cleared the country, as they made themselves believe he would do, then to march into Lincolnshire, and so to the King. The desire of preventing this growing danger, so many troops being certainly raised and under convict Recusants, made us resolve to try if a sudden venture upon them might either dissipate or dissolve this their so hopeful a project, and therefore leaving all our foot at Topcliffe 18 miles from Darnton where their horse lay, we with our three troops and 20 dragoons marched night and day directly towards them and upon Friday morning by daylight came to Darnton, where Captain Pudsey's troop was drawn up at this end of the town with intention to relieve my Lord Dunbar from our troops, but meeting us at the town's end and thinking we had been Captain Sare, another of his fellows, he came up directly to us, until he found his error by our shooting bullets, which made him run too fast for an honourable retreat. We followed with what speed we could, but they were a great deal better horsemen, yet we got 10 prisoners with their horses and pistols, and but for a large furze bush that hid him had got the Captain too. Four or five troops that lay thereabouts ran all presently into Durham, thinking the plain country too hot for them, upon which we marched to Yarm, there to meet the gentlemen of the North Riding, in order to give them encouragement which, we hope, hath done a great deal of good in those parts, as they informed us, and that by the countenance of our forces they should be able to raise a considerable strength. From thence we came to Northallerton to countenance the well affected gentlemen of Richmondshire, and they tell us that our dispersing the Papists and being near to cherish the good and awe the bad will bring in all that side of the country, so that we intend to hover up and down in these parts a while, and if it be possible to hinder this pestilent growing mischief, which if it increase, then we shall join all our forces together, and I hope make them run with a rattle, for I believe we shall be able to draw together 4,000 horse and foot. We send you here enclosed some intercepted letters which lay open their intentions, and certainly it would benefit the public much, if you would please they might be printed. At our first coming to Northallerton we met with a Danish Ambassador, that landed at Newcastle some three days before, and was going to the King. We durst not venture to stay him, although we thought it was not fairly done of him to bring 6,000 arms for the King, and Colonel Cockran, the Scottishman, that had been soliciting there to bring over strangers, as appeared by his papers. The Colonel we have put in safe custody, and desire to know what we shall do with him. We are certainly informed that the highland men in Northumberland, that are tenants to my Lord Northumberland and my Lord Gray, begin to get together and refuse to obey any commands from my Lord Newcastle, and divers well affected gentlemen of that county join with them, to prevent which Sir William Widdrington is marched from Newcastle with some drakes to bring them to obedience, but we hope the strength of the country and their good cause will protect them. Some report these honest men have possessed themselves of Alnwick Castle and that my Lord of Newcastle is drawing some battering pieces thither." Original and Copy, the first signed. [N. II., 95.] Enclosed :

i. SIR MARMADUKE LANGDALE TO SIR WILLIAM SAVILE.

1642, November 9. Newcastle.—“We find my Lord of Newcastle very unwilling to adventure his honour and reputation in Yorkshire, until he be very well provided of soldiers and officers, whereof he is not yet sufficiently . . . Of that force which is requisite for the work he intends he hath not as yet 3,000 horse and foot, few or no horses for carriage, yet he is getting horses and men every day, and this day hath positively set down to begin his march upon Tuesday next. He hopes to raise as many men in Yorkshire, as may increase his army to 10,000, with which he hath some thought of marching southwards, when he hath settled Yorkshire. He promises to guide us into Lincolnshire to requite the kind visit of our neighbours Sir Christopher Wray and Mr. Hatcher, by whose only means our miseries were brought to this height. My Lord expects commanders every day from Holland, but if they come not he will keep his word for Tuesday next to begin his march, which he had begun sooner, if the commanders had come. He hath plenty of arms and ammunition for more than he can tell what to do withal, insomuch as he must be forced to have a greater guard than he intended for the safety thereof, yet I know he will not spare you either arms or ammunition. Sir William Widdrington is raising men about Alnwick, where he finds much resistance by the Earl of Northumberland's and the Lord Gray's tenants. He took with him some horse and dragoons and this day two field pieces are gone to him. My Lord of Newcastle took this day an opportunity to see his children at Bottell Castle. It may be it was to be further in the county and to be near the danger to prevent the rising of the county, which, as is reported, some of the Highlanders in Tyndale and Risdale (Redesdale) begin to get into small bodies and deny to be raised by any power from my Lord of Newcastle. There is some bodies raised in Scotland, but it is for France as is alleged, but certainly they are in these Northern counties much infected with the hot zeal of Puritanism, and many of them that were raised, upon second thoughts will not come to Newcastle. The like stories Sir Timothy Fetherston tells us out of Westmoreland and Cumberland, alleging that the King hath got the worse of the day and they will not go to be killed. The Parliament is far too nimble for the King in printing; the common people believe the first story which takes impression in their minds, and it cannot be beaten out. I believe my Lord of Newcastle hopes us to raise men in Yorkshire. I must confess it will be an infinite vast charge and trouble to our county, yet seeing our estates must be wasted, I had rather it were wasted by them that will ruin our enemies than to feed our enemies with our estates and save their own. We talk here much of the Queen's coming over and there is almost every day some coming from her and some from the King to her, and she sends many arms, ammunition, and some money, but I fear her coming is uncertain. There was an ambassador from the King of Denmark come upon Monday last which brought much arms and ammunition and, as is thought, 25,000*l.* in money, but he will not confess with money. He is this day gone post towards the King. It is reported he hath brought propositions to the King and Parliament whereunto if the Parliament will not condescend he will send great forces in the spring to aid his Majesty, so we are like to feel the miserable effects of our own disagreement the next summer, which is like to make this kingdom the seat of war for all the nations of Christendom, that as we were in part the first beginners of the wars in Germany, so, I fear, they will all come to make an end of it in this kingdom. We in Yorkshire should have some happiness if we could make an end of the troubles and distractions of our county and so divert the war southward, that whatsoever foreign nations come they may be employed in the South where the wellspring of our miseries began, and where there is pillage enough to satisfy many armies." Two copies. [N. II., 93, 94.]

- ii. SIR EDWARD OSBORNE, SIR MARMADUKE LANGDALE, FRANCIS TYNDALL and RICHARD ALDBURGH to the EARL OF CUMBERLAND.

Same date and place.—Concerning the Earl of Newcastle's intended march. When he is to enter the County some provision of bread and other necessaries must be made at the confines. We believe this may be safely done, his Lordship having ordered divers troops of his forthwith to quarter on the frontiers, which will sufficiently secure them. Because there will be many urgent occasions for money, which here we cannot get by any means, we entreat that 200*l.* at least be sent hither with all possible speed, without which we must be bold to tell your Lordship that the service will very much suffer and we so discouraged that we shall desire to quit this employment. To-day his Lordship commanded us to send the enclosed declaration to York with his desire to your Lordship that it may be printed with all speed and 500 books be presently sent him and as many more dispersed in Yorkshire as your Lordship shall think fit. We are further moved by his Lordship that all the saddlers in York may be presently and only employed in making saddles for troopers, as light and short as can be, for which his Lordship will give them ready money. Copy. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 853.) EDWARD HIGGONS, WILLIAM CAWLEY, and HENRY CHITTEY to

WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1642, November 21. Portsmouth.]—"On Tuesday last, being the 15th of this month we called all the inhabitants of the City of Chichester together there, to let them understand wherefore we had fortified the city, which was to defend ourselves from being plundered by the King's army, and to know if they would all join with us to secure one another from being destroyed by them. There was a general assent in it not one contradicting but with several vows and protestations resolved to live and die in it. Upon which agreement we went out of the Town Hall where the meeting was. When we came into the street we perceived some swords drawn at the Northgate of the city—where one of the guns we had from Portsmouth was placed—which swords were drawn against the gunner. We endeavoured to pacify the rage of the people, but we could not, but they then overthrew the gun off from his carriage and possessed themselves of him, and from thence they went to the other parts of the city where the other guns were placed and possessed themselves of them also. When this was done the chiefest gentlemen in and about the city gave countenance to those that did this. After this the same night came Sir John Morley, Mr. Robert Anderson, Mr. William Wray, and Mr. Francis Shallett to the Mayor and demanded of him that Sir John Morley and twenty other gentlemen of the town might watch that night. The Mayor was unwilling to consent unto it but they pretending it was for the settling of the town in quiet and to allay the fury of the common people, upon this it was agreed that there should watch twenty of the gentlemen and twenty of the citizens and that Sir John Morley should have the command of the gentlemen and Mr. Higgons of the citizens, and that the keys of the city should be delivered to the Mayor. But when it came to the setting of the watch, there were at the least 30 of the gentlemen and near 50 of the meaner sort of people gathered together, and Mr. Higgons demanding of Sir John Morley that there might be but 20 gentlemen watch and that the other should depart to their several houses Sir John answered that it was not safe for him to speak and wished him to be quiet and denied that any should be discharged. He then gained the city keys into his hands and would not deliver them, but said they should be kept for the King. Upon the first combustion in the town there was a messenger dispatched to the High Sheriff to acquaint him how the state of the city stood, and to desire him to come thither and he should have free entrance. Upon this the Sheriff made warrants to the several Trained Bands that they should appear within half a mile of the City and aid him to go into it the next morning at 9 o'clock, at which time the Sheriff accompanied with a hundred horse met the Trained Bands and so marched into the city, where when he came he commanded the Mayor to proclaim the proclamation of pardon to all the County except Herbert Morley Esq. and Henry Chithey Citizen. The Mayor refusing they forced him to go to the Cross, and then the Sheriff commanded the Proclamation to be proclaimed. After that was done he made search in divers well affected persons' houses for arms and all they found they seized and took away and put the Commission of Array in execution and displaced Captain Chithey and in his place put Sir John Morley. Then Nicholas Wolfe took the charge of Captain Oglander's band and so settled the Commission of Array. To countenance and attend the Sheriff in this action there was Sir William Forde, Sir William Morley, who hath sent the Sheriff four horses completely furnished for war, Sir John Morley, Sir Edward Bishopp,

Thomas Leedes, one of your House, who is made Captain of the horse for Arundel Rape — Sir Thomas Bowyer hath sent a horse—Robert Anderson a lawyer, Nicholas Wolfe a Justice of the Peace, Francis Shallett, William May, Thomas Gunter, who was a troop in Portsmouth with Colonel Goring, John Apsley, William Rishton, two of Mr. Robert Heath's sons, Francis Pury, George Gunter, Philip King the Bishop's brother, and John King the Bishop's son, and Edward Osborne with divers others. They have seized the magazine which was for the country as likewise ten barrels of powder we had from Portsmouth by order from the Parliament. Upon Wednesday we came to Portsmouth and addressed ourselves to the Governor and the Committee making them acquainted in what condition we were in and how the guns and powder which we had from the Governor were wrested from us. The Governor being very sensible of the affront to the Parliament and to himself and apprehending that if there were some expedition used in the business it would be very feasible to regain the guns and powder, so that it were done before the Sheriff could call in the country, and to that purpose he despatched Captain Swanley and Captain Winnford with seamen and landsmen upon the Thursday to effect that service but it pleased God so to turn the wind that they could not gain the harbour that night. The next day they gained the harbour, but before they could come near the place they intended to land the tide fell, so that they could get no further that night than an island called Thorney. When Captain Swanley found how contrary the wind had been to him he dispatched away his lieutenant with a trumpeter to demand the guns and powder of the Mayor or any others that had the charge of them at Chichester. When the Lieutenant came there demanding where the Mayor was it was answered he was not to be spoken with and they told him he must go to the Governor of the City, by which name the Sheriff was stiled. He delivered his message; the answer was that he had a command from the king to detain the guns and powder to his use, and until he had a command from the king to deliver them he would keep them. With this answer the lieutenant returned to Captain Swanley, informing him likewise how the city was up in arms, and that he conceived there were eight hundred or a thousand soldiers in the city. Upon this Captain Swanley and Captain Winnford took into consideration whether it were fit for them being not above two hundred strong to venture upon the city or no. In the close they resolved the Governor of Portsmouth should be made acquainted with the proceedings, as likewise to inform him what they heard the strength of the city was, which was that they had near 100 horse and 1,000 foot. The Governor being informed of these passages and knowing of what consequence Portsmouth is to the kingdom and what a weakening it would be to the town if he should lose either landsmen or seamen therefore gave directions that the Captains and their men should return back to Portsmouth. The Sheriff, having intelligence that there was some forces coming against himself from Portsmouth, made his warrants to all the country near the city and commanded all men instantly to repaire to Chichester upon pain of death or of being plundered, pretending Prince Robert was coming and that if he were not resisted they were all undone. Upon this trick he gained the country to come into the city, where when he had them he locked the gates and set a strong guard at them so that they could not retire to their own houses, but were forced to abide in the city. The countrymen express they have no hearts to the service, but they are kept in with hopes that there will forces come from the king and it is given out the city shall be made a garrison. We hear there are both foot and horse come from the king into the city, but we have no certain information of the truth thereof. Divers houses are threatened to be plundered within and without the city, the Sheriff, being abetted by the gentlemen before named, is extreme violent in the Commission of Array. They have taken and imprisoned some men, and have cast irons upon one and thrust him into the dungeon. They set two pistols to the Mayor's breast and offered him to take an oath, but what the contents of the oath is we know not." We desire you to acquaint the House of all that has befallen us, and that Parliament will take into consideration what this may grow to. Postscript.—Captain Chitney and Edward Higgons were forced to fly to Portsmouth without any money and the Sheriff will not suffer any goods to be brought out. They desire that for the present they may have some moneys out of the Contribution Money. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 860.) Signed. [N. II., 102.]

The KING to the SHERIFF OF OXFORDSHIRE.

1642, November 23. Reading.—Warrant to him to order the collectors in that County under the Act for raising 400,000*l.* to pay to himself all monies they had or should collect under the same Act and to keep them till further order. Copy. [N. XIII., 110.]

SIR JOHN HOTHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, November 25. Hull.—Concerning a great ship laden with ammunition driven by stress of weather on the coast of Lincolnshire and then into the Humber and detained by him till he receives orders from Parliament, and suggesting that as the magazine at Hull had at first but 300 barrels of powder, which was now much lessened, both by their own consumption, and by sending to their neighbours by order of Parliament—without which none had been sent except five barrels to Manchester when they were in that extremity with Lord Strange—they should agree with the merchant in London for 200 barrels of the powder to be left at Hull, and also whatever match there was on board, and wishing to know the price of the muskets on board. Postscript.—"If you do not take some speedy course to send down money to pay this garrison and that in a good measure, all your affairs in the North is like to break to pieces. 6,000*l.* for 3,000 will be gone before it can arrive there." Scal. EDMUND PRIDEAUX to JOHN BRISCOE, Postmaster of Barnet.

1642, November 29. London.—After referring to the order of the House of Lords of November 25 concerning the Post Office (Lords' Journals, v. 459)—"I have thought fit to vindicate and assume the liberty of carrying and recarrying letters by way of Post, and have undertaken the managing of the Inland Letter Office, for carrying the weekly letters in such course as hath been formerly used by the Post-masters, and if you think fit to join me you shall receive such salary as is now allowed you." (See Lords' Journals, v. 485.) Seal. [N. II., 101.]

JOHN BROWNE to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

[1642, end of November?—Suggesting a method for raising supplies and forces for prosecuting the war—In the first place that all counties, cities &c. should pay one shilling in the pound on their annual rents—some regard being had to counties that had been plundered—for maintaining the war and securing the counties from being plundered, by quarterly payments by the tenant, or by the owner if no tenant. Next that people may know their money goes for the public good, and will benefit the county where their estate lies all counties shall maintain a number of horse and foot proportionable to their contribution. Kent for instance should raise and maintain 1,000 foot besides officers and three troops of horse containing about 75 to a troop besides officers, such forces to be employed as follows;—All the foot and two of the troops shall be joined with the other counties' forces to keep the body of an army on foot, and with the consent of the general when the army of the adverse party shall fall upon that county they may retire into the same to preserve it, they knowing the county best, as being chiefly raised out of it, and as for the third troop, they may be kept in the county for these and other several employments—first to disarm all Malignants, for which purpose the Captain of the troop should have a Commission as Justice of the Peace, secondly to make sudden seizures on the estates of those who refuse to pay the contribution and to cut off plunderers and raiders from the adverse army, third the troop being well exercised, would be able to supply officers to all the light horse of the county, fourthly, the troop continually moving about the county would learn the ways and passages so well, that if an army were to come thither the meanest could serve as guide. The regiment and 3 troops will be paid out of the county contribution, which in Kent will amount to above 50,000*l.*, and I am sure that less than 40,000*l.* will pay all the said forces, and the residue will go towards the extraordinary expenses of the war. The value of the rents must be given on oath, and Commissioners appointed who will not for fear or favour undervalue estates. The tenant must be authorised to deduct the contribution from his rent, and tenants should be rated on the value of their stock, and also such as are maltsters, brewers, shopkeepers &c. and all these must have their estates valued, and pay five shillings per annum on every 100*l.* and whereas I have heard that this Honourable Assembly have made an order to sequester all the Bishops' Delinquents' and Papists' rents, if this be honestly be done, I am sure that out of them and the contribution money they will not only be able to maintain the war, but to discharge the sums for which the Public Faith is engaged. This business must put in execution betimes. (Perhaps the proposition referred to a Committee on December 1, 1642. See Commons' Journals, ii. 870.) [N. II., 184.]

FRANCIS WREN, RICHARD LILBURNE, THOMAS MIDFORD and others
to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

[1642, November. Durham.]—Petition, stating that, whereas your Petitioners are informed that the Houses have lately associated the seven Northern Counties (See Commons' Journals, ii. 851), the enemy grows strong and draws nearer every day, and this County is in that desperate and exceeding danger that the well affected are forced to fly from their houses, there not being any of the country forces now on foot to protect them, nor any visible authority that will grant commissions, and praying that the Parliament's Ordinance might be immediately sent down, and power given to grant commissions, and that in the mean time they may have the protection of the House for raising what force they can, as their lives and liberties are in extreme danger by the Papists and Malignants now gathered together in Westmoreland, whom they daily expect will break in upon them. Signed. [N. XXII., 134.]

WILLIAM TYLER and JOHN BRANDLINGE, Bailiffs, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, December 1. Ipswich.—Concerning Edward Dawtry, Scholar of King's College Cambridge, who is accused of having spoken very scandalous words against the Parliament, and whom they are sending up to the Parliament. Seal. [N. II., 103.] Enclosed:

i. 1642, November 30.—The Informations of William Dyer, Matthias Bradford, and Ralph Hastone against the said Dawtrie. [N. II., 103.]

ii. A copy of very scandalous verses (about 120) written upon torn papers found in his pocket. They begin:—

“What always hear? always be vext?

With the harsh railing of a five hours' text, and end:—

“May Lentulus and all that cursed crew

Be broacht for blood by some such slaves they slew.”

[N. II., 103.]

PHILIP FRANCIS, Mayor, and JOHN WADDON to SIR JOHN YOUNG.

1642, December 2. Plymouth.—We have several charges against Mr. Trelawney. 1st that owing to his influence many refused to subscribe to the Parliament; 2nd that the Proclamation for the Commission of Array being brought to this town he persuaded the Mayor to publish it—though all the rest dissented from him—pressed the custom of the town to publish such things the next market day after the receipt and said that were he Mayor he would do it; 3rd he refused to lend any money to the Parliament; 4th the most part of his favourites here are very averse to our proceedings, but we are very confident—were he here—they would publicly declare their concealed intentions. We are at present almost surrounded by the Cavaliers under the command of Sir Ralph Hopton, Ashburnham, Slanning, and others. Their rendez-vous is at Plympton three miles off, they came there last night, and Colonel Ruthen with some 300 horse dared them upon the sands to battle, but they durst not undertake it, so they retreated to the town, where we mean, God willing, to spend the last drop of our blood in this so just a quarrel. If Parliament think that Mr. Trelawney shall have liberty to come amongst us in these times of our distractions we shall submit ourselves to their judgements. We beseech them to send money and munitions for our speedy relief. Signed. Seal. [N. II., 105.]

Colonel ARTHUR GOODWIN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, December 3. Wycombe.—Concerning the stoppage of certain waggons containing clothes linen and plate of the Earl of Carnarvon and others “or rather, as the servants termed them, of my Lady, which was under the more prevalent title, because here the feminine gender is more worthy than the masculine, and indeed so I think for the most part.” (See Commons’ Journals, ii. 875.) The plate is here all sent you. “If you please to turn it into His Majesty’s pictures and so return it to the soldiers here I think they will fight with more courage for His Majesty and Parliament.” . . . Great numbers come here from different counties to help us, the danger only is of their falling off again for want of money.

The want of some of the gentlemen of those counties, out of which the honest country fellows come, is a great discouragement. Seal. [N. II., 106.]

SIMON KNOCKES and JAMES CONNOR to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1642, December 5. Dartmouth.—Concerning the voyage of the Crescent from Dublin and the refusal of the Master to obey the Captain’s orders, for which see the latter’s letter dated the 13th. Sealed with Captain Plunkett’s seal and in his hand, the writers being marksmen. [N. II., 107.]

ALEXANDER STAPLEHILL, Mayor, and ROGER MATTHEW to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, December 5. Dartmouth.—Sir Ralph Hopton with an army of 5,000 men is now drawing towards us, Plymouth being not feasible for his entry. A Commission of Array was sent forth by Sir Edmond Fortescue—titling himself High Sheriff of this County—to all the parishes hereabout to meet tomorrow at a place called Madbury, but 10 mile distant from us. What appearance he will find we know not, yet doubt too many, in regard almost all the gentry in these parts are for the Commission of Array, and begin to threaten the ruin of this poor town which if taken from us will be of that disadvantage to the Cause of Parliament both by land and sea as cannot be conceived, but by those who have duly considered, besides the ruin of our trade and ships which hath brought great benefit to the state, our hearty desires to the service. [We] by ourselves and friends sent above 1,700*l.* contribution. We have again and again solicited our Deputy Lieutenants to send us some speedy help of men and arms being of ourselves not able to arm above 300 men. . . . We beg that a speedy command come forth for our relief both by land and sea. . . . Yesterday here arrived from Ireland Captain Plunkett in the [Crescent] whom we find very willing to assist us; we humbly beseech that a command may come for his better encouragement together with his company. (See Commons’ Journals, ii. 884.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 104.]

DENNIS WISE, Mayor, THOMAS PURY and others to VISCOUNT SAY AND SELE, Lord Lieutenant of Gloucestershire.

1642, December 12. Gloucester.—Certifying that according to his order they had delivered to Colonel Berrow towards the raising of his regiment in the Forest in plate subscribed the greater part of 1,100*l.* and also paid out of the subscription money to Captain Hill above 300*l.*, and for the maintenance of two regiments under Colonel Essex for divers weeks 400*l.* per week, and also spent about 1,000*l.* for fortifications and ammunition for the defence of this place, and desiring him to procure an ordinance for 500*l.* out of the subscription moneys of the City and County for completing the fortifications and other preparations for defence. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 895.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 109.]

Captain THOMAS PLUNKETT to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1642, December 13. Dartmouth.—I was appointed Captain of the Crescent by the Lord Justices and the Committee at Dublin, of whom I had a commission, and withal a straight charge to go to the Bay of Wexford, and there to wait for 8 sail of the rebels' vessels which were to come out richly laden with butter, hides, tallow and wool, and when it would blow that we could not ride there, we were to cross the Channel to keep all aid and relief from them there or other such places as the rebels did inhabit. The next day, afore I left Dublin, the wind being north-west and the only wind to help out the rebels, I desired my officers that we might lay off some 7 leagues to the southward that we might perceive all the sail that came from Wexford, Tramore Bay and Dungarvan. The Master and Gunner told me plainly they would go home, and said that he had the charge of the frigate, and that the King had none left but the Crescent and the Lidia, and that he would go home to discharge himself, and said in the presence of good people that my commission is not worth a tobacco pipe. Being between Scilly and Landsend we met with an Irish bark came from Crookhaven, laden with 2,000 hides besides some 22 pieces of frieze cloth. I manned the said vessel with 6 men, desired them according [to] the terms of my commission to go for Dublin, to which the master would not condescend, so we were furst (? forced) into this faithful town, and so desires my [ship] to remain till further order from you. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 886.) Seal. [N. II., 110.]

SIR GEORGE GRESLEY, SIR JOHN GELL, THOMAS GELL and NATHANIEL HALLOWES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, December 13. Derby.—We have at the present about 700 men under Sir John Gell, but not all armed and not one week's pay aforehand. We have been lately pressed by my Lord Fairfax to send him some forces, and by the Northamptonshire men to do the same by them.

Also our neighbours in Nottinghamshire have desired help from us against the Malignants there. We were and are willing to help them all to our power and are confident we could have done it if Sir John Cooke, one of the knights of the Shire, would have been forward in it, but the truth is we have many Malignants in this County and men of great power with whom he is more conversant than with us, and we considering the present occasion thought it requisite to put in execution the Ordinance of Parliament for the Militia, that so we might have in readiness in our garrison at Derby as many men as we should part withal upon the forementioned occasions, for otherwise in the absence of our men the Malignants would seize Derby and so undo us and the whole country, and then become masters of this and two or three other neighbour counties, which yet by our small forces are kept safe from them. To this purpose we drew warrants—one of which is inclosed—set our hands to them and desired Sir John Cooke to join with us, but he absolutely refused, for what cause we know not but believe it is his dislike of the business, and that this is a means to displease the Commissioners of Array and some other Malignants with whom he is very familiar. Other instances of his lukewarmness are given, and the whole is submitted to the judgement of the House. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 892.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 111.]

FRANCIS PIERREPONT to his brother WILLIAM PIERREPONT.

1642, December 13. Nottingham.—Requesting that the persons mentioned, who were arrested by Captain Charles White, one of the captains appointed by the Earl of Essex, may be allowed to give bail. (The names are given in Commons' Journals, ii. 914.) Seal. [N. II., 112.]

[Articles for the surrender of WINCHESTER CASTLE.]

[1642, December 13.]—That the whole force now in the Castle be forthwith brought forth into a field at the town's end near the Castle, and that they leave their horse and arms behind them in the Castle.

That no violence or incivility be offered to the Commanders and other Gentlemen and that they be preserved as far as in us lies from all plundering and rioting.

That we represent to the Lord General, the Earl of Essex, the reasons that the Lord Grandison and the rest allege why they should be returned again to the king's army, having given up themselves and the Castle on these conditions. Signed "Grandison, Richard Willis, Ralph Heberne." Copy. [N. XX., 59.]

SIR EDWARD AYSCOGHE, THOMAS GRANTHAM and WILLIAM ELLIS
to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, December 17. Lincoln.—"We have put the Propositions in execution in this county in some places with very good success, but we find not all of the same opinion. We had an Order of both Houses of Parliament to send Sir Anthony Irby and his Dragoons into Yorkshire with all speed and to pay them out of the moneys raised upon the Propositions, and accordingly we sent out our warrants to the Treasurer, but find them crossed by commands from the Earl of Lincoln who hath an order from the Committee for the safety of the kingdom to receive all moneys as well raised upon the Propositions as the 40,000*l.*, so as by that order all the commands you gave us for the security of this county are made frustrate, which, if ever, require our speediest care and resolution for their preservation. My Lord of Newcastle is in his march towards us, and the Malignants in the Counties of Rutland, Leicester and Nottingham are raising both horse and foot, and ours in this county are very insolent, and have carried their horses out of this county to be employed against us, which doth much affright the people, and call on us to raise the forces of the county, but if we be disabled to receive any moneys the county of necessity must suffer, and be in extreme danger by those forces, therefore we earnestly desire to know your resolution herein. We extremely want officers, and therefore we have written to Captain Savile being in the county to stay here, promising him to acquaint you with the reason of his stay, assuring ourselves that in this extreme danger you will not only give him leave to stay with us, but send us more officers arms and ammunition, which you may send to Boston with safety." We earnestly desire you to send down with all speed Lord Willoughby our Lord Lieutenant and his regiment of horse, and that you would command Sir Christopher Wray and Captain Hatcher to come with their troops. It is much desired by us and by the county generally that Sir William Armyne should be sent down with all speed. His presence will do much service in those parts where he liveth and where of all parts it is most needful. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 894.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 113.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1642, December 18. Cawood.—Stating there is a difference in his opinion between prisoners taken in their houses, and taken in arms, and offering to release as many prisoners as the Earl has released without an exchange. Seal. [N. II., 114.]

The SAME to [the SAME.]

1642, December 19. Cawood.—After acknowledging his letter with many compliments "I shall with confidence rely upon your word, and wait upon your Lordship in any place or in any fashion that you in your judgement shall think fit, as to the condition we now stand in, and not to bring suspicion upon it. I should humbly offer it thus, that if you please to appoint some gentlemen of quality to meet and treat for the prisoners, I shall use the matter so as I will be the man on our side and then either your Lordship may privately be there or appoint some other place, for I have some odd people to please here." [N. II., 116.]

THOMAS TOLL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to [the EARL OF NEWCASTLE].

1642, December 27. Cawood.—“Your free and noble expressions of doing me so many great and real favours shall make me endeavour, either to requite them or be extremely thankful for them. The gentleman I wrote to is very sensible of those offices you were pleased to promise, and will not I hope be wanting in anything that befits an honest man or a good subject, but the business being of so high concernment as his good name and very being he desires to have some time to consider with himself before he can give a full and perfect answer, and it shall be with all the convenient speed that is possible. In the mean time he wished me to assure your Lordship, that whatsoever others may whisper to his Majesty, it shall be found that he hath none more real and firm unto his person and service than he and his family will be, and that he hopes that his Majesty conceives that what he hath done was only to discharge the public trust imposed upon him and not any disaffection to his service. He likewise returns your Lordship many thanks for your nobleness in not forgetting your old friend, as too many in these troublesome times take occasion to do. I hope a little delay can be no great prejudice to the business, but that you will be pleased not to think that there is anything intended to his Majesty and the Commonwealth by your Lordship's most humble servant." [N. II., 119.]

SIR RICHARD SAMWELL, JOHN CREWE, and EDWARD HARBY to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, December 27. Northampton.—Mr. Francis Gray of Wellingborough was seized the last night being one that hath not contributed towards the defence of the kingdom and was supposed to nourish a faction against the Parliament, of which now there is good proof, for upon his apprehending the town rose in arms and killed two of our men. More forces being sent presently from Northampton to suppress those in arms Mr. Sawyer a Deputy Lieutenant and Captain for the town of Northampton that went with them was shot in the neck and fell from his horse, but we hear there is hope of his life. This so enraged the soldiers against Mr. Gray, who—as they conceive—was the occasion of this ill accident that befell their captain, that they generally declare they will pull down the house where he is and kill him. We therefore thought it fit—the tumult still continuing at Wellingborough—to remove him from thence and desire that he may be kept in safe custody. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 904.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 120.]

HENRY NEVILL to the INHABITANTS OF LIDDINGTON, STOKE, and 1642, December 28. Holt.—“I being your neighbour, and hearing of the calamity that hath befallen Wellingborough, lately plundered by the soldiers of Northampton and took all they could carry away I could no less than give you notice of it, that you may provide to defend yourselves. Upon Tuesday last they did it, and have declared themselves that they are for these parts before they return.” [N. II., 121.]

FRANCIS PIERREPONT to his brother WILLIAM PIERREPONT.

JOHN ASHE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642, December 30. Freshford.—I forward these letters from Ireland, from the Earl of Cork, one written by himself the other two from the rebels of Limerick (two of which are those of Thomas White and the Earl of Cork, dated September 21 and 30, ante, p. 63). The reason I send them is that about the end of June upon the petition of Mr. Latimer Sampson, Mr. Mounsell's brother-in-law, you ordered that two Irishmen taken on suspicion at Minehead, named White and Clansy should be kept in safe custody till the House ordered their enlargement, which was done to gain the release of the said Mr. Mounsell. This order Judge Foster when on circuit respected and told the gaoler to keep them in safe custody and advised them to labour with their friends at Limerick for the release of Mr. Mounsell, it appearing that one was a son and the other a kinsman to those that kept him in prison, and that they were here employed as factors and agents for those and others the principal rebels of Limerick. They thereupon wrote to their friends in Limerick by Thomas Moore, the bearer of this, Mr. Mounsell's man, to obtain his release, but they also wrote to their friends in London, and obtained through them an order for their enlargement (See Commons' Journals, ii. 714), much beside mine and my friend's expectation. This Mr. Mounsell now in miserable captivity is my father's sister's son, and hath lost an estate in Ireland near the value of 10,000*l.*, out of which he was to pay his brothers' and sisters' portions, who are now all undone and live upon the charity of their friends. I request therefore that you will issue an order for the apprehending and imprisoning all those mentioned in Lord Cork's letter, and also the said White and Clansy in case they can be taken.

Postscript.—The bearer will present you with a certificate from the Commissary of Munster, showing that he hath delivered into the store house at Youghall 49 barrels of his master's beef at the price of 56*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.* which money he could not get in Ireland. I therefore request that he may receive the money from the officers appointed for the service in London. [N. II., 123.]

Colonel ARTHUR GOODWIN, HENRY BULSTRODE, SIR RICHARD INGOLDSBY, SIR WILLIAM ANDREWES, RICHARD SERJEANT, THOMAS TYRRILL, and SIR THOMAS SANDERS to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], January 2. Aylesbury.—Enclosing intercepted letters. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 915.) "The Collectors of the Subsidy in this county have received the like commands, which, as it is a violation of an Act made this very Parliament corroborated by Protestations since published in his Majesty's name so it is in a more particular measure prejudicial to many of this county who have advanced the money beforehand for the benefit of the kingdom, and are designed that money to reimburse themselves. Wherein we humbly beseech some course may be taken for the indemnity of ourselves, and of those of this county who have been assisting herein." Signet. Seal. [N. II., 125.] Enclosed :

i. The KING to the HIGH SHERIFF OF SUFFOLK.

1642, December 3. Oxford.—Warrant commanding him to take into custody from the collectors for that County such portion of the 400,000*l.* as was in their hands. Sign Manual. Signet. [N. I., 6.]

ii. The KING to JOHN, BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

[1642], in the 18th year of our reign, December 28. Oxford.—Warrant desiring him to collect and remit immediately to Oxford his own Tithes, and the Tithes of his Diocese. Sign Manual. Signet. [N. II., 11.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to [the EARL OF NEWCASTLE].

1642[-3], January 2. Cawood.—"Since I could not be so happy as to attend you myself without a whole country's talking, a fitter mean could not have been found than by this noble gentleman whom you will find to deal really and plainly and not like a pedant, and, my Lord, it shall not need for to do otherwise, for with faith and honour to serve the King and the Commonwealth is all our ambition, and to leave that to posterity which our ancestors left us, an untainted name. We have Cæsars and Solomons as highly deceived as yours, although our Secretary Stockdale thinks he knows all as he directs all to our General. I shall not need to trouble your Lordship but leave all that to the bearer, only bewail the unhappiness of these distractions, that hinders from attending upon your Lordship your most faithful humble servant." Seal. [N. II., 126.]

BRIAN MIDDLETON TO SIR WILLIAM SHEFFIELD.

[1642-3], January 3.—Acknowledging his note conveyed by Mr. Banks now a prisoner in Leeds. "There are not any rents received nor are you to expect any—as I fear—this long time. The payments towards His Majesty's army are great, York 12,000*l.* besides assessments very heavy to poor tenants. P. B. . . was redeemed from imprisonment by payment of 100*l.* besides plundered at T. by the other side. If God relieve not speedily, this country is wasted by plunderings, pillaging, robbing in the highways, and common charges, so as you are not to expect moneys from hence, till these storms be over." Seal. [N. II., 127.]

PETER SEALE, Mayor, and JOHN BENGER, Sheriff, of Southampton,
to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], January 3. Southampton.—Enclosing several proclamations concerning which they ask directions. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 915.) Signet. Seal. [N. II., 128.]

Captain ANTHONY WILLOUGHBY to the PARLIAMENT.

1642[-3], January 5. His Majesty's fort near Galway.—Commending the bearer William Boughton, who had been there about six months, and had given directions for some outworks lately made about the fort. He will be able fully to inform you of the situation of this fort and what advantages may be taken against it, either by the town or other enemies. [N. II., 129.]

— to HENRY MULLINER, Taylour, at his house over against Magdalene College, Cambridge.

1642[-3], January 7. York. [? Oxford.]—"Though it was our men's misfortune to be so treacherously used at Winchester, yet to give them their due, no men could show more gallantry then they did in that action, for when they saw the enemy draw up so strong, being all engaged Sir Richard Willis, Sir Jhon Smith—men of undaunted resolution—with 18: more stood, whilst my Lord Grandison with the other forces made their retreat, and being thrice charged by entire troops still bravely repulsed the enemy and broke them in Winchester; they spoiled the Church to the value of 7,000*l.* and which hath not been heard amongst heathen, they broke the leaden tombs wherein the bones of the Saxon Kings were kept for a great monument of Antiquity, and with these they broke and defaced all the glass windows.

At Chichester they used the same perfidious treachery they had formerly shown at Winchester, and notwithstanding Sir William Waller who commanded in chief their forces—consisting of 2,500 horse and foot—had subscribed these articles, that the gentlemen commanders should go out of the town on horse back with their swords, the common soldiers on foot, leaving their arms and colours behind them undefaced—for they had burnt them at Winchester—yet when he entered he observed none of these, but presently seized upon all the commanders as prisoners, and pillaged them of everything: the only thing the besieged wanted was powder, and the true affection of the Townsmen who basely forsook them: the chiefest loss was the persons of the Bishop and some of the chief gentlemen of the country, with my Lord Crawford's troop consisting of 40: and no more, the choicest men of that Troop being here, either actually employed, or expecting employment in the army: all the soldiers there were not above 300: too great a loss; that same weeke some 1500 of them came into Banbury, we having 400 in the castle, but upon Prince Rupert's approach on Friday was seven night they left that place, stealing away in the night; yet we took one of their colours and 20: prisoners.

On Saturday last there fell in some 2,000 of them—out of Cicester (Cirencester)—into Sir John Byron's quarter at Burford whom he put to the flight with 14 men, killed 20: not granting quarter to any. In this night service Sir John got a noble scar in the face. The same day the mint came hither with good store of money already coined, and plate, his Majesty hath given his foot a week's pay.

On the Wednesday following the Aldermen come hither with their nonsensical petition. His Majesty asked them how they could so confidently secure him, who could not secure themselves: wise Alderman Garret told the King that he had many times promised to secure their religion, laws and liberties. Sir, said he, could we be but secure and assured that your Majesty would do so, we should soon make an end of this business; at which all the court blurted right out, the Gracious King sweetly replying; I know not how to make you confide in me; you shall do well to believe those that lie least. The King would not return his answer by them, but sent one Herne with it, who went in coach with them, they promising his Majesty that Herne should read it publickly at a Common Hall, because there hath been formerly such art used to smother his Majesty's other gracious answers. Having taken their leave of his Majesty as they came through the court de guard they offered the soldiers a piece. They answered bravely that his Majesty suffered them not to want money, yet if they had been as hare as the Parliament soldiers are, till they gave a better testimony of their affection to his Majesty they scorned to take any Roundhead's money in England. Which high piece of bravery pleased his Majesty so well, that he hath sent to inquire who it was that made the answer that so he may reward them. There is great hopes the prentices will give up to his Majesty these 4. grand incendiaries that he hath pitched upon. Either the last clause of denying his protection to the merchants will work, or inevitable prove the ruin of all trade. It is a high strain and of dangerous consequence, but no course must be left unattempted; if this work not with the merchants nothing will. On Thursday there came a prentice to the King with a copy of their petition, and of their band of association; now it begins to work like a Scottish prank. This day Haunpden's lieutenant-colonel was taken by a party of my Lord Northampton's men who lie at Banbury. We hear that the man is a gallant old soldier and an honest man, and that he was not unwillingly taken, having given notice before that he intended to go that way to London. That which confirms me is that now he is a prisoner only in Sir Jacob Ashly his house, too honourable a lodging for any traitor.

The great newes are expected from Scotland, there was a general meeting of all the Estates there on Wednesday last, the result of which will let us know how they intend to behave themselves in this great business, whether the King's superlative goodness hath taught them a new lesson of obedience, or whether they intend to return to their old trade: one scurvy symptom of which is that it being put to vote at the council table, whether his Majesty's answer with the Parliament's incentive to rebellion by desiring their brotherly assistance should be printed together and read in all churches—being the only favour his Majesty desired—it was carried for the King but by one voice, so prevalent belike amongst them is the Parliament's golden rhetoric. But I hope though all the traitors there were devils—I am sure they are not far from it except they mend their manners—there will still be found in that kingdom so many loyal hearts as will make them eat their bread in order. In this vote Argyle and Chancellor Londoun showed themselves plainly against the King; I could name a third as pernicious as either though he thinks he walks in the clouds. The Scots Commissioners are now here with his Majesty, one of them, my Lord Lothian is going in an embassy to France sent by the kingdom, and is here now expecting his Majesty's approbation. I think the King will not be very difficult in the suite, as glad to be rid of him.

I have not need to write London news, though our intelligence even of their actions is not inferior to yours. The rencontre betwixt my Lord Say and Northumberland, his resolute answer, and the other's pressing to have him called to the bar—which he could not effect—together with the vast sum of 600*l.*—3: by Kimbolton, 2: by Brooke, and one by old Say—subscribed by the Lords—for as for Rochester his 5,000*l.* is all one as if he had subscribed 50: being able to pay neither—I know is as old with you as that my Lady Essex hath brought my Lord a young heir. When his Majesty read the first news of it, In troth, said his Majesty, I think he is no more the father of it than I am, and, Gentlemen here I clear myself of it before you all.

On Wednesday last as old Say went to the House the prentices came flocking about him for an accomodation; Gentlemen, says he, this is not the way. God, my Lord, said they, this was the way, and this shall be the way.

Yesterday the Prince marched from hence with 5 regiments of horse, 2 of dragooners to Burford where he was to joine with the Marquess of Hertford his forces—consisting of 600: horse, 250: dragooners, and 1,500: foot. The design is for Ciseister (Cirencester), with God's blessing. I question not the success, if the rogues run not before we come, they have in the towne 2,000 men and 3 piece of caannon. Do but think what a case I am in, my horse being lame.

I got Mr. Baly created doctor, but made him promise 5*l.* for books to our library.

Fail not to send every weck, for now we shall have daily store of action. Oxford and Reading are so strongly fortified that we should not be afraid of Essex' whole army before either place. Yesternight a number of the chief gentlemen of Her[t]fordshire presented to his Majesty a brave petition for his Majesty's assistance and protection against all seditious schismatical rebels which the king accepted most graciously and hath returned a brave answer.

I hope the high sheriff brings both along with him, as he doth the London petition, and his Majesty's answer together with my Lord Digby his brave apology." [N. II., 132.]

SIR GILBERT GERRARD, Governor of Brill, to the HIGH CONSTABLES OF COTTESLOE HUNDRED.

1642[-3], January 7 and 8.--Warrants, the first requiring them to summon the Trained Bands and all able-bodied men to appear with such arms as they can provide at Brill on Wednesday next, the second requiring them to have 100 men there on Thursday next with spades and pickaxes, or to provide payment at 10*d.* a day for every man short. [N. XIII., 116.]

HUMPHREY DITTON, Mayor, to MICHAEL OLDSWORTH.

1642[-3], January 8, Salisbury.—Narrating the escape of Mr. Wroughton from the gaol by means of eight or nine soldiers part of a body that were passing through to Exeter to be under the command of Colonel Northcoat. Seal. [N. II., 130.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to [the EARL OF NEWCASTLE].

1642[-3], January 9. Cawood.—“You may if you please peruse this inclosed Copy, and by it perceiv what is already done, an other to that purpose went from an other place. I hope no just nor honest man can dislike it for he that desires not a good peace deserves ill of this poor country that hath given him his subsistence. My Lord, there is no man that hath any reasonable share in the commonwealth can desire that either side should be absolute conquerors, for it will be then as it was betwixt Cæsar and Pompey whosoever had the better the Roman Liberty was sure to have the worse. I honour the king as much as any and love the Parliament, but do not desire to see either absolute conquerors, it is too great a temptation to courses of will and violence. My Lord, there is one thing more, which I fear much, that if the honorable endeavours of such powerful men as yourself do not take place for a happy peace the necessitous people of the whole kingdom will presently rise in mighty numbers and whosoever they pretend for at first, within a while they will set up for themselves, to the utter ruin of all the nobility and gentry of the kingdome. I speak not this merely at random, the west part of this county affords mighty numbers of them, which I am very confident you will see necessitated and urged to rise in far greater bodies than these. The armies that are already gathered here, necessity teaches to seek a subsistence, and if this unruly rout have once cast the rider, it will run like wildfire in the example through all the counties of England. I shall humbly desire your pardon for this great digression, and for my overweening to propose these things to a judgment so much greater than mine, but your Lordship's favours as they have obliged so they have imboldened

Your most faithfull affectionate servant.” [N. II., 131.]

SIR GILBERT PYKERINGE and SIR EDWARD HARTOPP to —.

1642[-3], January 9.—When Lord Grey demanded of Mr. Nevil of Holt that all those in his house who had taken up arms should be delivered up, he proposed that his Lordship should permit the gentlemen to leave the house that the men who were there might fight it out, and also said that “he believed the force brought against him to be such that he was ill able to resist. Notwithstanding rather than yield to dishonourable propositions he would make his house his grave, and therein give an example to the rest of the gentlemen of that county to stand out in defence of their liberty.” [N. XIII., 117.]

The HOUSE OF COMMONS to SEVERAL COUNTIES.

Colonel ARTHUR GOODWIN, SIR RICHARD INGOLDSBY, THOMAS TYRRILL, and RICHARD SERJEANT to BULSTRODE WHITELOCKE and RICHARD WINWOOD.

1642[-3], January 11. Aylesbury.—Concerning the attempt by Prince Rupert on Cirencester, and the 100*l.* seized by them due from Mr. Henley to Mr. Coker, and enclosing two warrants of Sir Gilbert Garratt, Governor of Brill. (Printed in Grey, iii. 396.) Signed Seal. [N. II., 133.]

Captain RICHARD LEE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], January 13, 11 at night. Tavistock.—(To the same effect and in parts in the same words as the next letter). Seal. [N. II., 135.]

FRANCIS BULLER, Colonel WILLIAM STRODE, and JOHN PYNE to the EARL OF STAMFORD.

Same date and place.—“We have now opened our desired way—New Bridge—into Cornwall and have entered that country with our forces and persons this afternoon, a work of some difficulty by reason of the arch that was broken down, and the strong guards and works against us, which we obtained by passing a party of dragoons and horse by a ford and facing and playing upon them with our foot till they were both ready to fall on together which they did very bravely, killed two of them, forced Captain Hartgill into the river, where he was drowned, and took 41 prisoners, whereof Lieutenant Greenway was the principal man, besides 40 horses and 50 muskets at least. . . . The bridge we have made good with some of our foot and returned to this place, whence to-morrow we intend to march on New Bridge into Cornwall to Cargreen with all our forces—except Major Worth's company which we leave to guard that bridge and this town—to join with Colonel Ruthen for Saltash or what else he shall appoint. We find our soldiers very stout and prompt to fight and had we your Lordship's presence we should think no work in Cornwall too hard for us to do. We had only one man shot in the arm and hope [he] will soon be cured." Signed. Seal. In the Margin; "I am now, by God's assistance, on my march and hope to be with the van of my army to-morrow night. In the mean I shall not be wanting with my best industry to accomplish this good work, and so I send you this letter to confirm my hopes. Stanforde." [N. II., 136.]

SIR CHRISTOPHER YELVERTON, SIR GILBERT PYKERINGE, JOHN CREWE and RICHARD KNIGHTLEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], January 14. Northampton.—"My Lord Spencer mustered and trained to-day one-half of this county here. . . . The Trained Bands made a full appearance and were very well armed." The volunteers were of two sorts, some armed to the number of about 550, others unarmed, who expressed great affection to the service. These were not numbered, but were thought to be many more than the others. We go to-morrow to Kettering and the next day to Oundle. Signed. Seal. [N. II., 137.]

JOHN HOCKEWILL and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], January 14. Exeter.—Stating that their late disbursements on fortifications, ammunition and soldiers' pay had far exceeded the 300*l.* allowed them, that they had raised and expended over 3,000*l.* by way of rate, and that their charges still continue, and therefore petitioning that the subscriptions of the inhabitants on the Propositions be allotted for these services. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 931.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 138.]

Colonel ARTHUR GOODWIN, HENRY BULSTRODE and THOMAS TERRILL to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1642[-3], January 14. Aylesbury.—Explaining that Serjeant-Major Browne had seized Sir William Drake's horses, not knowing that he had a protection from the Speaker, and that they had been sent back. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 920, 921.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 139.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to [the EARL OF NEWCASTLE].

1642[-3], January 15. Cawood.—"I have not yet heard from London since the letter went, but expect it every hour. I doubt not but there may come very good fruits of it and the continued endeavours of such men as desire peace with the King's honour and the public security, and that I hope to see effected through all opposition. . . . You are now great in power with his Majesty, and your advice will sway much, which if you please to make use of to him incline to peace the whole kingdom would be obliged to you, and for the greatness of the work it is the more honour if it be effected, and he that begins well hath half done; nothing is so hard as it seems at first. The propositions for peace go on fast, and I hope the jugglers will be deceived, although I believe cunning enough on all sides. For my part, if I can serve the King and the commonwealth, as a gentleman should do, and be esteemed worthy your Lordship's friendship, it is all I expect, and I shall think it honour enough. I hear of two converts in the Parliament, Hollis and Pierrepont. Our general here thinks you raise men as the sand, and the King of Denmark in a string. It was not like your business at Sheriff Hutton should thrive better, being conducted by three such cavaliers; you will find more such among my countrymen. Our senators here think of saving themselves, as you may well see, we are now so quiet. For the wishes of those gentlemen to me, I thank God, I never thought them valuable; if I had, I could have had them cheap enough. . . . You are he, that I set my rest on as my noble friend, and you shall command me, for I know nothing will come from you but of honour, and you shall never find more truth and gratitude in any that you have obliged than in your most affectionate humble servant." [N. II., 140.]

SIR HUGH CHOLMELEY TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], January 16. Gisbrough.—You have heard of my drawing some forces to Malton, and the defeat they gave the Earl of Newport's troops. "Upon information that Colonel Strickland and Colonel Slingsby were marched to Gisbrough, the principal town in Cleveland, with some troops of horse, and that they called together the Trained Bands of those parts and had summoned Whitby a sea town sixteen miles from that place to receive a garrison, Sir Matthew Boynton being come to me to Malton with two troops of dragoones, I joined to them one more of mine, one hundred and thirty foot and my own troop of horse, and—leaving a garrison in Malton—with these we marched unto Cleveland, and this day purposing to assault the enemy who laid in Gisbrough—as we are informed—with four hundred foot and a hundred horse, they were so confident of their strength as they advanced a mile out of the town to encounter us, and placed their muskietiers under hedges in places of advantage. But after two hours' skirmish we beat them, first from the hedges and then out of the town of which we are now possessed. We have taken above one hundred and twenty prisoners, amongst which Colonel Slingsby and twelve Frenchmen that were troopers;—and praised be God—we have not lost a man nor but two wounded with cuts in the head. I have this night information from Captain Bushell—who I left to command the garrison at Malton—that he hath intelligence the enemy with new forces from York intends suddenly to assault that place, so that I fear I shall be drawn from hence before this country be well settled or my men refreshed. I have now near eighty horse and a troop of dragoones one hundred and thirty foot with me newly raised here, besides the garrisons at Scarbrough and Malton. You will judge these forces must needs require an expense of money. I have drawn what I can from the country, and if supply come not speedily from you, all will dissolve instantly. I have received two hundred pounds of my brother's rents, which I desire may be speedily repaid. I hope my diligence and other carriage in these affairs will shew my former actions did never deserve those representations of them which were in print, nor any belief of them. But as nothing can divert me from serving the Parliament with all fidelity whiles I am in their employment yet I profess it grieves my heart to see how these calamities increase and how I am forced to draw my sword not onely against my countrymen but many near friends and allies some of which I know both to be well affected in religion and lovers of their liberties. And therefore I most humbly beseech the House that they will be pleased to lay hold of all occasions that may produce an accommodation between the King and Parliament, as that the circumstance of time may be considered when his Majesty began to withdraw himself at so great a distance from the Parliament and what person may be conceived to have the greatest power and interest to persuade him to condescend to such propositions as may conduce best to the quieting of these troubles, and if our religion be but firmly settled whether it be not better to let go some things that in right belong to the subject then by insisting upon them have the king and so great a party in the kingdom so unsatisfied as it must produce a civil war." (See Commons' Journals, ii. 938.) [N. II., 141.]

SIR WILLIAM SPRING and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642 [-3], January 17. Bury St. Edmunds.—(The effect appears from Commons' Journals, ii. 934.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 142.]

The KING to the MASTER and WARDENS OF THE COMPANY OF WATERMEN.

1642[-3], January 18. Oxford.—Warrant ordering them to assemble all the Members, Freemen, and Apprentices of the Company at their Common Hall and to read to them the Petition lately received from the City of London with the King's Answer, and his letter to the Sheriffs and the Masters and Wardens of the several Companies. Sign-Manual Signet. [N. I., 7.] (N. I., 8, and 9, are warrants of the same date, identical mutatis mutandis with this, addressed to the Master and Wardens of the Barber-Surgeons' and Carpenters' Companies respectively.)

SIR EDWARD HARINGTON, EVERS ARMINE, CHRISTOPHER BROWNE, ROBERT HORSMAN, and JOHN OSBORNE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1642-3, January, after 19th. Rutland.]—Enclosing two intercepted letters to show why they had not as yet returned estreats upon the payment of the great tax of 400,000*l.* fearing that it might be diverted and misemployed, and desiring the directions of the House, as they feared some of the collectors might be prevailed to part with their collected moneys upon the said letters. Signed. Seal. [N. VIII., 131.] Probably Enclosed :

W. BODENHAM, Sheriff of Rutland, to — SHIELDS.

1642[-3], January 19. Pyall.—Warrant ordering him by virtue of the King's letter, whereof a copy is enclosed, to pay over to himself all sums collected by him on account of the subsidy of 400,000*l.* or other sums lately raised in the County. Signed. (The enclosed letter is in the same terms as that to the Sheriff of Suffolk, enclosed in Colonel Goodwin's of the 2nd instant.) [N. II., 143.]

SIR THOMAS WROTHIE to JOHN PYM.

1642[-3], January 20. Plymouth.—“The Earl of Stamford hath been all this week at Plymouth, in which time he hath been very active and industrious in viewing the works and fortifications of this town, giving and sending of orders and dispatches to his forces in several parts of this county, Cornwall, and Somerset. He hath also passed the river here to Salt Ash and Millbrooke, two towns which the enemy hath lately been possessed of, and in which are now two garrisons of ours placed. He hath been at the house of one Mr. Edgecombe, called Mount Edgecombe . . . who is a great Malignant and sides with the Hoptonians. There are many marks of the battery of our ordnance upon the said house as are also in the town of Salt Ash, but little hurt is done to either . . . Mount Edgecombe is thought to be so considerable for fortification, and to annoy those that shall attempt this town that there is a guard of musketeers protects it and some works are intended speedily to be made there to make it more defensible. Near unto this is a strong and impregnable island called St. Nicholas' island committed to the trust and care of Colonel Carew, is well guarded both with musketeers and ordnance, and of this my Lord General did likewise take a view, and in all these places I attended on him. Concerning the strength of this town I must assure you that it is so fortified both by natural situation and industry and art of men, that it is not inferior in my opinion to any fort in this kingdom; and there is at this time great store of ships lying in the harbour. . . . Happily I have given you some content in the preceding relation, but I must desire you to take it as a preparation . . . to digest the sequel. . . . After the enemy had forsaken Saltash and Lanisdon, it was conceived they would draw towards Pendennis Castle for their refuge and safety. Whereupon our [forces] had order to bend and march that way, and accordingly were quartered at a town in Cornwall, between 8 and 10 miles from Saltash called Liskeard, the enemy being within 3 miles of the same. Yesterday in the morning, our forces . . . marched towards the enemy, all the way being narrow and very dirty lanes, and, as it appears, had neither the help of guides nor scouts, so that on a sudden after their march of 3 miles they fell into an ambush of great disadvantage unto them, which the enemy had laid in a thick wood of a park of my Lord Mohun's joining to the way. As our forces marched beside a dangerous bog and a very high hill and the enemy in number treble beyond ours besides their ordnance, which we wanted, and I fear encouraged by some intelligence of the height of our strength; having all these advantages, the enemy charged furiously upon our forces, and they as magnanimously resaluted them, but in a short time the courage of our forces was abated, and surprised with such a panic fear that both our horse and foot were suddenly routed, and every man divided and dispersed, and ran and rode as fast as fear could carry them towards Saltash. The enemy pursued them eagerly, and in this chase got no small number of our arms, which the fugitives let fall in their flight, and the commanders as well as others tried the goodness of their horses in this chase. Four choice pieces of ordnance we have lost; what number of men is not yet certainly known, but I doubt not a few are taken prisoners; yet it is thought there are but three or four slain. Had our forces delayed this enterprise one day longer, four good pieces of ordnance, which came yesterday too late, with more soldiers had come up to them, and then I am confident that through God's assistance and good advice we had had a glorious victory on the Hoptonian rebels. But the late good success against these wicked ones made some chief commanders depend too much upon the arm of flesh, one cause of the miscarriage of this rash undertaking. Besides this attempt was not only without but against the order of my Lord General. Last of all, and not the least but the greatest of all, I doubt we have not been thankful enough for the late and former deliverances, and therefore God did in this action withdraw himself from our assistance. I doubt that one man of note is either slain or taken prisoner, for we yet miss him. His name is Sir Silston Calmady. . . . Postscript.—Your son is now here very well, and so I hope is my brother . . . We are not so dejected, but we are preparing to pursue our enemies with as much courage and power, both by sea and land, as ever." [N. II., 144.]

JOHN WOGAN to RICHARD ALDWORTH, Mayor of Bristol.

1642[-3], January 20. Wiston.—The desperate condition of this county requires me to apply to you for its relief. "The Malignant parties . . . are already come so near unto our doors, that they have already plundered the estate of Captain Gunter in the very heart of our county, and driven away all his cattle by night under the conduct of one Captain Henry Crowe of the county of Carmarthen, which injurious outrage we know that county would never have dared to attempt against us, but that it is put on by a stronger hand than its own. . . . We have certain intelligence that my Lord Herbert of Ragland with the Earl of Carbery are suddenly raising a force of 8,000 men to make a strong invasion upon us, under all which we are like to suffer. . . . I beseech you to be a means, both by yourself and by moving the chief commanders . . . in your noble city that present supplies may be sent us from your parts. If we had but 2,900 or 3,000 foot and dragoneers to what we have, we would not only drive them out of our country, but make them glad to sit down in their own. It is most requisite that 300 or 400 be instantly sent us, that we may make a defensive business of it till stronger supplies come. It is not our livelihood they aim at, so much as their surprise of our haven of Milford . . . whereby a door may be opened to receive foreign forces to prejudice the troubled state more than themselves can." Postscript.--Desiring that a copy may be sent to the Parliament. SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to JOHN PYM.

1642[-3], February 4. Nantwich.—“Our enraged enemy lay in wait and had prepared an ambuscade for our destruction, but the Lord was pleased to watch over us, and to deliver 100 of them into our hands, both men horses and many arms, amongst which there were three or four captains and divers other considerable prisoners, who do much increase the burden of our care how to dispose of them, seeing we have no place of strength whereunto to retreat, nor where to dispose of them, save only in the Nantwich, which we are about to fortify. We find and hear every day of more and more of their slain and wounded men.” Complaining that two of his best horses with their saddles and pistols, 500 or 600 of his sheep at Chester and many horses had been seized, his house at Chester plundered, and divers of his goods conveyed away and feather beds sold for 20s. apiece. “There are four independent troops here, Mr. Booth’s, Mr. Mainwaring’s, Mr. Duckinfield’s, and Captain Edwardes’. I am in want of some 20 pair of pistols, which if they were supplied I hope I should make my troop near 100. I beseech that Sir John Corbett and Sir Thomas Middleton be sent speedily into Shropshire and Derbyshire to raise some regiments there, to hinder their forces from being employed against us here in this county.” Seal. THEOPHILUS PHILO-BRITANNICUS to ———.

[1642-3, February 9.]—“Noble Sir, since your departure from hence I wrote you a letter . . . if I had known of your bosom friend’s coming to you I should have sent and imparted that which now I cannot, but since you have the conveniency and safety of Mr. Collard’s return hither pray let me receive a final determination and hang no longer in suspense whether anything is to be done or no in that business we spoke [of]. I want nothing but money to effect it, but in case there be either a difficulty in the thing, or a dislike or distrust of me for the action pray let me know. And in case there be some reason which I am ignorant of to hinder what we spoke of, then Mr. Coll[ard] can tell you somewhat I wished him to write to you, which upon the receipt of money I shall bring along with me to you speedily. In a word 350*l.* will serve to effect that which will be an extra-ordinary benefit and advantage, if not a final happy conclusion to what we both desire, which money if you will give Mr. Collard order to furnish me with I'll give him that land and colliery which I spoke to you in security for the same, and speedily come to you well prepared where I shall take a full order for your satisfaction. However pray let me know your positive determination, and of what account and reckoning—if any at all—I am there, which how bad or small soever it be I would willingly repay by this or some other notable way wherein I might be instructed. Your candidness herein I shall take for an extraordinary evidence of your friendship. . . . The news here is that the Commons yesterday carried up their votes to the Lords with reasons declaring their disassent from concurring with their Lordships in a Cessation of Arms and a Treaty. And that upon these reasons the Commons had voted the disbanding both armies presently, and till that were done no Treaty upon the Propositions; which, if his Majesty would assent unto, there should be a Treaty and Cessation of arms as towards a disbanding. One particular circumstance I will acquaint you with in the carriage of this business, which was remarkable. After the Lords had voted a Cessation of arms and a Treaty, the next morning they sent a message to the Commons for a conference to acquaint them with their votes. While the messengers tarried for their answer—which usually is very short, either they will, or they will send an answer by messengers of their own—it was so ordered that Colonel Mannuringe, Captain Hamy, Captain Titchburne, Captain Underwood, Captain Gore, and divers other citizens with Mr. Case and Mr. Woodcock and Burrough with other ministers came to the House of Commons, and desired to be heard, and so delivered some reasons they had, in the behalf of the City, against a Cessation of arms and a Treaty. Whereupon there was a present resolution to call them in, but a debate of almost an hour whether they should be called in before the conference with the Lords or no. After several votes the House was divided, and by ten voices carried to call them in first, and, so they had the preheminance of the Lords. When they were called in Colonel Mannuringe was their spokesman and tendered a paper containing the reasons, but they were commanded to withdraw, and after some debate the paper was received and they returned thanks. You may judge by this what likelihood there is [of] another end save by the sword. If . . . I come to you I shall more enlarge than I dare write. We hear his Majesty had made Sir Ralph Hopton Baron of Glastonbury, but he enjoyed his honour a short space, for he and 600 men more of his are slain before Plymouth. I have him that I send to you upon the exchange yet, and the rest you know of ready to do as I direct them." . . . (See Commons' Journals, ii. 959.) [N. VIII., 140.] (Nalson suggests that the writer is Sir Thomas Peyton.)

[SIR WILLIAM BRERETON] to Captain FRANCIS ROWE.

1642[-3], February 10. Nantwich.—“We have near upon 5 troops of horse in this County, but because they are independent troops and not subject to command it was and is my desire that there may be a major sent down, an honest and conscionable man. We are much disadvantaged for want of such an officer, who is able to order a regiment of horse and if you please to send me a commission to command them

I shall be thereby enabled the better to serve you and shall expect no increase of pay. Shropshire forces lie now at Whitechurch and threaten much to infest us, so also do the Welshmen out of Flint and Denbighshire. If Sir John Corbett were sent into Shropshire and Sir Thomas Middleton into Denbighshire with commission either of them to raise a regiment I hope we should be less oppressed and able to do you better service, and I hope we may be able to give them some assistance. It is exceedingly desired by very many in both counties who so groan under the oppression there that they would be ready to join any who would assist to deliver them out of the hands of their taskmasters. Staffordshire also wants some officer to Command in Chief. There are 2,000 yesterday up in arms there against Stafford as it is said, to whom I was able to afford no more than six or seven commanders, whereby I am much weakened for by reason of the thronging in of foreign forces out of Shropshire and Wales and Lancashire, the Earl of Derby being now at Chester and making his strongest design for Chester, and the Manchester forces not attempting anything to divert him, we must be constrained to raise another regiment, and therefore we could much desire some more Commanders, otherwise for want of more forces the country will be in danger to be overrun and our forces disabled. Postscript.—Captain Barkeley, who commands the king's pinnace called the Swan, is very officious to the Commissioners of Array, and hath promised them two pieces of ordnance to guard Chester. It is said the Commissioners have given him 500*l.* or 1,000*l.* If some speedy care be not taken to prevent him he may do very much mischief. Take care I pray that there may be a Major to order a regiment of horse with some officers of foot sent down, for we have a great need of them, a Lieutenant-Colonel and Serjeant-Major of foot and some Captains and some Lieutenants of foot, and I pray acquaint my Lord Brooke that if he do not come down speedily he loseth a brave opportunity and loseth the hearts of Staffordshire, whom I have much ado to support. Am forced to send every day to them.—Some old soldiers for serjeants would do wondrous well. Now that we have gathered our forces together, we are at extreme want of money, and therefore desire that we may have the benefit of the like orders for raising money in our county as hath been already granted for Yorkshire Buckinghamshire Leicester and in particular for Somersetshire dated January 27, 1642, giving power also to assess Malignants' estates in the said County, which if it be not granted we shall be speedily very much distressed. The names of Commissioners I have already given who are to appoint assessors, Sir George Booth, Sir William Brereton, George Booth, Henry Brooks, William Marbury, Henry Mainwaring, Robert Duckiufield, Henry Vernon, Thomas Stanley, John Crewe, John Bradshaw, Ralph Arderne, Edward Hyde, John Leigh, Thomas Croxton Esquires." (See Commons' Journals, ii. 966.) Signature torn off. [N. II., 94c, but not noticed in Index.]

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS TO LORD INCHQUIN AND THE COUNCIL OF WAR.

1642[-3], February 11. — Acknowledging their letters with the account of the moneys and necessaries furnished by them for the soldiers in Munster to the value of 4,060*l.* and stating that as soon as possible they would take a course for their satisfaction. Draft. [N. XII., 40.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL TO LORD INCHQUIN.

Same date.—Acknowledging his letters of the 12th and 19th of January, to which the House of Commons had directed him to return this answer. They have shipped such a supply of victual and ammunition as was propounded to them by Sir Hardress Waller and others, to be with you within your time limited, and have taken a course—already in execution in London and the adjacent parts—for raising further moneys throughout the Kingdom to be employed solely for the relief of the armies in Ireland, of which the Munster forces are to be ample sharers, so that you shall never be put to treat with the Rebels for a cessation of arms, or to relinquish your interests in that Province. The House is informed that the remains of the foot formerly commanded by Lord Forboys [Forbes] are come to you, and may serve to recruit your regiment, and that he himself is arrived in England, and left his command, which will take away all further competition between you and him. The House will make it their care that you may receive such fruits of your fidelity industry and valour, as may be for your encouragement and advantage. A good while since they voted you to be Governor of Munster and Captain General of the forces there, and presented their vote to the Lords for their concurrence, which they intend to do again, and when it is granted, will take care, that with the burden of that government you be invested with the privileges and profits incident thereto. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 961.) Draft. [N. XII., 41.]

Captain RICHARD SWANLEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], February 14. ENDYMION PORTER to [the EARL OF NEWCASTLE].

1642[-3], March 2. Oxford.—“I beseech your Lordship not to wonder at this tattered Mercury . . . for we have had such ill-luck in our cavaliers, as we thought this way the best to secure letters . . .

* Sic in original, but probably a mistake for b5 = for.

I am extreme glad that the Queen is safe arrived at York, and now I hope your Lordship will not suffer Tadcaster to be fortified nor the rebels to domineer as they have done . . . I have long wished to place my wife in the Queen's bedchamber, I beseech your Lordship to do in it as you shall think best and oblige me according your accustomed goodness. I have sent your Lordship the Queen's letter here inclosed and with it a copy of excellent verses." [N. II., 165.]

(These letters were interecepted at Coventry (See Commons' Journals, ii. 997); the Queen's is the preceding.)

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1642[-3], March 2. Beverley.—“There shall nothing that may any-way accomodate the Queen, receive the least impediment from me. If you please that any may be sent to Hull, the cellars shall all be open to them, and for the way of conveying it, if I may know how you intend it I shall give it all the furtherance I can. For Sir William Fairfax, although there be some truth in wine, yet it is not all truth. There was something in your last letter that something troubled me, which was some doubt that promise would not be kept upon the cessation. If you mean it of me, then am I very unhappy to suffer so much in your opinion which I so much value, for I confess I value my word above all [be]sides. I am very sorry to hear that your Lordship hath any intention to make this poor cuntry the seat of war. I am sure the clamours of all our friends and neighbours undone by it will make us ashamed to be seen with those that are the actors in it . . . These counsels may get your soldiers pillages, yourself neither friends nor strength. I know well the fountain of these violent counsels, and am sure all his friends that was led to it sunk under the burthen. For myself and friends nothing can be of that bad consequence to us, as the utter ruin of all our friends tenants and neighbours, we can then be no worse, we are fitted for desperation. This is all submitted to your deep judgement.” Scal. [N. II., 163.]

THOMAS [LORD] GREY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 2. Northampton.—Sent with Mr. Henry Noell, second son to Lord Camden, and Mr. Henry Skipwith. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 989.) “I drew some troops and dragoons into Rutland and came to Lord Camden's house, where I stayed. There was great store of arms and ammunition, but it was removed a little before my coming. His Lordship was also gone from thence and his eldest son was then in Newark, where he still remains. Afterwards I marched to Mr. Henry Noell's house in North Luffenham, where” he “and Mr. Henry Skipwith with about 200 men, 120 armed with guns and the rest with pikes and clubs stood upon their guard. At my first coming thither I sent a trumpeter to Mr. Noell to demand his person arms and horses who returned me answer, that he would stand on his defence while he had breath. Before I used any violence I sent to him the second time that the shedding of blood might be prevented. He sent me answer again, he would die before he would yield, and thereupon we had a skirmish about an hour and Mr. Catesby Lieutenant to one of my captains was shot from the house and died thereof. The next day a common soldier was shot dead, and some others hurt, but afterwards, the house being shot through, they called for quarter and yielded, and then I entered the house and seized Mr. Noell and his arms and Mr. Skipwith . . . With much difficulty I preserved their lives, but the soldiers were so enraged I could not save their goods.” (See Lords' Journals, v. 641, and 5th Report of the Historical MSS. Commission, p. 76.) Scal. [N. II., 162.]

SIR GEORGE CHUDLEIGH and four others to the COMMITTEE OF LORDS AND COMMONS FOR THE SAFETY OF THE KINGDOM.

1642[-3], March 3. Plymouth.—“The great blessing of God upon our late endeavours, hath rendered the undisciplined forces of this county manageable to defend it against a small invasion. But consisting chiefly of Trained Bands altogether incapable to follow our victory into Cornwall for many unanswerable reasons, as the case stands yet, therefore we have thought fit to accept of our enemy's importunity for a treaty, hoping to increase our volunteers, and to get supplies for our trained soldiers, whose affections to their families and husbandry carry them from us daily in very great numbers with their arms.” We ask for arms and power to use Martial Law. ENGAGEMENT

[1642-3, March.]—To be taken by the Commander of the Parliamentary forces in Devon not to advance into Cornwall, Somerset or Dorset during the proceedings on the intended treaty and for three days after their termination. Copy of a Draft. [N. XIII., 126.]

GR. PARK, Mayor, to the COMMITTEE OF LORDS AND COMMONS FOR THE SAFETY OF THE KINGDOM.

1642[-3], March 8. Exeter.—“On Monday last the first cessation for seven days expired, and then another for 20 days more concluded on, and solemnly ratified and confirmed on each side by the reception of the Blessed Sacrament. All things proceeded very well . . . but unexpectedly this instant came to my hands a letter from Plymouth dated there this morning, by which I am certainly informed that yesterday on the meeting of the treaters . . . the Cornish made new propositions on their part, which hinders the proceedings of the treaty. In brief it is this; that the cessation shall be a stand still, but no removal out of either county, so that Somerset and Dorset in case of danger cannot be assisted. The consideration of the disbanding of the most part of our forces the day before caused the treaters of our side to harken unto them, and yield further to the Cornish, that a pacification for the four counties of Somerset, Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall be endeavoured, and an association made not to invade each other, but mutually to defend each other against all forces whatsoever. To this end letters are sent both by the Cornish and our treaters into Somerset and Dorset, and the meeting concerning this business appointed to be here in Exeter Tuesday next” being the 14th instant. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 998.) [N. 11., 166.]

THOMAS GEWEN, CHARLES VAUGHAN, TRISTRAM ARSCOTT, and THOMAS BOONE, to FRANCIS ROUS and EDMOND PRIDEAUX.

1642[-3], March 9. Exeter.— . . . “Our County was almost lost till their—Sir Ralph Hopton and his complices—retreat from Exeter. The . . . Earl of Stamford being a stranger in these parts was soon waited on by a considerable army of the trained and others to the number of 13,000 or 14,000; so well charging and scattering the enemy at Modbury that our greatest and worthiest gentry there acknowledged their valour and resolution such as they might hereafter well trust as of men willing to fight and spirited to the work. Yet when the enemy fled in a small number from thence and from about Plymouth unto Tavistock in a very weak and undone condition, where without effusion of more blood . . . the work might have been finished for these parts . . . there fell in—God knows how—a treaty of cessation first for six or seven days and then renewed for 20 or 21 more. All the most certain information we have is that the Cavaliers in Cornwall do still fortify themselves and prepare for us, expecting—as is reported—further accesses of strength from Wales or elsewhere. . . . We hear confidently spoken that this cessation was not approved by our said Lord General nor by the chiefest of our Deputy Lieutenants, and we are sure that some of them consented not.

. . . . The general dislike that we find both in city and county of this cessation assures us that there is a strong party that will readily observe the orders of the Parliament to the uttermost of their lives and fortunes." (See Commons' Journals, ii. 998.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 167.]

RICHARD SAUNDERS and others to JOHN PYM.

1642[-3], March 9. Exeter.—Acknowledging the care of Parliament for the city and in particular "that late timely provision for disappointing the Assize . . . which had it not been prevented had occasioned great jealousies what the issue might have been of so great a concourse of people diversely affected. Now so it is that there being a cessation of arms agreed upon for 20 days more between the Commissioners of Devon and Cornwall, and during the said time a treaty, the same is appointed . . . to be held here . . . where . . . the Commissioners aforesaid with Sir Ralph Hopton and divers other gentlemen of Semersset and Dorset-shire are appointed to meet on Tuesday next about an Association, as we are informed, but of what nature we know not. We therefore considering how much the safety of this city may be herein concerned in regard of the considerable number of Malignant inhabitants; with the unavoidable concourse of many people diversely affected likely to be in this city at that time—whatsoever provision by fore-agreement be made to the contrary notwithstanding—and the daring, violent, and desperate spirits of the prisoners within us, wherewith two prisons are full—some being men of very dangerous considerableness—" desire you to represent the sum of this to the House that we may receive such order as they may think fit. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 998.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 168.]

SIR JOHN HOTHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 9. Hull.—Thanking the House for voting 6,000*l.* for the garrison and observing that unless he has it quickly he is no whit the better. "Tomorrow being Saturday I shall make some shift to pay, then either I must billet upon the town or the soldier must not eat. . . . The Queen is at York. The enemy keeps still the passes at Stamford Bridge and Malton to pass into this East Riding at their pleasure. We have at Beverley about 900 horse and foot, much too weak if the enemy fall on to make good that town. They have plundered all where they come, but above all Sir William Strickland, and two near kinsmen of his. Sir William hath lost above 4,000*l.* in his goods and all his evidence seized upon." (See Commons' Journals, ii. 1000.) Seal. [N. II., 169.]

SIR JOHN HOTHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 11. Hull.—Enclosing a packet of intercepted letters from the Low Countries to Mr. Jermyn, and again pressing for money to pay his soldiers. "My credit you have broke by not paying those small sums my necessity here forced me for your service to take up." Seal. [N. II., 170.]

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS to the MAYOR and DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS OF EXETER.

1642[-3], March 11.—Forbidding them to admit Sir Ralph Hopton or any of his adherents into Exeter. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 999.) Draft. [N. XII., 49.]

RICHARD ALDWORTH, Mayor, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 13. Bristol.—Desiring payment of 568*l.* 1*l.*s. expended by him for billeting and transporting Lord Kerry's regiment and of 400*l.* for the relief of Duncannon Castle, and stating that owing to the large sums the City had expended on works and ammunition and the 3,000*l.* lent on the Public Faith they were unable to advance the 2,000*l.* now demanded by Sir William Waller and also to supply Colonel Fiennes' necessary occasions for their own defence. Signed. Seal. [N. II., 174.]

SIR GEORGE GRESLEY, THOMAS GELL and NATHANIEL HALLOWES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 13. Derby.—(For the substance of most of this letter see Commons' Journals, iii. 5.) This business is "when our Colonel Sir John Gell upon the sad occasion of the unhappy death of that noble Lord Brooke was sent for post to Lichfield to settle those then almost distracted soldiers, where yet the necessity of that service continues him, and though by his being there those soldiers were continued together and that town and divers prisoners—some of great quality—taken, yet those men would hence take an occasion to thrust him and all his forces out of this county." Signed. [N. II., 171.]

EDMOND PRIDEAUX and ANTHONY NICOLL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 15. Exeter.—We arrived on Monday night, and gave your commands to the Mayor not to admit any of the Cornish that were to treat or any other that had borne arms against the Parliament into the city. He willingly obeyed and the next morning some of them, who came to the gates, were denied admittance and sent away under a convoy to an inn in a neighbouring village. The letter from the Earl of Stamford with the enclosed papers will give you a clear account of their full proceedings, of the Articles whereon they treated and of their reasons for undertaking it, and will show the advantage they hope to gain by it. Of those expected from Somerset and Dorset only Sir Thomas Trenchard, Mr. Browne and Mr. Fitz-james came, the rest were dispersed by Sir William Waller's forces. From Somerset there was none appearance of any. We find some difficulties punctually at present to observe your instructions, and presume we may claim a little liberty for the time and manner of putting them in execution. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 8, 11.) Signed. Seal. [N. II., 171*b.* Omitted in Index.]

The EARL OF WARWICK to MILES CORBETT.

1642[-3], March 16. Chatham.—Concerning a warrant for staying certain horses and money pretended to be the Duke of Vendosme's, but which came from Somerset House from the friars. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 4.) Seal. [N. II., 172.]

[SIR JOHN HOTHAM] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 17. Hull.—I shall do my best for the relief of Mr. Bastwick and Captain Ludlow, and shall send today a trumpeter to offer any two officers we have in exchange for them. They have heretofore insisted on the release of Commissary Windham for them, which I cannot agree to, as he is such a man that they have few like him. I enclose extracts of "two letters written to two merchants in this town of good quality from Hamburg. If there be any danger from the Danes it will be needful we should be well provided here. I have written divers times for some ordnance . . . but yet can get none. I wrote this the rather, because a member of your House told a shipmaster of this town that if they had not ordnance it was the governor's fault, for it was denied to no town in England. I hope yourself and divers of the House will witness it was not my fault and indeed we stand in great need of them. I wrote concerning the billeting of the soldiers . . . we think if the soldier have no money to buy meat he must eat somewhere, and that this town that now enjoys so much safety and trade may very well not think much for the billeting of so few soldiers for some time, till the House shall find fit to satisfy for it. The poor town of Beverley upon a single motion from myself and my [son] yielded to billet almost as many of our forces there till we can repay them out of an assessment we have laid in the East Riding for the subsistence of the forces we have abroad. The other day, divers Papists, as I have heard, made suit to my Lord of Newcastle to be employed to pillage a little house and of mine, which accordingly they did and took away all my breed of horses and that I had there, but in their return Sir Hugh Cholmeley with his troop of horse and dragoons charged them very gallantly, broke their horse all to pieces, killed divers, took prisoners "divers officers" who are now coming by water from Scarborough to Hull as prisoners. What I have lost in this business I know not, but I shall do my best, that upon these Papists I light they shall neither carry it to heaven or hell." (Parts torn and lost.) (See Commons' Journals, iii. 10.) [N. II., 173.] Probably Enclosed:

1642[-3], February 21. Hamburgh.—“Great preparations are made by his Majesty of Denmark both by sea and land. By report 20 sail . . . is or very speedily will be ready. For my part I know not the design . . . We have it here for certain reported that” he “took up at the last Steel Mart 150,000 dollars at interest.” Extract. [N. XIII., 120.]

THE PARLIAMENT TO THE COMMITTEES APPOINTED TO TREAT WITH THE KING.

1642[-3], March 18.—Instructions. (Printed in Rushworth, iii. 2. 175.) [N. XV., 169.]

THE EARL OF ESSEX TO WILLIAM STRODE.

1642[-3], March 18. Windsor.—Supporting Sir Hugh Pollard's petition to be released on bail. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 9.) Signed. [N. II., 175.]

SIR EDWARD BOYS TO THE COMMITTEE OF LORDS AND COMMONS FOR THE SAFETY OF THE KINGDOM.

1642[-3], March 21. Dover Castle.—Sending up a Scotch gentleman and a Frenchman, desiring money to build the wall of the Castle which is lately fallen, and to pay his soldiers, and asking what he is to pay his minister. Signed. Seal. [N. II., 176.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to [the EARL OF NEWCASTLE].

1642[-3], March 22. Hull.—“I have sent this other letter to excuse me for not granting Sir Marmaduke Langdale a safe conduct, and to deal freely with your Lordship he shall never have one from me, nor do I care to treat with him, I know him too well. For a letter to the Queen, that I will certainly come in and at such a time, I cannot do it. This enclosed you may show her, if you please, or else burn, for your Lordship knows that I ever said unto you that I would do anything which might further his Majesty's service in the peace of the kingdom, and that if the Parliament did stand upon unreasonable terms with him, I would then declare myself against them and for him, but otherwise to leave my party that I had set up with, and no real cause given that an honest man may justify himself for so doing before God and the world I never would do it, although I endured all the extremities in the world, for I well know no man of honour or worth will ever think such a man worthy of friendship or trust. For the prejudice you undergo for not spoiling the East Riding truly you have put an obligation upon me by sparing it thus long, but rather than your Lordship shall suffer anything of prejudice either in your honour or affairs I shall not desire the thing any longer, but you may take what course you please and we shall do so for our defence. For Sir Hugh Cholmley and his manner of coming in every man must satisfy his own conscience and then all is well, all are not of one mind. . . . If it please God that we ever join and that I be thought worthy your friendship, it shall be seen you have got a friend that will not leave you for every wind or hope or fear. . . . We shall now soon see whether the King will be refused just things, which if he be, I shall take no long time to resolve. If the Parliament offer all fairness and it be obstinately refused truly I will not forsake them, come the worst that can come, for this I conceive is just and honest and from that ground it is not fit for him that values his honour to secede. For my Lord Fairfax I do not think Nevill will speed, for he cannot offer him to be so well as he is, and sure fear will never do it. . . . I know your worth so great that you will not value less for his plain dealing your most humble affectionate servant. Postscript.—For my Lord of Dunbar's son he is delivered as a prisoner to the Mayor's prison for entertaining a priest, and so I cannot yet release him.” [N. II., 177.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1642[-3], March 22. Hull.—“I shall desire you to excuse me that I cannot grant a safe conduct to Sir Marmaduke Langdale, for I am sure his last coming to Malton set people's tongues too much at liberty. Besides if he should be admitted hither all the country hereabouts, that thinks he hath been the cause of their suffering, would all say that their suspicions are now grown certainties, seeing Sir Marmaduke Langdale admitted but within the walls of Hull. . . . Postscript.—And for the business it will be better done without such a meeting.” Seal. [N. II., 178.]

SIR WILLIAM WALLER to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1642[-3], March 24. Nottingham.—Asking liberty for Captain Harold Scrimshire or his lieutenant to transport 160 muskets. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 22.) Signed. [N. II., 180.]

EDMOND PRIDEAUX and ANTHONY NICOLL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 24. Plymouth.—We came here today from Exeter. “On Friday last those of Cornwall departed from the place of their meeting near Exeter, having agreed with the Commissioners of Devon for a further . . . cessation for ten days, which was done, as they affirm by the advice of the general here and of others very well affected to the . . . Parliament. We having nothing from you in command concerning that particuler, and we having made known your pleasure touching the treaty they adjourned the further proceedings on it until Wednesday last, and the place of meeting to be near Plymouth, hoping before that time to have received your full directions . . . but those not coming they repaired hither according to their agreement, where we hear not of any progress they have made in that treaty, neither can we believe it be like to take any good effect . . . For what preparations are making in Cornwall we cannot give you any certain account, reports being very various and doubtful. But for our preparations in Devon we wrote you in our last that the Council of War had resolved to raise three regiments, which we can now assure you is in a good forwardness of doing.” Signed. Seal. [N. II., 181.]

SIR EDWARD AYSOGHE and THOMAS GRANTHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1642[-3], March 24. Lincoln.—Desiring the assistance of certain gentlemen. (See Commons' Journals, ii. 20.) Grantham was “lately taken by the enemy, in which we had placed 300 or 400 foot for the sole preservation of that part of the country from ruin and desolation. If this county be not thought so considerable as to send us down some assistance, who these three months and more have undergone the sole care, never having received from you the least aid either in moneys arms or ammunition, which hath been very chargeable unto us, we shall humbly make our request, that you will please to recall us to the service of the House, and not make your commands a punishment to us, who by God's mercy, have hitherto helped to preserve this country from evident ruin, and shall still continue our endeavours, if we may receive encouragement from you in this particular, as also in the speedy furnishing the 2,000*l.* so long ordered for us and Nottinghamshire to supply us with arms.” Signed. [N. II., 182.]

Oxford.—(A duplicate of the Earl of Northumberland's letter to the Speaker of the House of Peers, printed in Lords' Journals, v. 677, with this additional Postscript, "We moved his Majesty for a safe-conduct for the messengers named in your instructions. Mr. Secretary Nicholas gave us one for Mr. Michael Welden, which we have sent you here inclosed, and will get safe-conducts for the rest as soon as we can." The whole letter is printed in Grey, iii. 35, and iii. Appendix, No. 1, p. 1.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 1.]

Captain ROBERT MOULTON to the COMMITTEE FOR THE NAVY.

1643, March 27. Portsmouth.—Concerning the condition of the ships there, the completion of whose fitting out is delayed from want of carriages which I desire may be speedily supplied. On the 24th I went to Southampton and gave the Mayor notice I came to press some men and required his assistance, but he refused, and told me we could not press any and farther that he had received proclamations from his Majesty to the contrary, which he showed me, four in number, dated the 6th, 6th, 7th and 8th of March. He said he would proclaim them, if the sheriffs came. In my opinion he is a dangerous man to govern that town. Arrivals of merchant ships from St. Lucar, and Majorca are mentioned. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 2.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to [the EARL OF NEWCASTLE].

1643, March 30. Beverley.—I thank you for your two letters “in that you are pleased soe favourably to interprett the actions of your servant, and if your Lordship knew my reall intentions you would be farre from blaming me. I confesse I am very tender of my honor, for I know itt is like a woman’s honesty, not to be repayred if once toucht, and to forsake my party when I can say nothing for itt but to please my ambition or lightnesse is to me a terrible thing. I know you would not desire to see itt in any man you esteemed worthy your friendship, although for the present itt may disadvantage your affayres. You have gotton by Sir Hugh Cholmley’s turning when he could give noe reason for itt but an old castle, which will cost you more keeping then it is worth, his captaynes and soldiers are all here and have left him naked enough, wee say not sixty men. Wee made bold to stay two shippes of his at Hull, the one six peice of ordinance, the other bringing him good store of provisions from the Parlemt. Wee talke confidently of peace, and now I shall entreat your Lordship to laugh as hartely att our valient captaynes of the West that have quitt all their strong quarters without a shott as ever they did att others; hie talking and strong drinking is not that that kills Sconderbag. I confesse when I heard itt first I did not much marvell att itt, as some did, well knowing that if itt had not beene for some they had never shott shott att Tadeaster when you came first, but I shamed them into itt, but noe man is valienter then he should be, nor noe woman honeste, soe sayes the proverbe. For the businesse you writt of Portington, itt was thus. Sir William Savill and Lockby mett him and bad him tell Sir John that they were infinitely his friends and wished the peace of the kingdome. His answer was he was theirs, and if he understood from them any propositions that were honest and honorable conducing to that end he should be glad to heare them and doe any office he could for the publicke good, this was all and indeed he did this to see what would come of it and soe lett you know as soone as itt was worth itt. I had sent you notice of this before but that I must send you a little more for I have had an instrument from Sir Marnaduke with long perswasions of his good will and what great things I should have. I gave him many thanks but told I was in such a condition as needed nothing, and soe there is an end I thinke. I could write some of our Southern newes, first peace, next Sir William Waller hath gott a greate victory, and my Lord Northampton slayne, and Colonell Hastings prisonnier att Stafford, but I am grown to believe nothing because I thinke our masters of both sides feed us with such meat as they thinke fittest for us.” [N. III., 6.]

The HOUSE OF COMMONS to the EARL OF KINGSTON.

The EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to the EARL OF MANCHESTER,
Speaker of the House of Peers.

Same date.—(The beginning is printed in Lords’ Journals, v. 687. It proceeds thus)—“Upon the Treaty upon the first Proposition. His Majesty with his Council have sat constantly, forenoon and afternoon, about the Cessation. We attended him until it was late this evening, but could not come to a full resolution in it within the time. Many difficulties did arise upon the third Article about removal of Quarters, which we did not conceive ourselves enabled to resolve, however we might believe the intention of the Houses to be. We hope this business will speedily come to a conclusion, and that your Lordship will receive it on Monday." Copy. [N. XII., 53.]

SIR WILLIAM PARSONS and SIR JOHN BORLASE, Lords Justices, and the PRIVY COUNCIL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, April 5. Dublin Castle.—Concerning the petition of John Moody, owner, and John Webb, Master of the Love's Increase of Bristol on behalf of themselves and their crew 13 in number. The ship being partly laden was commanded to bring provisions for the relief of Duncannon Fort, and was afterwards ordered by Lord Esmond to the river of Rosse, to operate against the rebels and to attend the directions of the Marquess of Ormonde, in which service the ship with her cargo was lost. The petitioners then joined the army and in the battle assisted about the ordnance, in which John Moody was wounded. They therefore ask for relief and recompense. We find their allegation true, and therefore recommend them to the House. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 7.]

The LORDS to the COMMONS. 7

[1643, April 13 or 14].—"Message that the Lords conceive it necessary to send the reasons of the two Houses . . . why they cannot agree unto the Propositions offered in the King's message of the 12th April.

To express in the answer now to be made unto His Majesty that the endeavours of both Houses have been and ever shall be to put an end to these unhappy differences so as our religion, laws, and liberties may be secured.

That they would appoint the Committee formerly appointed to meet with the Committee of Lords this afternoon to consider the whole message, and to prepare such an answer as they think fit to offer unto the two Houses." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 44.) [N. XV., 12.]

Colonel HERBERT MORLEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, April 24. Lewes.—"About 3 weeks since the Earl of Thanet passed the seas into France. The barque that carried him belongs to one Hayne of Brightelmstone, which I have made stay of till I receive your pleasure, for I conceive it no small crime to transport those that have made war against the Parliament without your warrant. Friday last a party of my horse took one of my Lord Mountague's servants, that was ready to take barque for France. About him they found divers letters and scandalous pamphlets against the Parliament. I opened some of the letters, but finding the enclosed directed to himself and his lady, I send them to you sealed as I found them. . . ." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 67.) Seal. [N. III., 9.] Enclosed :

G. SWYNDINDRIS to VISCOUNT MOUNTAGUE at ROUEL.

1643, April 12.—. . . "My Lord and Lady and theirs are well and the stirring man in these parts is—as it said—hemmed in a castle near Ross, not far from Monmouth, by His Majesty's forces. The Queen is thought will shortly be at Oxford. The City of London in much distraction amongst themselves, strongholds most free, and no travel without much danger, and in a word if I should go from hence today, I know not where [to] go tomorrow. [1643, April 27].—"The cessation and fruitless endeavours of treatie for peace with the treacherous Cornish being ended on Saturday last, some of the forces of Devon upon intelligence of advantage which celerity might obtaine, entred Cornwall the last Lord's day, sate downe before Lankeston about 9 in the morning, made and maintayned a brave assault upon the enemy till 10 at night, but the worke proving more difficult then was supposed, by reason of fresh supplies which came in to them, our men having much annoyed the enemy by the killing of Captaine Bassett and some others of quality and a considerable number of common souldiers, made so brave and honorable a retreat that they brought off all their men, ammunicion, and guns safe, lost but a few common souldiers and those in the assault only, made good the passe after them, so as the enemy durst not advance over the bridge till such tyme as our men had left their quarters at Lifton, and were for the better recruiting of their forces marched at Okehampton on Munday.

After which tyme—to witt—on Tuesday the enemy entered Devon and came within three or four miles of Okehampton; which being knowne to our forces, they presently drew out their horse to face them, and gave order that the foote should follow to charge the enemy. In the close of that day our horse mett the enemy, gave them a brave charge thorough and thorough, put their horse and foote into confusion, slewe divers of them, tooke one captaine, three colours, three drumms, many prisoners and sundry armes, but night and foule weather came on, they were not able to pursue their charge, nor keepe the field, the enemy being five or six thousand as is supposed, and our forces not two thousand. Whereupon order was given that they should retreat backe to Okehampton that night to refresh themselves, and on the morrow with our artillery marched towards Exon with their prisoners, which was done accordingly so that it is suspected the enemy will shortly endeavour to invade our county to make his way toward Oxon. We for the present are not of like strength with the enemy, yet your neighbours and friends will not be wanting to rise all the strength they can to assault the enemy and hinder his comming to you, but least (lest) they should not be able to doe what they desire, doe become sollicitours to you to take the present state of things into serious consult of which this is a true relation, and to provide yourselves to assist us here or to make the best stopp you can to their insolent attempts to invade your county, and we shall not be wanting to fall on with you to the uttermost of our strengths.

(In a different hand.)—This was one of the first and best relations wee then had and this is the copy; the letter sent into Somersett. The relacion concerneinge Lanceston is very true." [N. XV., 183.]

The MAYOR and other Captains of the Seven Companies raised in LONDONDERRY to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The PARLIAMENT to the STATES-GENERAL.

1643, May 2.—(Printed in Lords' Journals, vi. 27.) Draft. [N. XVIII., 60.]

WALTER STRICKLAND to [WILLIAM LENTHALL]

1643, May 4–14. The Hague.—After referring to his two former letters for an account of the exceptions taken by the States-General to the order of the House of April 7th complaining that two ships had come out of Dunkirk under the Prince of Orange's license to serve against the Parliament.—The result of much debate and discussion was an order delivered to me last week the day after the post was gone, the substance whereof is that they have resolved to write to the Parliament, and because the information as far as concerns the Prince of Orange is false and scandalous, they will receive no other information from me without another order or till they hear from the Parliament. You will please read the enclosed order (of April 7th) itself. What they say is false and untrue. I know not what it can be except that Parliament never received any such information, for nothing else is affirmed by the order nor by me in the remonstrance, but only that Parliament was so informed. The question therefore is not whether the thing be so or no, but whether Parliament was so informed or no, and it seems to me a good resolute as well as a harsh affirmation that it is untrue that Parliament was so informed, for it lies not within the cognizance of those that affirm it. This is the issue between the House and them, but my condition, though judged worthy to be suspended from the service I had the honour to do the Parliament, is yet better. The House commanded me to tell the States what they are informed, which I did as near as I could changing English into French. My fault would have been unpardonable, if I had not believed they were so informed, and obeyed them, nor was their information derived from me. "If I be wounded it is through the sides of the Parliament. . . . I am confident they will maintain my reputation, without which I am incapable of serving them. . . . I desire the House will so far do me right as to justify what I have done by their order, for whatever is said of the Prince of Orange is literally within the order, and nothing but that is here affirmed to be untrue. Then my reputation being made good I submit myself to the House whether they please to continue my service here or employ it upon some other"; and in the former case entreat them "to give me such a commission as may make me taken notice of as their servant. . . . I wish nothing but to be furnished with wings if they expect I should fly, but however must expect their justification in what I did by their order concerning the Prince. . . . The States of Holland much opposed the suspending me and have protested against the order that the States-General have made as to that fact. . . . Some write from London that the Dunkirk ships contracted with to serve the King are forbidden by Don Melos to serve against the Parliament, that they will keep the neutrality. This is written from a good hand as it was told me. The Admiral of Holland suffered a Newcastle ship laden with arms to come out, because he produced the Queen's warrant, as he himself confesseth and writes to know what he shall do in like case hereafter. I know not what will be concluded hereupon. A man of war of the Hollanders took a Dunkirk, who had formerly taken an Englishman of Yarmouth, and brought him into Rotterdam. The Dunkirk shows a warrant from the Irish. The matter is not yet judged by the Admiralty, but I think notwithstanding his Irish Commission it will be adjudged a good prize. . . ." [N. III., 13.]

[SIR] F.[RANCIS] W.[ILLOUGHBY ?] to ROBERT REYNOLDS and ROBERT GOODWIN.

1643, May 10. Dublin.—These "are from one who desires to enforce you of the truth of busines here about Dublin, and though perhaps I shal not be beleived because you knowe not from whome it comes, yet be assured it is from one who desires and prayes for the peace of England and for the reducinge of this miserable kingdome of Ireland to the true religion, to obedience to His Majesty and his lawes, and to the late estate wherein it began to flourish and prosper

"Our estate here is now growen so extremely miserable, that we are as it weare breathinge out our last breath, I mean the Protestants and His Majesty's best subjects. I doubt not but you have heard of the seige of Ballinekill in the Queen's Countie, which hath bine most valiauntly defended for above a month by Capt. Ridgway; we heare now it is taken by the rebells but are not very certaine of it. Here in Dublin we were above three weekes in getting some litle provisions to set forth a partie of fifteen hundred men to relieve Ballinekil, and upon Friday last they were sent thetherward but with such discontent some of the officers beinge committed for refusinge to goe, before they went, and others with such murmeringes for want of provisions that if they come thether time enough which I feare they wil not, the successe is much to be feared, and if they shold miscarry there were an end of us here in al humane reason; there were five hundred men sent after them on Sunday last since which time we have not heard from them. Our soldiers that remaine here in Dublin and nere unto it though they be not so many by farr as I thinke you make account of, yet very many of them are naked men both horse and foote; our horse that are left beinge very weake and pore and few; both horse and foote wantinge armes and have not many of them so much as a sword. The powder in our stoare at Dublin—as I credibly heare—growes to so smale a quantitie that none can be spared to send any partie abroad any more unless the citie shold be left utterly destitute. The ship with powder and match, which was so long agoe agreed for by the state here with four of our merchants after it had bine longe detained about Caleis and after discharged and which we have longe loked for and hoped to have had here with us before this time, is not yet come though for theis fourteen dayes last past we have had a constant easterly wind and now it is reported that it is stayed in England by some directions from London: and victuales here are so scarse and our provisions in the stoare houses so emptied and the soldiers so longe maintained by the citie of Dublin that now there is scarce anythinge left cyther for the soldier or other inhabitant in the citie. And some of the English protestants who dwelt here, by the sessinge of soldiers upon them are growen so miserably pore that they are enforced to leave the citie and betake themselves to country houses there to seke reliefe for to kepe them alive or to perish by the hands of the rebels. The ship wherein Dr. Jones came brought us victualls for the soldiers in and about Dublin only, but for eight dayes; al the out garrisons wantinge al manner of victualls as wel as we: so that it cannot be reasonably conceived that we can hold out longe but must starve and dye or run away or else be subject to the mercie of the rebels for our lives and goods and yeild to them upon what conditions they please. The best of theis choises in theis times is miserable but the necessities that lyes upon us wil despite of our harts enforce us to some one of theis, unles it can be thought that we can live without meate or fight without pouder and other amunition and armes.

The factions and divisions betwene and amongst the officers of our armye is such that it is plainely perceived that more regard and labour is had to put disgraces and affronts one upon another than to save this perishing kingdome; and which amongst other wil be none of the least causes of our present destruction. I wold I cold write of the agreement at our counsel board, but I cannot heare of it nor doe I believe that the undermininge one of another which in former times have bine amongst many who have made a faire profession of uittie is clearely taken away from them. I wold it were.

It is talked of here likewise that we are disserted by the Parliament, and that although the Londoners lent or gave a hundred and fortie thousand pounds for to be employed for the releife of Ireland yet none of it is converted that way; and great jealousyes are here that your selves are not so zealous for that service as you protested here you wold be, and some think the cause to be the unkinde usage you received when you were here. And because we shold want notinge to helpe forward our miseries; the Wexford pirates and as they say some from Dunkirke with them doe dayly take our barkes cominge out of England which wold hove given us some litle helpe and sustenance of foode if they cold come safely to us which because they cannot doe many of them wil not stir from home.

When I had written thus farr, newes is certainly come of the takinge of Ballinakil: it was surrendered up on Friday last beinge the day our armye went out of Dublin; and that there are seven hundred of the pore English come from thence and are within three or four miles of Dublin: Preston makinge it part of his agreement that they shold al come directly for Dublin, which no doubt he did that we might the soner eate up one another, for here are already so many pore English that of necessitie many must starve, the inhabitants here beinge growen so extremely pore that the English protestants cannot relieve them and we are sure and so finde it that the papists wil not. It is reported here that Preston is gene to besiege the fort of Marriburrow in the Queenes County, and no doubt wil some take in al our garrison places nere Dublin in a short time if he be not prevented which how it may be I feare passes al our skills to tel you. Where the partie of our men is that went to relieve Ballinakil we certainly heare not, but the most judicious men of ours here hold that they are not able nor is it safe for them to fight with Preston who is above treble the number—better armed and now grown into hart and courage. Preston hath amongst his other great peeces a demyeanon against which none of our castles can hold out.

Thus I have truly related to you such thinges as have lately happened amongst us; and the miseryes with which we are so grievously oppressed, and the great and iniment daungers which we and this kingdome are in; what the daungers are which may happen to England if we here be utterly lost your selves knowe wel. I humbly beseach almighty God to send his peace and truth amongst you in England and that his Majestic and the parliament may before Ireland and the protestants in it be utterly lost resolve of some speedy supplies to be sent to it, which if they please to doe in time—and not let it alone as amongst other thinges we have done our sendinge to relcive Ballinekil—before it be lost certainly. If Ireland be reduced to his Majestic's obedience it may pay al the costs that shal be bestowed upon it with treble interest.

Postscript.—The pore people of Ballinekil are come to this city as it is reported that Preston shold say that within a fortnight he wold send a strong armye into England” . . . (See Commons' Journals, iii. 8.) Seal. [N. III., 15.]

 Mr. Stric[k]land about 20 days hence gives in a memorial to the States-General, the sense whereof was that the Parliament had appointed him to complain of the Prince of Orange for giving a license to two frigates of Dunkirk, part of the 24 there hired for the King's service to pass by the Holland's fleet being loaded with ammunition for his Majesty and with this a comment of his own sense. The Prince complained to the States of the injury done him hereby, whereby Strickland was examined by what warrant he did this.
 Upon which he produced an order of the House of Commons only,—and his credentials were from both Houses,—authorising Mr. Pym to give him instructions herein which order was not under Elsyng's own hand, so after 7 days debate with the States-General and by the particular provinces it was ordered by the States-General by the approbation of the particular provinces that Strickland's information was false and scandalous to the Prince, and that they expected reparation should be given the Prince from the Parliament, and that Strickland was not hereafter to propose anything by writing or otherwise until the States did further or otherwise resolve therein, so he is ordered from all business whatsoever. There is some dispute how this order shall be sent to Parliament by letter or messenger, but both will be wa[i]ved to prevent the inconveniency they may thereby run into by any application to them, so that I believe the order and declaration shall be given to Strickland and no otherwise, and if any other way then 105 : will interpose to steer it so as the King thereby shall not be omitted, but be observed as he ought in their proceedings. 86 : for so much as concerned 84 : would not consent to but would have him continued. The ship is going and am allowed no more time otherwise I should enlarge these to give you a more full account of all particulars here. Only this know that if I do not better serve you than these inform, it is not my fault, but that I am not qualified with such power as may make my actions more legible than good intentions can. I am by debt as well as affection, Sir, your most humble and most faithful servant.

Postscript.—My Lady Stanhup brought to bed of a son Saturday morning last. Gossips not spoken of it. 105 : begs your excuse for not writing, being surprised for time. Sir William Boswell upon the rumour that was made of the King's hiring ships at Dunkirk sent to Sir H. Devye, the resident at Brussels, to have him inquire out the occasion of that report, whose answer is shewed to the States, which was, there was no such thing, nor any ground for that. It was an invention framed for the disservice of the king, like that of the Danish fleet. The Parliament hath bought in Flanders 20,000*l.* worth of arms." [N. VIII., 139.]

i. Proceedings of a COUNCIL OF WAR under the Presidency of General-Major Monroe.

1643, May 24. Carrickfergus.—Shane Dick, servant to the Earl of Antrim was accused of being accessory to taking the said Earl out of the Castle of Carrickfergus, called the Lord Chichester's house, where he was confined, being suspected of the rebellion in Ireland, and also, being found at Newcastle in Down in the said Earl's company, of trafficking with the rebels, and putting himself in open rebellion with them, as evidenced by letters found on him and the Earl of Antrim at the time of their taking, and also of abusing the General in purchasing his pass under his hand and seal, under colour whereof he conveyed under silence of night by sea the said Earl away. Being desired according to his oath to disburden his conscience before death of anything he knew of the plot of the said Earl and his confederates against the kingdom of Scotland or the Scotch army in Ireland, he confessed that he knew several letters passed concerning these matters betwixt the said Earl and the Earls Nithsdale, Montrose, Aboyne and others. He was not himself the carrier of the messages. He knew that there was a barque with ammunition and other furniture of war to be direct North to Lord Aboyne, and the Earl of Antrim's friends in the Highlands and Isles of Scotland, and another barque with the like was to be direct to Carlisle to the Earl of Nithsdale and his confederates, but that he knew not who they were. The Earl of Antrim told him that he and his confederates were resolved to do all the mischief they could by arms against the kingdom of Scotland, and to overthrow the Scotch army in Ireland as far as they might, and then to bring all the forces they could out of Ireland to assist the King and the Catholic army in England against the Parliament. He was then removed and being recalled was told that, in regard of his confession of the points he was accused upon, the Council with one voice had adjudged him worthy of death and to be hanged exemplarily to others.

ii. Examination of the EARL OF ANTRIM.

1643, June 12. Carrickfergus. — Asked what was the point to be prosecuted by him and his confederates in Scotland, he answers, they had resolved to levy forces for his Majesty's service in England, and condescends particularly upon the Earl of Montrose, the Earls of Airlie, Nithsdale, Aboyne and such others as would partake with them. The ammunition to be sent to Lord Aboyne was to be disposed of by him for the use of the regiment to be levied in the Highlands and Isles for the Earl of Antrim as for the forces by Lord Aboyne himself to be joined to the Newcastle army, as the rest of the foresaid forces were intended. The ammunition was first stopt at York and thereafter his Lordship upon his word got it sent to Scarborough where it was when his Lordship came for Ireland. At the earnest desires of Lord Aboyne he interceded with her Majesty for getting the ammunition stopt by her Majesty's forces sent away. He declares for clearing the postscript of Aboyne's letter of the 8th of May that the Earl of Montrose was not to join with them but in a legal way. Being asked who was the party who knew from whom he expected the writt he declares it was meant by Lord Montrose who would not join in the raising of the said regiments. Cormock O'Seale, the Irishman, was the man passed betwixt his Lordship and Nithsdale. The rest who were for his Majesty's service were Lord Aboyne, Airlie, Nithsdale and such other friends as they could command. He declares that the deposition of Shane Dick, who was hanged, is false. Being asked if his warrant was immediately to Owen McKart and Sir Philomy (Phelim O'Neill) at Charlemont, or if they had a warrant to his knowledge for what they did or for joining with his Lordship he answers nothing to this interrogatory, but denies he knew of it. Being asked by whose warrant his brother was sent to Ireland to Owen McKart and Sir Philomy he acknowledges he had his directions from him, and declares the only warrant he gave him was to assure him with what surety his Lordship could come to Charlemont or any other part in Ireland, and gave him directions to stay there till his coming. He declares that he came into Ireland with Lord Newcastle's pass and private instructions for making of peace, having Lord Newcastle's promise if his Lordship could draw them to easy conditions my Lord Newcastle was to procure to him the King's warrant for proceeding therein. Being asked what end he had in offering 5,000*l.* sterling to the General-Major, he declares that offer was made conditionally if the General-Major would suffer him to return to England. There was no money in the barque. He knew no such man as Sergeant-Major Ross except he were in Lord Aboyne's company as one of his attendants, nor did he know of Colonel Blair.

iii. Further examination of the SAME.

Being asked what warrant Lord Newcastle could give him to levy forces in Scotland, having no power over the same, he answered that he had warrant to cause forces to be levied in any part of the King's dominions for his service, and that some of the English here would join their regiments to Lord Newcastle's army, which Lord Newcastle himself told him. Both the Englishes about Dublin and those here in Ulster had engaged themselves to Lord Newcastle to bring over regiments unto him.

iv. Examination of JAMES STUART, servitor to the Earl of Antrim.

1643, June 12. Carrickfergus.—Being interrogated upon oath to declare what he knew of the plot ingenuously under pain of torturing. He knew not what warrant the Earl of Antrim had, but he had the pass of the Earl of Newcastle and Lord Derby. He agrees with the other witnesses touching the ammunition to be sent to the North to Lord Aboyne, but knew not of that to be sent to Carlisle according to the other's deposition. The Scotch noblemen that the Earl of Antrim contrived with were the Earls of Montrose, Airlie, Nithsdale and Lord Aboyne. The Earl of Antrim's brother was sent by the Earl's direction, but he knows not what his commission was. The reason of their landing at Newry Castle was that they were informed at the Isle of Man their securest landing was there, it being in the hands of the Irish, and thence they expected a convoy to Charlemont. The Earl's brother had orders from him to deal with Coll Cittoch's sons to be of their party, but he was ignorant what speed he came. Alexander McDonell before his departure had shown him that he would use his endeavours to draw over Coll Cittoch's sons before the Earl's coming. As to men he expected to be his friends he knew of none but these the Commission was to be sent to, such as Aboyne, Sir Donald, Airlie and Nithsdale. The arms to be sent with the ammunition were five fielding pieces with 500 muskets with a quantity of ball, lead, and match. As to the officers sent North he knew of none, but that one Major Ross was there with Aboyne. The only servant that went betwixt Nithsdale and Antrim with the letters was one Cormock O'Sealle, an Irishman, who went with him from Carrickfergus at his escape. The man sent with the Irishman was one of the name of Maxwell whose name he knew not, a gross big man, not tall, redbearded, reddish haired, a little bald in the pate, aged betwixt 40 and 50. Asked what was meant by the hangings left at Carrickfergus he declared that the Irishman told him at his return that the Earl of Nithsdale being suspected for keeping correspondence with the Earl of Antrim particularly by Sir Richard Graham was forced to allege for an excuse that the barque was to be sent to Carrickfergus for bringing away some hangings and stuff left there belonging to my lady. Asked what was meant by the Lord of Montrose's going back from that he promised at York he declared it was openly reported in the town that he would fall back from them and not stand to his promise. Concerning the stopping of the ammunition to his judgement the reason was that the Parliament's ships laying before them it could not be brought away, and that immediately Lord Aboyne and his followers went away of the town, till they should resolve what way to get it away. He knew nothing of the service undertaken by the Marquess of Huntley, but that Lord Aboyne was the man talked of as ablest for undertaking of the service. As to the parties who hoped to be supplied by these arms he knew none other except Lord Aboyne and Sir Donald, Nithsdale, and their confederates, and the said Maxweil was the man to whom Aboyne's business was committed, besides the letters with the said Irishman. Asked what papers, commissions, moneys were in the barque that brought them over or what was left there he knew of nothing there of the like, and that nothing was left but his spurs and the little money the Earl had upon him or his other man not exceeding 30 pieces or thereby which Major Ballantyne got as his share, and my Lord's barber and cook were to follow with his clothes and sumptour and Ballantyne also got three little cups and a salt cover. Asked if he knew by what warrant my Lord had to tempt the General-Major with an offer of 5,000*l.* sterling and of preferment under Newcastle's army he protested that he knew nothing thereof neither was there any such sum in the barque nor nothing else but the passengers. He knew nothing of Major Ross or what he had undertaken, but he heard he was to be sent away with the ammunition and arms. He declared that he knew of no design for surprising the magazine in Scotland or any principal persons in the government there. Asked if he knew concerning any intelligence or correspondence between the Marquess of Hamilton and the Duchess for interceding with the General for purchasing a warrant to take up the rents due to Lord Antrim's brother for his proper use he declared there was means used at Court by Master German (Jermyn) and others to intercede with the Queen to speak the Marquess of Hamilton for purchasing the like warrant from the General. Lastly being threatened with the torture and death except he should declare by whose warrant and direction the Earl of Antrim and others undertook the employment he declares that as the ammunition and arms was to be furnished by the Queen's order and command so that he doubts not but the Earl of Antrim's employment and others was directed by her Majesty and others there, as was generally thought by all as by him, and more he takes upon his conscience he knows not. (All these are true copies, attested by Archibald Primerose.) [N. XIX., 66.] Abstracts from duplicates sent to the House of Lords are printed in the Fifth Report of the Historical MSS Commission, Appendix, p. 94.

Now we are much hyer (higher) with this great blow given in the North and Essex creeping—instead of coming to Oxford—very weakly towards London yesterday, having had a good rap on Sunday, coming to attempt the Prince's quarters at Buckingham. We believe the Queen is this night at Ashby in Leicestershire, which is no great distance from here. When she comes we intend to do great matters on Essex. Then he should seek Cheapside for his sanctuary; but I say piano, piano, &c. In the mean time all our eyes and hopes are placed on your Western affairs, which we conceive to stand in good posture. We hourly look to hear of the render of Exeter to you and then, after the joining of your forces, of Wawler's (sic) utter ruin and consequently of all Roundheads. If God bless you with Exeter let me intreat you to let the whole passage of the proceedings about that place be sent me handsomely written at large with your names on all occasions that command in chief, that I may have it printed, for though I envy not the runnings over of any man's cup yet I cannot endure to see my friend's cup denied a drop. Dear Rouge I have had something to do in this particular, wherein I have not been a less friend to my good friends with you than I hope they believe me. THE COMMON HALL OF the City of LONDON.

[1643, August 2.]—Resolution. (The purport appears from Commons' Journals, iii. 193.) [N. XIII., 183.]

1643, August 2. [Dublin.]—One Brent, a most pernicious Papist, and, as they say, a lawyer, came over from England, and landed here the last of July, being sent to Lord Ormonde. On the next day, Sir William Parsons, Sir Adam Loftus, Sir John Temple, and Sir Robert Meredith, were committed to the Castle of Dublin. Report says that they do not know what their faults are. Their chiefest endeavours, they profess, have always been for the good of this Kingdom, the destruction of the Rebels and the King's honour, and they are not guilty of any other offences. Since their committal, the English are departing in great numbers, because the King has given too much countenance to natives of this most unfortunate Kingdom. The poorer sort of them fly for refuge into England, but they who have anything left go to the Low Countries, fearing to stay here since the committal of the above-named councillors. Within these few days, the Papists are growing very insolent, for the English Protestants are quite discouraged by the report of a cessation, assuring themselves that the rebels will be taken for the good subjects and the poor distressed Protestants for the rebels, for they daily see them accused of treason put at liberty and discharged out of the Castle, and men that showed themselves most real and hearty against the Rebels put in their room. The King's intention for the committal of these councillors was known at Kilkenny at least a fortnight before his letters came over, as appears by the examination which I send. It is credibly reported that the rebels seek earnestly the lives of these councillors. I am confident that they are innocent. The army, consisting of 4,500 foot and 500 horse has been lately abroad, but nothing has been done worth relating, only the rebels deserted an empty castle of Sir William Pooley. The Earl of Castlehaven, an Englishman and a rebel, has taken two strong castles near Catherlagh, which the English Protestants have kept ever since the rebellion, and a castle called Ballinenan, in which were nearly a thousand English Protestants [is] strongly besieged. Nevertheless the army returned yesterday to their several garrisons probably to remain in them all the summer. What will become of us English Protestants, I know not, for we are consuming away by little and little. Since the first bruit of this cessation we never prospered. Many Englishmen's houses have been burned this week within two miles of this city, and also part of the suburbs, but nothing has been done to prevent it or to defend these adjacent parts, which very much disheartens all the Protestants here who fear that they will be left as a prey to the rebels. "All things here is very ill in the highest degree, no expectation but ruin, and that all English and Protestants will be quite rooted out of this kingdom." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 213.) Copy. [N. XII., 63.]

The ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS to the CONVENTION OF ESTATES.

1643, August 12.—We are commanded to remind our brethren of Scotland "that the Popish and Prelaticall faction which began with them about the yeares 1638 and 1639 and then intended to make way to the ruine of the Kingdome of England by theirs, Have not abated any part of their malice towards the Nation and Church of Scotland, nor are at all departed from their designe of corrupting and altering Religion through the whole Island, though they have inverted the manner of their proceedings conceiving now that they have an easier way to destroy them, if they may first prevaile over the Parlyament and Kingdome of England. In which respect, it is the desire of both Houses that the two Nations may bee strictly united for their mutual defence against the Papists and Prelaticall Faction, and their Adherents in both Kingdomes, And not to lay downe Armes till those their implacable enemies shalbee disarmed and subjected to the Authority and justice of Parlyament, in both Kingdomes respectively. And as an effectuall meanes hereunto, they desire their brethren of Scotland to raise a considerable force of horse and foote for their aid and assistance, to bee forthwith sent against the Papists and Prelaticall Faction, and Malignants now in Armes in the Kingdome of England.

And for the better encouragement of the Kingdome of Scotland to this necessary and soe much desyred union, Wee are by both Houses authorized to assure their brethren that if they shalbee annoyed or indangered by any Force or Army either from England or any other place, the Lords and Commons of England will assist them with proportionable strength of horse and foote to what their brethren shall now afford them, to bee sent into Scotland for the defence of that Kingdome. And they will maintaine a Guard of Shippes at their owne charges upon the Coast of Scotland for the securing of the Kingdome from the Invasion of the Irish Rebels, or other Enemies during such time as the Scottish Army shalbee employed in the defence of the Kingdome of England. And to the end that nothing should bee wanting in the Kingdome and Parlyament of England to faecillitate this worcke—wherein the true reformed Religion not onely in these two Kingdomes, but throughout all Europe, is so highly concerned,—Wee are further authorized to consider with their brethren the Estates and Kingdome of Scotland, of what other Articles or Propositions are fitte to bee added and concluded wherby this Assistance, and Union betwixt the two Nations may bee made more beneficiall and effectuall for the security of Religion and Liberty in both Kingdomes.

Seeing they have now so fully declared as by what they have done already so by what they are yet desirous to doe that the true state of this Cause and Quarrell is Religion, in the Reformation whereof they are and have bin soe forward and zealous as that there is not any thing expressed to them by their brethren of Scotland in their former or latter Declaracions which they have not seriously taken to heart, and earnestly endeavoured to effect—notwithstanding the subtil, malicious and industrious oppositions—that so the two Kingdomes might bee brought into a neare Conjunction, in one forme of Church Government, and Directory of Worshippe, one Catechisme, etc., and the foundation laid of the utter Extirpation of Popery and Prelacy out of both Kingdomes. The most ready and effectuall meanes whereunto, is now conceived to bee that both Nations shall enter into a strict union and League of mutual defence, according to the desires of the two Houses. And to induce the perswasion of this—if there were cause—wee might observe that in the many Declaraeions made by the Generall Assembly or States of Scotland to their brethren of England there have bin sundry Expressions manifesting the greate Necessity that both Kingdomes for the security of their Religion and Liberties, should joyne in this strict union against the Papists, Prelates, and their Adherents, As also in the Indeavours of a neare Conjunction betweene the Churches of both Nations, The apprehension and foresight of which hath caused the Popish and Prelaticall Faction in forraigne parts as well as in these his Majestic's Dominions strictly and powerfully to combine themselves to the hinderance of this so necessary worke, and the universall suppression of the true Protestant Religion in Europe. A course not much different from that which they tooke in the yeare 1585, when the wisdome and zeale of this Nation to Countermine so wicked a Conspiracy, and from the due sense of the mutuall interest of these two kingdomes in religion and Liberty found a necessity of entring into a League of this Nature as well considering that thereby no lesse safety might bee expected to both Nations then danger by forbearing the same. And though no doubt but in so necessary and good a worke many difficulties may arise to interrupt and retard the same, yet wee are as confident that the hearty and brotherly affection of this Nation to the Parlyament and Kingdome of England will easily breake through them and the rather because in the like cases of difficulty and danger not onely at the time of the League above-mencioned, but before and likewise since, when any opertunity hath offered it selfe, perticularly during the sitting of the present Parlyament, the Kingdome of England hath bin very ready and forward to lay to heart the dangers of the Kingdome of Scotland as their owne, and to decline no meanes in the reach of their power, for the redresse and prevention of the same." All which being taken into the serious consideration of the Lords and others of the Convention we hope many arguments will not be needed to persnade them to give their consent with all convenient speed to these desires of both Houses. Copy. [N. XIII., 185.]

The great impediment which is here at present is the lack of moneys for the payment of my Lord Fairfax's soldiers which causes them [to] murmur much, and we fear hath been the great cause that they have deserted Beverley and left it with six pieces of Ordnance and a great deal of ammunition to the mercy of the enemy who have plundered it in a most tyrannous way. . . We beseech” you “to furnish us with such things as is needful. [1643, September 10.]—(The purport of part concerning Mr. Allestree appears from Commons' Journals, iii. 281.) Your extra supply of powder and arms came so seasonably that it frightened the Queen's army from making any attempt on us. By reason of our ill quarter at the late general Rendezvous at Nottingham many of our soldiers run from us. Our horse are wearied out with continual conveying of Lancashire and Cheshire carriers. Nottingham horse are gone to the general Rendezvous about Boston, which gives the Newark forces a better opportunity to come into our county. We beseech you to be a means that either Lancashire and Cheshire give over entire trading, or else that they may receive a troop or two of horse to convoy their own. We also entreat for more powder and match; part of our last we sent into Cheshire, and part we spent in taking Sir Richard Fleetwood's house in Staffordshire. . . It was only through want of it we missed taking Tutbury Castle with Hastings and all his chief commanders. Copy. [N. XII., 30.]

1643, September 14. Plymouth.—Yesterday there was discovered to us a plot for betraying the Providence by her Captain, William Brook. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 29.]

SIR DAVID WATKINS TO WILLIAM STRODE.

1643, September 15.—Complaining of the malignancy and negligence of the searchers at Gravesend, by whose remissness many ships have passed by there unsearched to the great prejudice of the Parliament and kingdom. Signed. [N. III., 30.]

Colonel HERBERT MORLEY TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, September 16. Farnham.—I was lately in Hampshire and was ordered here by the Committee for the safety of the kingdom to await their further orders, which have not come. "This day I received intelligence that the Earl of Crawford with his own, Col. Ford's, Col. Bennett's, the Sheriff of Wilts', Sir Ed. Deering's and Crispe's regiments are designed to take in Southampton and are expected this day to sit down before it. The garrison there is not above 300, the soldiers in arrears, the town abounding with Malignants. If immediate course be not taken to relieve it that town in probability will be lost. My force being but 400 is very unable to resist so great a strength now they are united, though if I had been let alone I might have given some obstruction to their joining together. If you can forthwith send 2,000 horse and dragoons to join with me, I believe we may give them some remove if not defeat. You may now see how necessary it was for the Associated Brigade to stay in these parts, without which, or some considerable force instead of it, the Southern Counties will be all lost, then London cannot but be in danger. This approaching cloud, I fear, may raise a storm in Sussex, which county is full of neuters and Malignants; and I have ever observed neuters to turn Malignants upon such occasions." Seal. [N. III., 31.]

DOCTOR JOHN KING to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, September 19. Hertford.—The Committee of Parliament for this County, having received a warrant from his Excellency for the speedy raising of 100 horse for a troop of Arquebusiers have commanded me to ask the deferring the execution of this warrant for some time, inasmuch they are now raising 300 light horse to be under the Earl of Manchester's command, and the County has recruited Colonel Middleton's regiment twice, and other Companies under his Excellency, and has lately furnished Sir W. Waller with many horse, and the Earl of Denby's (Denbigh) officers swept away many men's horses when they went through the County, and the County hath furnished at least 1,000 or 1,200 horse for the most part at their own charge, and now they are speedily to raise 120 horse for Dragoons to be sent to the Earl of Manchester. Seal. [N. III., 32.]

SIR EDWARD MONINS, SIR MICHAEL LIVESEY and others to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, September 21. Sittingbourne.—Concerning the carriage of Sir Robert Honeywood. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 257.) Signed. [N. III., 33.]

JOHN HOBARTE, SIR JOHN POTTS, SIR MILES HOBARTE, FRAMLINGHAM
GAWDY, FRANCIS FERING, SAMUEL SMYTHE and THOMAS SOTHER-TON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, September 21.—Reciting the great charges this county, (Norfolk), had undergone for the public defence in maintaining horse in the Lord General's army and two regiments of foot in Lincolnshire all the summer, besides forces necessarily kept at home for suppressing disturbances, and that now a new burden has been imposed by the late ordinance for 600 horses and for increasing the foot, and requesting with the approval of the Earl of Manchester that the county might have the benefit of the sequestrations therein. Signed. [N. III., 34.]

SIR THOMAS ALSTON, SIR JOHN BURGOYNE, THOMAS ROLT and EDWARD OSBORNE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, September 26. Biggleswade.—Concerning the raising of 200 horse charged on Bedfordshire. The county complains that we have not charged the Train horse according to the letter of the Ordinance. We conceive that Parliament intended to have regard to their horses and arms found, and not to charge them as if they had found none. We submit the course we have taken to Parliament. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 260.) Signed. [N. III., 35.]

HARBOTTLE GRIMSTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, September 26. Colchester.—Requesting that Mr. Henry Farre, Lieutenant-Colonel to the Earl of Warwick, who had been left out of the last ordinance by the printer's mistake, might be added to the Committee for the County of Essex. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 260.) Seal. [N. III., 36.]

Captain TRISTRAM STEVENS to Colonel WHITEHEAD and the COMMITTEE AT PORTSMOUTH.

1643, September 27. From aboard his Majesty's ship the Charles afore Hurst Castle.—“We have only this day's victuals left, and when that is done, we are to seek for more, God knows where. I understand by our Purser's letter that no money can be got for our victualling. I would desire to know from you speedily what is intended to be done about us. If to supply us anew with victuals, then 'tis high time it were on board already; if not, then there must be special care taken for the speedy sending of a certain number of soldiers for the assisting of Colonel Button in keeping of the Castle. Never hath ship been sent to sea, as we have, nor used worse than we are, nor so ill accommodated with all sorts of provision, when 'tis sent us, for we have had stinking beef, and pork, and also stinking beer a great part of this voyage, and unless such a business had been purposely intended, a man would have scarce imagined that a ship should be so badly fitted with necessaries as we have been." A Frenchman, one Jerome from Newhaven, I am informed, has arrived at Weymouth with 100 barrels of powder and other arms and ammunition for their supply there. If you had sent a ship to Weymouth Roads, as I desired, he might have been intercepted. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 258.) [N. III., 37.]

SIR THOMAS STANLEY, COLONEL RALPH ASSHETON, and others to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1643, September 28. Manchester.—Christopher Malone of Drogheda being indebted to John Hartley of Manchester had consigned goods to Laurence Mereer of Liverpool to sell and pay Hartley out of the proceeds, but such proceeds had been detained by Mercer by order of Mr. John Walker, Mayor of Liverpool, on the ground that Malone being a rebel the goods were forfeited to the Crown and that the Corporation under their Charter was entitled to them, but in fact the goods had been shipped on October 25, 1641 and for three weeks afterwards Malone had behaved as a loyal subject during which time the sale had taken place, all which we certify at the instance of Hartley who has always been faithful to Parliament, and submit to your consideration. Signed. [N. III., 38.]

SIR EDWARD BOYS to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, September 28. [Dover.]—Supporting the desire of the town of Dover to raise a third band of volunteers, with the mayor, Mr. Edward Prescott, as their captain, and requesting some money out the sums raised in the County for his soldiers' pay, who are two months in arrear, though he has borrowed 250*l*. [N. III., 39.]

The HOUSE OF COMMONS to the EARL OF WARWICK.

1643, September 28.—In reply to his letter of the 22nd declaring that they will take speedy order for payment of the mariners of the merchant men, provision having already been made for his Majesty's ships, and thanking him for his care wisdom and valour. Draft or Copy. [N. XII., 65.]

The HOUSE OF COMMONS.

[1643, September 29.]—Votes concerning the proposed cessation in Ireland. (These are drafts differing considerably from the form finally adopted, which is printed in Lords' Journals, vi. 238.) [N. XIX., 29.]

THE PARLIAMENT OF ENGLAND.

1643, September 30.—Declaration concerning the Cessation. (Printed in Rushworth, iii. 2. 555.) Draft. [N. XXI., 5.]

WILLIAM VEALE to WILLIAM HAWKINS, Agent to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

1643, September 30. Dublin.—The Cessation here “is now concluded, to the great joy of the Roman Catholic subjects, as now they are called,” of which the Articles are inclosed. “Since this was concluded and proclaimed some of these good subjects have hanged some and killed others of our men within four miles of this place yet no satisfaction or course taken with them. What a miserable condition we that must remain here are in any reasonable man may judge, being left, as I may say, both by our King and Parliament to the mercy of these merciless and bloody villains. That which they are to pay will not relieve our army a month, if they were to continue all with us, but ’tis reported here and ’tis very probable that 10,000 of our soldiers are to go over to you in England, and that my Lord Marquess of Ormond is to be General of them, my Lord Inchiquin Lieutenant-General, and Sir Thomas Luckes General of the horse that goes from hence, then the Irish to fall all of them upon the Scots in Ulster, so we in this place lie at their mercy whensoever they please, except God miraculously deliver us, for if they stay their hands from sending us provision, and ours being tied that we cannot fetch it in if we had strength as formerly we did, then we shall soon perish. Shipping that would come with provisions cannot, being blocked up, as we hear by some that lately came over, some by the King’s ships and some by Chester water and Liverpool by the Parliament’s. Winter draws on and never was less provision of coals here than now; ’tis likely many a house will be pulled down and burnt for want of firing. Most of us here do apprehend more danger now than at the beginning of the rebellion. Then here there was shipping to carry over those that would into England, but now here is not any or any like to be, the Parliament who we took to be our friends having now forsaken us, that will not command so much as one ship to lie upon this coast to relieve those that are in distress. The Lord unite the hearts of our King and his subjects together, that we may have some relief, and not these bloody rebels to triumph over us.” [N. III., 40.]

Captain RICHARD LEE to JOHN PYM.

1643, October 1. Rochester.—Informing him of the apprehension of Mr. Walter Montague and desiring to know the pleasure of the Houses therein. (See Commons’ Journals, iii. 264, 266; Lords’ Journals, vi. 250.) Seal. [N. III., 41.]

Colonel EDWARD MASSIE to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1643, October 5. Gloucester.—The bailiffs of your manors in Herefordshire have been unable to get any of your rents, as the enemy forbids it on pain of plundering, and this must continue till I have a force to enable me to countermand, the nearest of your tenants lying too remote and Gudderidg (Goderich) Castle including them. “We have not heard of the enemy’s reflux—since your Excellency gave them their passports at Newbury of which they boast but little—until Monday last, there being marched into Tewkesbury 400 foot and

3 or 400 horse. Report is also that considerable numbers are marched into Sudeley and towards Eveshalme, and their full resolutions are to lie at Stroud, Painswick, and Cheltenham, on the Forest side at Newnam Mitchelcleane and Newent, and nearer also, so that your Excellency well knoweth how impossible it will be for us to maintain this garrison without supply of strength, many of the townsmen here being weary of the service, and the country already dare not or will not look upon us, being also likely to lose our markets, since we are not able to defend them from the enemy's seizure. To remedy all which I am bold to make this address to your Excellency by whose favour in a speedy order and command our succour may be full and timely, which if delayed till these settle and fortify themselves in their winter quarters it will be a thing of much hazard and difficulty to relieve us.

Postscript. October 6.—I am truly advertised by my scouts that those foot which were at Tewkesbury being of the Welsh forces are all marched away yestr-evening upon an alarm my troop of horse gave them, that they cried out 'The enemy from Gloucester was coming with 4 pieces of ordnance and 2,000 foot and horse,' and so in much confusion and haste quitted the town, and swore—being of the Welsh forces—that the Lord Herbert should never make them slaves again, nor bring them out of their own country on any pretence whatsoever, so took their way over Upton-bridge, and no persuasion of Colonel Vavisor or other officer nor the force of their horse could constrain them to stay and fortify Tewkesbury, as this day they should have begun, and now not one left there. I know that the enemy will do what possibly they can to take Tewkesbury for their winter quarter, if our care prevent them not, for we expect others in the room of the Welsh, who, I persuade myself, will hardly ever be brought so far again upon any service whatever. We hear nothing of Sir William Waller but hope our supply is cared for. Sir John Winter's house in the Forest is fortified and a large number of soldiers allotted to garrison there. Sir Ralph Hopton is said to be at Berkeley Castle and hath brought with him 3 or 400 more to garrison there." Seal. [N. III., 42.]

SIR THOMAS MIDDLETON TO RICHARD MOORE.

1643, October 6. Wem.—Importuning his help in the House for supply of money men and horses. "It hath pleased God to bring us safely to Wem where we find the country so plundered and pillaged both of money and horse that there is no possibility of raising either here for our present supply, and those moneys I took up upon my credit are long since spent and which is worse I can be trusted for no more, because the moneys are not paid in to them according to the Order of the Committee, so that I am for present left in a poor condition, being seated in the mouth of the enemy, and wanting both money and men to defend ourselves. The enemy is very strong and daily expect more forces from His Majesty, and this night we are informed there is a supply come to them, and every hour we look to be set upon, our forces being but very few, and those auxiliaries we have from Cheshire ready upon all occasions for want of pay to leave us, so that unless God in mercy look upon us, and put it into your hearts to send us speedy supply we are like to be swallowed up by the enemy. I need not inform you of how great consequence to the public the reducing of these parts are. The great opposition [that] is made and the care [that] is had to keep us out of Wales, makes me believe there is some greater end in it on the adversaries' part than we for present can imagine. I should not doubt . . . but by gaining 1,000 foot and 300 horse, which I believe my Lord General may for a time spare, to reduce these countries and to settle an oppressed people in peace, who for present dare not nor do not show themselves, though we are in the heart of the country, because the enemy is so strong and we so inconsiderable a number to deal with them." I desire you therefore to use your best endeavours in the House to manifest our condition and to find a way of speedily supplying both men and money, whether by Lord Denbigh's speedy march, or by the loan of some forces from my Lord General, or by landing of some Scots in Lancashire, I refer to the Houses to consider, only desiring expedition. "The country is engaged against us by oath, which they have been forced to take, and in particular Wales, and my own tenants forced to swear to oppose me. The enemy hath fortified my castle against me very strongly. My Lord Capel hath caused my woods to be cut down, my farms and outhouses to be pulled down and sells the wood thereof. I hope, if God prosper the Parliament, as I doubt not of, his Lordship may be thought of and some satisfaction may be made out of his estate." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 277.) Seal. [N. III., 43.]

HARBOTTLE GRIMSTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, October 6. Chelmsford.—Interceding for Lieutenant-Colonel Farre, and justifying his having taken away Brasier's commission for seizing horses. Signed. [N. III., 44.]

ROBERT JORDAN to WILLIAM WELLBOR.

1643, October 7. Cambridge Castle.—"I have received a commission from our most pious Major, the Earl of Manchester, for the Castle, but I want above a 100 muskets, swords and bandoleers, besides pikes for to arm my company, which he commands me to make up between 2 and 300. Likewise we want 50 barrels of powder at the least, for all our store will not last above 3 hours' fight. Our ditch goes very slowly on, notwithstanding without it the Castle is of little value, but if it were done . . . impregnable. We . . . are above 9 weeks behind in pay; these things considered our case is very desperate, unless God be pleased to move the Parliament to supply us with moneys and arms and munition, for Oxford forces come within 20 miles and plunder at their pleasure, and how soon they may come and surprise us God only knows, for I am persuaded they know as well as ourselves what a condition we are in, we having so many malignant scholars and others. I beseech you therefore to do what possible may be to procure" from the House some speedy and instant way for providing for the soldiers' arrears and their future pay, "otherwise we shall never keep soldiers together, for they drop away most miserably for mere want, and if the enemy should but make a breach in here—believe me as a soldier—all the Associated Counties would not only be endangered to be lost, but even London itself." [N. III., 45.]

THOMAS COLE, SIR JOHN READE, ROBERT CASTELL, THOMAS DUCKETT, DUDLEY POPE, MATTHEW LINSEY, and GEORGE GAWSETT to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, October 10. Cambridge.—"First our very subsistence is questioned and therefore we humbly desire the resolution of the House whether the institution of several Committees in each county according to the late Ordinance for associating Lincolnshire with those counties do null and make void this general Committee of the Association, as is conceived and objected by some. Secondly for the power, which by the late Ordinance you have entrusted us withal, we find it too short to carry on such various and weighty business effectually; as not enabling us to imprison or any ways to secure dangerous Malignants, refractory persons, and such as disobey and abuse not only our authority but yours, nor to punish mutinous soldiers, by whom we have found both ourselves and this place much endangered. Thirdly the Committee is in danger of dissolution through the non-appearance of Commissioners. Fourthly we are utterly destitute of money in the common treasury for the defraying of such charges as concern the Association in general, as the payment of the garrison in the Castle, the payment of Scouts, guards, carriages, and many other like occasions, besides above 300*l.* which is owing to the Treasurer, we having often written earnestly to the several counties to send in their proportions without effect in most of them. For our dangers we have just grounds to fear not only domestic insurrections by reason of the abundance of active Malignants, both in town, country, and colleges, but also the attempts of remoter enemies, concerning which we receive daily advertisement,"—which we leave to the bearer to relate, "humbly beseeching you to take into your consideration the consequence of this place, being the heart—as it were—of this Association, and which the enemy does most aim at, as we daily hear, and have reason to believe, for both town and castle being fortified to their hands, it would be a safe rendez-vous for them to retreat unto, and an inlet into all the other counties and be a means to stop the passages of provisions for London." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 274, 278.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 46.]

THE EARL OF DORSET TO LORD EDWARD HOWARD.

1643, October 10. Oxford.—Expressing his gratitude for services done him. Seal. [N. III., 47.]

SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, SIR HENRY VANE, and HENRY DARLEY
TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, October 11. Edinburgh.—“In our last we gave you accounte of our securing the towne of Berwick, which hath since appeared to us a happy prevention of the enemy, who at the same time and ever since hath had a designe upon it. Several alarmes have bin given by the enemy along the Borders betwixt Owler and Berwicke, whereupon the Estates of Scotland published this inclosed Proclamation; and it was thought fite that three troopes of Scottish horse should be taken into the towne of Berwicke, for the further security of it from dangers both within and without, and two hundred Scottish foote, which hath bin an unavoydable charge to us, without the imminent danger of the towne, as our Billes of Exchange upon Sir Gilbert Gerrard can testify. But the enemies' strength being not so greate as at first was apprehended, and wee willing to take the first advantage of easing the charge, tooke order that the troopes of horse should bee withdrawne, and some companies of foote placed in their roome. Thus stands the present condition of the towne. What the resolutions of the Houses are concerning the further settling of it, wee very much desire to heare, as being of no small consequence.

By late letters from Major Generall Monro to the Committie of Estates wee perceive that the busines of the cessation is now concluded in Ireland, the coppies of which letters and cessation wee send you heere inclosed. This hath put the English and Scottish there to greate difficulties which cannot bee resolved and remedied without the speedy advice and assistance of the Houses of Parliament as in our answers to the Committie of Estates two severall times wee have bin necessitated to declare, and to feede them with good hopes and expectations in the meane season, untill wee receive the pleasure of the Houses concerning the same. Our last paper to this effect wee send you the cobby of, wherein wee were put to very greate straightes what to expresse to them, that might keepe the army in Ireland from taking some desperate courses, and exposing that kingdome wholly to the will of the cruell and bloody rebels. All which wee earnestly recommend to you for some speedy resolution, fearing that extremities will now come upon that army and the other forces so fast, upon this cessation, that they will not rest contented much longer with words. What course wee shall then take to give them satisfaction unlesse wee speedily heare from you will bee very difficult, they having bin eighteene months without pay, and being ready to sterve for want of necessary subsistance. The Covenant as it is sent over with the alterations from the Parliament is very well approved of heere, and tomorrow the Commissioners of the Church meete to appoint daies for the taking of it by the whole kingdome. It is said heere that the House of Commons and Assembly of Divines have already taken it in a very solemne manner, which gives greate satisfaction, and is very seasonable in one respect; because there is newly arrived a French agent, whose businesse is—as it is commonly reported—to perswade this kingdome from ingaging in the cause of England, and to mediate the Earle of Antrim's release, but it is conceived heere hee is come too late, all things being in very good forwardnesse if the mony most necessary for the setting forth and maintaynance of the army weere arrived. The men are leavyed in severall sheyres but cannot bee brought into a body, for want of mony, which is requisite therefore to bee hastened away, by reason of the winters comming on so fast. This day the Commissioners of the Church have mette, who have very readily and cheerfully approved of the Covenant with the alterations sent from England, and are extremely well satisfied to heare of the happy progresse it hath already had in England. They have appointed Friday next for the Committie of Estates and themselves to take it, and that in the same solemne manner as in England when also it is expected that wee should take it with them, from the example of the Scotch Commissioners with you who without direction from hence tooke the Covenant in England and therefore they conceive wee may do the same heere, to give satisfaction to this kingdome, not doubting but as they have approved this action in their Commissioners, so the Houses will do the same in us. Upon the next Lord's day, intimation of the Covenant is to bee given throughout all the churches and the same day seavenight it is to bee taken and sworne by all the kingdome. A relation of the king's greate victory at Newberry by his Majestie's expresse command to the Earle Lannericke is sent to this city of Edenburgh, whilst our information to rectify the same is onely a few printed papers casually come to our hands. Wee have this day received a paper from the Committie of Estates, which wee herewith send, wherein is expressed how necessary it is that one of our number should speedily returne to acquaint the Houses by word of mouth of the true state of affaires in Ireland and heere, which in regard of Mr. Hatcher's speedy returne hither, wee do believe wee shalbee necessitated to consent unto." Signed. [N. III., 48.]

THE EARL OF MANCHESTER TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, October 12. Horncastle.—Entreating him to acquaint the House of Commons “that the Earl of Newcastle having assisted the Lincolnshire forces with 40 troops of horse, which body being joined with as many of their own country they marched towards the relief of Bullinbrook Castle which I had besieged, being a place which did much annoy those parts of Holland that lie near about Boston. After that I had drawn up the horse to the top of Bullinbrook Hill word was brought me that the enemy with about fourscore colours of horse was marching towards me, whereupon I advanced with the horse to meet him and caused the foot and artillery to march as fast after the horse as they could.” (The rest of the letter is the same verbatim as that from the Earl printed in Lords’ Journals, vi. 25) from “but came not so near” to “scattered about the country.” Signed. Seal. [N. III., 49.]

SIR JOHN MELDRUM TO THOMAS (sic) LENTHALL, Speaker of the House of Commons.

1643, October 14. Hull.—“Sir, I shall not wearie you much with the relation of some happie successes God hath blessed us with all since my arrivall at Hull knowinge that many pennes will be sett a worke whereby neither the truth in the narration nor the favor and mercie of God cann bee revealed. Upon Munday beinge the ninth of this instant, the reginalists about breake of day did with a great deale of courage beinge commaunded by Denton, Stricland and one Little a countryman of myne who commanded in cheife fell upon one of our out workes called the raged jetty, a place of great importance for the safe ridinge of our shippinge before the towne. But by the resolution of two English commaunders and a countryman of mine, cosen Germaine to Sir William Cunningham, and the courage of the gunners and souldiers, they were—upon veive of a hundreth musqueteres which followed me from the mount—beaten out of the worke dri[ven] to a most shamefull retreite leiveinge the bodies of their commaunders dead upon the place, many of their souldiers killed and wounded. Whereupon, upon the eleventh of October, my Lord Generall bid call a counsell of warr, where it was resolved for us to issue forth, and to beate them forth of their next workes approachinge to ours. The order was to fall out in two distinct bodies of five hundred musqueteres apiece commaunded—under my charge—by two collonells, Lambert and Rainesborough, who with major Forbesse and Major Wrenn caryed themselves very bravely, marching alongst the enimies lyne of approach, on every side, the enemy abandoning one worke after another, untill wee made ourselves masters of their ordinance. But as the sunn—in her greatest brightnesse—is subject to eclipes, soe it fell out that the forwardnesse and violence of our souldiers, was abated by a hundred pikes of the enemy, who charginge the van of our foote, scattered and in disorder did drive us backward againe, regained there ordinance and enforced us all to a shamefull retreate, the commaunders and m[y]selfe not beinge able to stopp any one man—if t had beene at the stake—. In this retreate [Rainesborough] is either taken prisoner or killed dead and fallen into some ditch, but cannot bee found, his man’s dead body is found. Upon my Lord Generall’s order to shutt the gates and the sense of their owne carriage a body of foote was againe drawne upp, which fallinge againe with as much animositye and heate as formerly they had retyred did drive them againe out of their workes, recovered all the ordinance lost and gayned a halfe cannon and a demy culveringe of brass which wee had not possessed in the first charge. Upon this change of the scene of affaires the Lord Marquiss' Leifetenant-generall Kinge brought downe the whole army from the head quarter, wherewith—the two last peices turned upon the body of their army—they were all forced to a wretched retreat, and to stand att a distance untill wee sleighted their whole lyne of approach. Wee brought of nine peice of ordinance, one demy cannon called one of the Queenes Boes, a demy culveringe of brass, t[w]o sacers, and foure or five drakes safely within our quarters. After they perceived that they h[ad] lost the two brass peeces—which they did imagine wee we[re] not able to drawe of—there whole body of foote with forty colours drawes themselves within pistoll shott to the raged jetty—where their great was—being resolved to fall upon it that night, but by the order they perceived was taken to keepe two hundreth musqueteres without the jetty which could not have beene donn, if they had had ordinance and puttinge so many resolved men within the jetty, they took themselves to their heeles about mid-night and retired to their head quarter; my Lord Newcastle and Leifetenant-generall Kinge were behoulders of the second part of this act, and as is reported, Kinge is wounded in t[w]o severall places. Our ordinance hath donn them a great deale of mischeife, and if wee had had a fresh body of foote they had beene put to a great strayte. In their retyringe ther other god stuck in the dirt untill all the country people were called to drawe her of. Amongst the captaines—who deserved all well—Micklewhaite, Persons, Bethel and Hardstaffe for the horse [and] Captaine Clayton, the bearer hereof, haveinge a generall love of all the souldiers, did very good service. Captaine Salmond, Captaine Sibbald, and Captaine Crookes for the foote did carry themselves very valiantly. I had [a] blowe on the side by a slugg of cutted yron shott from the [Queen]es peice but thankes to God am not the worse. I believe he[r] Majestic if she had knowne where the shott should have would have checked the gunner not charginge full were in service in Yorkshire.

Wee hard the noise of the encounter in Lyncolnshire whereunto God hath pleased to give a happy issue whereby you may persave that God is upon the stage and that Dagon must downe. Since the beginninge of my letter we understand that Colonell Rainsborough is safe."
Signed. Seal. [N. III., 50.]

SIR JOHN BYRON to Colonel ALDRICH, Governor of Aylesbury.

1643, October 16. Oxford.—“I have adventured upon the former acquaintance I had with you, to send this messenger to you, whom I desire you will do no prejudice to, howsoever you entertain the motion I shall make to you, which is only this; that if you please to employ this or any other trusty person to pass betwixt us I shall propound something to you both for your honour and advantage, and that with all imaginable secrecy which shall be punctually performed.” (See Lords' Journals, vi. 284.) [N. III., 51.]

GABRIEL BARBOR to the Honourable SIR JOHN LENTALL, Speaker of the House of Commons (sic).

1643, October 17. Hertford.—“Upon notice received from certain persons fled out of Bedford that Bedford is taken, as this our scout can relate, and who can tell the paines of Sir John Norwich, who twice sending out his warrants for horse and foot in Bedfordshire had not above 18 men come in, both out of town and country, wherein the honourable House may perceive how prepared they are to welcome the enemy, and the like we may fear in our country, for that some captains—as I am informed—do dispatch their soldiers to join with the volunteers of our new militia, and malignant gentlemen and others do all they can to hinder that business for the preparing a freer ingress for the enemy. I hope you will call in this our honest neighbour, who can more particularly relate, and I hope the House will be pleased speedily to promise some aid from his Excellency to Sir John Norwich, who disarmed and brought with him all the Malignants' arms, in and near Bedford. We doubt not you will command our Deputy Lieutenants to come down and give their assistance, lest the Malignants presently take the opportunity to draw the enemy into our county to receive their rents and sequestration business." [N. III., 52.]

JOHN SLEIGH, Mayor, to JOHN RUSHWORTH.

1643, October 19. Berwick.—Acknowledging his letter. "Thank God it was upon my resolution, though much against the mind of some of our Aldermen and others. I could certify you how much I have been opposed. . . The work is done, wherein I bless God I have been a main instrument. At that time and since I am grumbled at exceedingly by many of our neighbours, but weigh it not." Have against my will accepted the office of Mayor for the present year in order to prevent a Malignant being chosen. Seal. [N. III., 53.]

THE EARL OF ESSEX to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to [WILLIAM LENTHALL].

1643, October 21. Nantwich.—Desiring that the King's, Queen's, and Prince's revenues in Cheshire might be applied for the supply of the necessities of the soldiers there, and also that Mr. Henry Cockson might be appointed by the Committee for Sequestrations Solicitor for that County. (Printed in Grey, iii. 48.) [N. III., 55.]

SIR JOHN BYRON to Colonel ALDRICH.

1643, October 21. Oxford.—"I have acquainted his Majesty with your letter, and only him, who is graciously pleased to give you assurance of his acceptance of your service by his own hand. His Majesty hath reason to be cautious in regard of the late failure at Poole upon a treaty of the same nature; and therefore what you propound in this business let it be done with that clearness and ingenuity, that it may not undergo any such suspicion. His Majesty would not have you go suddenly to attempt this business, as thereby to do any prejudice to it, but leaves both the time and manner of doing it to your own discretion, who being on the place can best judge of those circumstances. What you think fit to be done on this side, shall be punctually observed with all secrecy; it rests only now that you declare yourself more particularly, and lay the design so that in human reason—leaving the success to God—it may not fail."

At foot in the King's hand :—"I approve of this letter. Charles R."
[N. III., 56.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON and SIR THOMAS MIDDLETON to WILLIAM
LENTHALL.

1643, October 21.—"Wee with the forces could bee spared out of Cheshire having seised on Wem, a markt towne in Shropshire we endeavoured the entrenchment thereof as a comodious and fitting place for our retyrement, if occacion should enforce us. The Lord Capell and counsell att Shrewsbury—sensible as it seemes of our intencions, and of the dangerous consequence would thereon happen, if they should permitte us quiettlye to fortifye and entrench it—endeavored all they could to prevente and oppose us in it, and to that purpose havinge procured all the assistance that Lichfeild, Dudley, Worcester, Chester, Shropshire and Walles could make they drewe upp into one bodye mette nere Ellesmyre in Shropshire, had three cannons, two drakes, and one great mortarpeece that carryed a thirty pound bullet, had one hundred and twenty odd waggons and cariages laden with bread, biskett, beare, and other provisions, and their armye beinge formydable as consistinge of neere five thousand, as the prisoners since taken by us doe relate, the enemye tooke the feild and encamped uppon yesterdaye sevenight all night in the feild neere Culmeere aboute the midway betwixt Ellesmyre and Wem towards us; but [at] Lappington a place not so soone to bee forgotten by them, remarkable for their late crueltie in burninge of the church, and of the currageous opposition made there against them by a very small party of ours—as in our former lettres wee have signified about sixteen dayes past—the enemye altered his course—though that were the next fittest and rediest way for his advance to Wem—and marched backe and soe to a side slippe towne called Welsh Hampton intendinge to have marched thence the rediest way over a place called Blackhorse Ford towards us; but a partye of our horse being sent forth, and facing him, hee made a stand in the open feilds there aboute Hampton, came not as we expected, stayed all that night ensueinge being Saturday in the open feilds againe and the small villages, and uppon the Sabbath day in steed of advanceinge towards us the enemye with all his said forces, luggage and cariages wheeled to the left hand into Maylor a parte of Flintshire, and directly over a place or great common called Fens heath hee marched into Whitchurch; where the towne being malignant entertayned him for that night, rung bells for demonstraicon of his welcome and added unto him a farther supply of souldiers. . . . Notice thereof beinge given us in Wem wee advanced thence about twelve of the clocke in the night with our cariages and ordynance after him, sett our armye in battalia uppon Prees heath by breake of daye, and being in that posture within two myles of the enemye, wee lay there in expectaicon till aboute noone, that the enemye would have waged battell with us. During which tyne wee oulie tooke two prisoners both Welsh, and of the enemyes srouts, by whom wee gott intelligence that the enemye understandinge of our beinge was that Monday morninge earlye advanced with his whole Armye and forces for the surprize of Namptwich in hope that all the garrison forces were out of towne with us, and that thereuppon they should fynd noe resistance. Whereuppon wee advanced speedelye after the enemye with the bodye of our whole armye, in hope eyther to gett betwixt him and the towne of Namptwich, or els to fall on him in the reare, but the enemye being not to bee overtaken, and the night approachinge, for avoydance of ambuscadoes and other danger that might occurre in the darke unto us, we diverted our course, and marched on the right hand from a towne called Ashe in Shropshire unto Drayton, and thence agayne after a short repast advanced for Nampton whither with all our forces wee came by breake of day upon Tuesday morninge last for the townes releife. But it soe hapned that the enemye having received unexpected enterteynement from the towne of Nampton upon his approach thither which was about eleven of the clocke in the forenoone of the Munday; having received a great repulse, and losse of about forty of his men being taken prisoners—notwithstandinge hee had with his forces seised on Haghton Church and Dartford Hall both within halfe a myle of the towne and there had intended to raise his batterye—nevertheles what with the despaire hee hadd of attayninge the towne by reason of the courages of the defendants and of the intelligence hee received the approach of our armye from Drayton to its succour aboute twelve in the night the enemye rose with all his carriages and in haste backe unto Whitechurch, whither by breake of daye hee came with his armye; in his way having miserablye spoyled and plundered the cuntrye accordinge to his usuall course; whence agayne after a matter of three or four howres refreshment of himselfe and forces, hee advanced straight for the towne of Wem; and aboute two of the clocke upon Tuesday last sate down with his whole armye upon the east and north sides thereof—the other two sides of the towne beinge overdrowned by reason of our entrenchments soe that hee coulde not come to the town on eyther of those partes for to assault it.—But such was our souldiers' wearines by reason of the foresaid long marches the two nights and day before that notwithstandinge our industrye and best endeavours to have contynned in pursuite of the enemye and to have prevented the seige, yet by noe means could any perswacion at all avayle with them, untill they should have a day of refreshment which of necessitye wee were compelled to condescend unto. And thereupon wee advanced from Nampton upon the Wednesday morninge very earlye in pursuite of the enemye, and for the succour of Collonell Mytton, Mr. Mackworthe, Captayne Thomas Hunte and other of our friends in Wem; whoe though they had not within the towne above three hundred men to defend the towne and outworkes, yet soe valiantlye behaved themselves that they defended the walls of the towne—mauger the furious assalte of the enemyes—who likewise came on currageouslye, untill the enemye upon the Wednesday having intelligence of our approach raised his seige, and hasted with all his carriages and ammunicion for Shrewsburye, whom after a fifteen myles march our forces eagerly and most currageouslye pursued as farre as Lee Bridge aboute four myles from Shrewsburye where there was great opposition made by the enemye whilst theirre carriages were in going into Shrewsburye. But aboute twelve of the clocke on Wednesday night after much and great fight, it pleased God to get the victory to our men, whoe having won the bridge pursued the enemye above a myle further, and in the pursuite tooke divers prisoners, and thereupon by reason of the night, and the danger of the enemyes ambuscadoes which were that night very frequent with him, wee with our whole armye after a twenty myles march retreated into Wem; where wee found all our friends theirre left in health, having had but three men slayn in the towne during the seige; whereof Majour Marrow was one. In the fight att the Bridge wee lost five men, and had aboute fifteen wounded. None of ours were taken prisoners, of the enemye many were slayne, whereof ten wee found together slayne att the end of the bridge. Wee tooke there and that night one Captain Chapman a man formerly exchanged, and many other officers and common souldiers. Wee tooke also Collonell Scriven's Captain-Livetenant, prisoner. If the night had not hindred us wee had entred att leastwise into the suburbs of Shrewsburye before our returne; and putt a period to the trouble of that countye, in regard of the great discomfiture of the enemye and that hee fledd before us, many of his greatest comaunders being either slayne, or wounded, and the rest soe overwearyed with longe marches, nightlye watchinges and our pursuites that wee verely conceave they have now cause to forswear their raisinge any more in armes. Collonell William Wyn of Idanvar in Denbighshire, whoe was the pryne comander of the Welsh forces and had broughte downe out of Wales with him about seven hundred musketeers in his regyment, was slayne outright with a shott from the towne, Collonell Scriven was shott in the shoulder, and as wee heare it credibly reported is since dead, though not of that wound yet of another hee received att the Bridge. One Captayne Wyn was slayne, Collonell Wyllis hurte, one Captayne Davys mortallie wounded and taken, his livetenant taken one Captain Ellys sore hurt and wounded, and by report of the prisoners one Captayne Manley is alsoe wounded with many more, besides manye common souldiers and others were slayne in the seige from the towne, and lefte in the open feilds dead and unburyed whose naked bodyes wee sawe miserably torne with the shott and lyeing in the feilds near the towne, which wee gave order to bee buryed. Wee heare likewise that Majour Broughton, Majour Trevour, Captayne Bread, and others of the enemys are alsoe sore wounded, and that the enemye att his retreat from Wem carryed alonge with him four cartloads of wounded officers. Thus you may evidently perceave how God hath helped us, and in what case wee now stand for the reducinge of the whole countye of Saloppe, which in itselfe is rotten, there having not bin soe much as one of them that have joyned or taken up armes with Collonell Mytton since his coming into the countye for its defence or preservacion, and likewise for the reducinge of all Northwales, from whence the maggazyne of all his Majestie's provisions of victualls and men doe proceed, and alsoe of Chester whoe by reason of the cessacion of armes in Ireland dalye expecte the rebells lauding and arrivals. Wee want but only five hundred horse and five hundred foote to helpe us, and a matter of 3,000*l.* in mony. Therwith if you will please to move the House in to afford us, wee doubt not but by God's assistence wee should then bee of abilitye to reduce all these whole cuntryes speedelye. Wee have a designe in hand, wherein if it please God to blesse us with successe, it may prove very advantageous for the state, wee only now want monyes, and for further present supply for the prosecution of the enemye, and reducing of the whole countye of Salopp and the countyes adjacent. And without monyes there is noe good to bee expected of the souldiers." Signed. Seal. [N. III., 57.]

SIR DAVID WATKINS to JOHN RUSHWORTH,

1643, October 23.—“The Committee chosen in London for the affairs of Ireland are extremely discontented that they could not obtain the favour of the House to read their propositions annexed to their Petition, that all the House might have judged the candour of their actions, and extreme willingness to promote the affairs of Ireland in this sad and distracted time. I pray entreat Mr. Speaker to promise them to be read this morning, which will give great satisfaction to the Adventurers, and I am confident will greatly conduce to the safety of Ireland by opposing that horrid cessation.” Seal. [N. III., 58.]

THE EARL OF ESSEX to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, October 26. St. Albans.—Concerning his having released Sir Henry Barclay in exchange for Lieutenant-Colonel Hungerford. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 59.]

SIR JOHN BYRON to Colonel ALDRICH.

1643, October 26.—“I have acquainted his Majesty with your last letter, who approves of your caution, and would not have you adventure anything but upon sure grounds. We are now marching towards Newport with a great part of our horse to secure the fortifying of that place, wherein we hear the enemy intends to give us some interruption. If you can now find a fit opportunity to execute our design I shall be quartered near Buckingham, where I have taken order your letter shall find me if you think fit to write, and shall be ready to come with such a proportion both of horse and foot as you shall prescribe, but—as I formerly wrote to you—you, who are upon the place are the best judge of the circumstances, both now and when this business is to be done, and therefore my request shall still be to you not to precipitate anything, but to lay the designs so that—with God’s blessing—we may effect what we intend.” [N. III., 60.]

THE EARL OF ESSEX to SIR OLIVER LUKE, SIR GILBERT PICKERING, and others.

1643, October 29. St. Albans.—“Having sent out a considerable party of horse and foot from my army for the clearing of the counties of Bedford, Bucks, Northampton, and Hertford, from the ravage and spoil of the enemy, which hath occasioned the enemy to quit the towns of Newport and Bedford, and is in the field drawn out, by God’s goodness my forces are in Newport. I thought good to acquaint you that I hold it fit that a garrison should be drawn into Newport to be raised and maintained by the aforesaid counties, therefore I desire you forthwith to send two committees such as are appointed by the Parliament in each of the aforesaid counties, giving them instructions in the behalf of that county from the which they are sent, to consult upon such ways and means as may speed the aforesaid service, and for the better expediting of it I desire that you would meet tomorrow in St. Albans, where my quarters are, that so they may have my directions in the settlement of that garrison.” (See Commons’ Journals, iii. 295.) Signed. [N. III., 61.]

SIR SAMUEL LUKE to JOHN PYM.

1643, October 29. St. Albans.—“By his Excellency’s command I make bold to give you an account how graciously the Lord hath dealt with him in delivering up into his hands the town of Newport, which might have been defended by the forces which were in it against far greater forces than he had [sent again]st them, but though theirs was great bo[th hors]e and foot, and the King and Queen’s guard interested there, yet their want of arms and ammunition was such that upon Thursday night last they forsook the town and drew themselves into a body between it and Stony Stratford in the fields, where they stood all that night and a great part of the next day, and are still hovering up and down thereabouts. His Excellency’s desire is that some gentlemen of the Associated Counties may come down to him and some out of each of the Counties of Bedford, Buckingham, and Northampton, for the Serjeant-Major-General by his Excellency's command is now finishing those works which were there begun, and before he leaves it will victual the town sufficiently, so that there will need a conference of the Associated Counties both for putting in a garrison and maintaining it afterwards." Seal. [N. III., 62.]

The EARL OF ESSEX to the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF PEERS pro tempore.

1643, October 30. St. Albans.—“Although the foot have been weakened more for want of pay than they were at the battle of Newberry Wash, and the rest of the march, and the horse much wasted by continual fight and duty, yet it pleased God so much to advance the cause, as that although the enemy was possessed at Newport with greater force than we could spare to send thither against them—it being thought unfit by the Council of War to move with the whole army by reason of the deepness of the ways—yet such a panick fear possessed them, as that they quitted the place, we being upon our march, and your forces are possessed of it. But without a present considerable supply of money to pay the army, it will quickly be consumed, we being not able to recruit it, and it was well known to all that, though the army had but a little pay allowed them, and some clothes, how many of the old soldiers came in to us when we went for the relief of Gloucester. And, my Lord, soldiers that have done so good service will expect duly their pay if not reward. . . In the second place I have to acquaint you how gallantly and faithfully Colonel Aldrich, Governor of Aylesbury, hath discharged his duty, having had such great temptations to have done the Parliament so great a disservice, which your Lordships will perceive by these enclosed. And if the Parliament please to take notice of it, it will be a great encouragement for others to do them service in letting that garrison be paid, it being a frontier and he rewarded or at least his arrears paid him. Postscript.—I thought not fit to publish the business concerning Aylesbury, till we were possessed of Newport.” (See Lords' Journals, vi. 289.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 63.]

WILLIAM GOLDINGHAM, RICHARD HARLAKENDEN, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, October 31. [Saffron] Walden.—Desiring the speedy passing of an Ordinance offered from them by Mr. Grimston for levying money in the county. Signed. [N. III., 64.]

JOHN LADE, Mayor, SIR JAMES OXINDEN, and others, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, October 31. Canterbury.—“What our Cathedrals have been, how prejudicial to the public weal, is a thing so well known, as that we shall need to say no more.” We are constrained by the daily complaints of the scandalous and seditious preachments in the Cathedral to request that they also may be sequestered and some more religious and judicious preachers appointed. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 299.) Signed. Seal.

Enclosed:—“Such and so scandalous, have the preachments of the Cathedral of Canterbury, especially of late, been. that one Dr. Jackson, Senior Prebend, was himself in person with Mr. Mayor of the said city, and wished the gates of the church might be shut up, that there might be no more such preaching. Signed ‘John Lade, Mayor.’” [N. III., 65.]

(Colonel RALPH ASSHETON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1643, October. Manchester.]—"The appearance of our dangers by these and the like intelligence of the common enemy the Irish by sea or the Isle of Man together with the eminency of so potent a force upon our Borders from Yorkshire, and our county being so long in extent and so abundant in Papists and persons ill affected, who are no longer quiet than they are overpowered and upon the least commotion ready to bestir themselves to our general destruction at home enforces us, together with the sending up of these letters . . . intercepted from Ireland to move the due consideration of our so general perils, which we humbly conceive cannot be more probably prevented them by the hastening of the Scottish forces in to our assistance and prevention of the total loss of the North parts, if it be much longer delayed." We also desire the benefit of our County Palatine Seal and that a Sheriff be appointed. Postscript.—For our better securities from dangers out of Yorkshire and facilitating any service we may be able to do our friends expelled thence in the recovery of their estates, we much desire the Lord Fairfax might be accommodated with a better strength of foot to discourage the greatest body of the enemy from falling on our borders." Signed. Scal. [N. VIII., 129.]

SIR EDWARD NICHOLAS to LORD GORING.

1643, November 1. Oxford.—"I have acquainted the king and queen with your Lordship's of the 29th of October st[ilo]n[oro], who were both very glad to hear of your Lordship's safe arrival, as having often spoken solicitously concerning the danger of your passage. Their Majesties are extremely joyed at the good news you write of the Princess Royal's being so much grown, and of her Highness being so well pleased with the tender care of the Prince and Princess of Orange towards her. The French Ambassador—Mons. de Harcourt—hath been here at Oxford almost this fortnight, and we are here so entered into the Treaty, as that upon what the Ambassador delivered there to the king there have

You may boldly affirm that all the forces that are arrived or sent for from Ireland are only the English soldiers, Protestants who are not able to live there for want of supplies, and that they were sent for as well to preserve them from starving as to make use of them here. If the rebellious city of London had as much disposition to peace, as we that are in Oxon, you would see a happy end of the present intestine troubles here. I hear that your son the Colonel is sent back into the North to be exchanged, but I have it not from so good a hand, as to give your Lordship assurance of the truth of it." . . . [N. III., 66.]

Major-General PHILIP SKIPPON to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1643, November 2, one p.m. Newport.—“Our party of horse is well returned . . . without loss of one man, as far as I yet hear. The passage to the enemy’s quarters at Alderton within two miles of Towcester was so narrow that but one horse—as they say—could pass at once, and the enemy was very vigilant, yet Col. Middleton—a very worthy sober man—with only Col. Harvie’s regiment—for Col. Turner’s he left to make good the passage behind him, and Col. Norris’ regiment being to watch this night went not—charged in with their guards, killed—as they say—about 20 men have brought away as many prisoners with a lieutenant of horse all which and some other prisoners taken at our coming hither shall . . . be sent to-morrow to St. Albans. All the officers of both the regiments of horse that lay at Alderton viz. that which was Carnarvon’s now Nelvill’s and Sands’—excepting his lieutenant and lieutenant-colonel—were there, but kept close in the houses so that it was not thought fit to stay so long—the enemy at Towcester having taken the alarm—as to break into them. ’Tis reported they intended to have visited some of our quarters, and now the rather being provoked. I hope we shall be provided for them if they come, and all shall be well by the help of our God, on which I wholly rely. The Lieutenant that is prisoner says that as soon as they have fortified Towcester all shall to their winter quarters except Sir Charles Lucas with his brigade consisting of 2,500 horse, who is to go to Huntingdon, and so into Suffolk, Norfolk &c. I have not yet heard what Northampton horse have done last night,—who were resolved to try on their side also—therefore I cannot yet inform your Excellency. . . 'Tis a thousand pities the enemy should nestle so near us. If I had a competent strength . . . I would have a bout with them, but as I am, and this place being yet so very open, it is not counselable, for the enemy hath 12 regiments of horse 3,000 foot at least, six pieces, one a demi-culverin, and many commanded foot out of Oxford being come unto them,—if our intelligence be true—I beseech your Excellency cause four good scouts to stay here with me, for I have none but by chance, and be pleased to call upon the Committee of Hertfordshire, and let Sir Samuel Luke do the like to those of Bedfordshire that we may have money to pay our old soldiers on Saturday next, or we shall be but in an ill condition with them. Good my Lord think upon us and there shall be nothing wanting here by the help of God to hold all in good order. There is a rumour that there is money come to St. Albans for the army. If so, and we should want here, all our soldiers will leave us and go thither.” . . . Seal. [N. III., 71.]

St. Albans.—Stating that the Committees of Northampton, Buckingham, Hertford and Bedford, had agreed to pay eight fourteenths of the cost of the garrison of Newport, and suggesting that Cambridge, Huntingdon and Essex ought to contribute proportionally. ROBERTON THORITON, Mayor, WILLIAM STEWART, SIR FREDERICK HAMILTON, ROBERT STEWART, ROBERT SANDERSON, THOMAS STAPLES, JAMES GALBRITH, THOMAS DIRDO, SIDNEY CUNNINGHAM, ARCHIBALD COLVILL, EDWARD HARTWELL, ROBERT LAWSON, JAMES ERSKYN, HENRY VAUGHAN, SIMON PASK, HENRY FINCH, HENRY OSBORNE, and JOHN KILNER to the LORD CHANCELLOR OF SCOTLAND and others.

1643, November 8. Londonderry.—“Amidst the many sad resolutions of our affairs, it is not the least addition to our sufferings that after our best endeavours employed against the bloody and barbarous rebels, as with happy success so with great expense, at last our sun should so far set in a cloud, as we should be misunderstood by your Lordship of most eminent place and quality in that kingdom, to whom next unto God and our king, and the Parliament and State of England it is our desire to approve ourselves. If we could dispense with the loss of our estates, yet the blood of our dearest friends and countrymen, so cruelly, treacherously and abundantly shed, cannot but still sound a loud alarm in our ears. And if that also could perhaps be passed by in silence, yet we hope the divine mercy will never suffer us to fall into such security, as to make light account of the great hazard which may ensue unto the true worship of God in this kingdom by the prevailing of that bloody and heretical party.

If your Lordship and the rest of that most honourable State may be pleased to afford a serious view of our present condition, and what the strength may be of our small and scattered forces consisting of men robbed of their estates at first, and since exhausted of their credit by two years' service without any considerable pay, your Lordships will find many inevitable necessities cast upon us for the intermission of action this short time past, amongst which your Lordships' resolution to withdraw the forces commanded by Monroe, joined with our own absolute want of ammunition, victuals and all other necessaries is not the least. Neither could it be expected from us that when General-Major Monroe thought fitter to retire with his forces into his quarters upon intimation of the cessation, we should still have kept the field especially in this season of the year, which of itself inforceth a cessation to men so meanly accommodated in all respects. Yet some of us being necessitated to go to Dublin gave order that our men should stay upon the fields to destroy or gain the rebels' corn. And if it shall please God to incline your Lordships and the State of Scotland to a brotherly and tender feeling of our condition, and to a just sense of the annoyances of our extirpation hence, and to be pleased to continue your army under Monro, and to take into your care our present wants of victuals ammunition &c., till we can be otherwise supplied and to be a means to hasten those supplies promised and provided for us by the Parliament in England—all which we most humbly desire—and also to recommend our wants and dangerous estate and condition to the King's Majesty and Parliament of England, your Lordships may rest assured we shall want neither affection nor zeal to the prosecution of these rebels, so long as there runneth a drop of warm blood in our veins, whereunto we are also warranted by his Majesty's favourable Commissions." Copy. [N. SIR WILLIAM BRERETON TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 11. Wrexham.—“Wee drewe out upon Tuesday last five Cheshire foote companies and three or foure troopes of horse and three or foure companies of countrey dragoones, which were all we could spare—consideringe them at Stafford and att Wem—wherewith theire joined five companies of Lancashire foote and one or two troopes of horse and one or two companies of dragoones under the comand of Colonell John Booth and Lieutenant-Colonell Peter Egerton, and about twoe hundred foote and one troope of horse of Sir Thomas Myddelton’s, with which wee advanced that night to Farne which is a little towne on Cheshire side—over against the Holt in Wales, wherein the enemy kept a garrison in the castle and had contracted all the strengthe and powre of Wales for our resistance for which purpose they runge their bells backward and fired the becons throughout Wales to maintaine that passage against us beinge our onely way into Wales for which end they had alsoe made a towre and drawbridge and stronge gates upon the bridge soe as both they and wee conceived it verie difficulte if not altogether ympossible to make way for our passage over the bridge and therefore our designe was to face them upon the bridge and in the meane tyme to attempt by boates to lande over some of our foote; to prevent which our enemy was soe watchfull and circumspecte as that they placed their ambuscadoes in the hedges and soe soone as our boates appeared on the water they gave fire and beate our men from their boates, soe as wee were in much danger to loose them, when there remayned unto us noe other way but to march downe the riverside with our foote towardes some cariages of ours—wherein wee had turnells which wee had purposely provided to amaze the enemy—as though we had intended to have forced our passage there alsoe. To interrupt and prevent which intended designe of ours they brought their foote all alonge the riverside soe farre remote from the bridge as that they gave us the opportunitie to make a desperate assault upon the bridge by placeinge ladders to the toppe of the drawbridge and cuttinge the ropes. Which beinge done and the bridg falling downe wee had accesse to the gates and casting over some hand granadoes amongst the Welsh men—who there remayned—which strucke such a terror into them as that they all run away and could not be obtained to returne. Whereby wee had a verie faire opportunitie to force open the gates; which being done the enemy was without much difficultie beaten from their double workes within the gates; whose runinge away did soe exceedingly amaze their forces who were otherwise verie much encouraged by repulsinge our men and by their hopes to gaine our boates att which tyme the most of our men were exceedingly discouraged, when it pleased God by this unexpected entrance to open a doore into Wales. Soe as the glorie thereof is wholly to be ascribed to God to whom alone the same is due, and who is able to make way for the advancement of his own worke through the greatest difficulties, yea such indeed as in humane apprehension seeme impossible: such was the entrance over the bridge which they judged an impregnable place. There was Colonell Ellis’ regiment of foote, Major Trevor his regiment of horse and all the forces which could be raised in the adjoineing partes of Wales. Whom wee pursued, and routed both horse and foote, tooke about fouretie comon prisoners, one captaine, foure or five leyfetenantes one cornet and some say one of them is a Lieutenant-Colonell whom wee have not had tyme yet to examine. In this fight and pursuite wee lost few or none. And aboute six of the clocke upon Thursday eveninge wee entred Wrexham which is one of the chiefe townes in these partes of Wales and lyes within seven miles of Chester verie comodious to hinder all the passages to Chester. The enemy fly apace and begin to remove all their goodes out of these partes, but Holt Castle holds out, butt is besiedged. Wee have likewise obstructed the passages neere Chester on the other sides att Tarvin and Wirrall soe as I hope through Gods mercie wee may be able to give a good accompt thereof if care may be taken that the kinges forces may not fall downe upon us to oppresse and swallows us up and that some from my Lord Generall's armye may waite upon and imploy them." Signed. Seal torn out. [N. III., 75.]

The MAYOR and JURATS OF SANDWICH to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 14. Sandwich.—Stating that the ministers appointed by the House to the parishes of St. Clement and St. Peter there required the parents of any children to be baptized to give them satisfaction of the faith they hold themselves, that a seaman refused to give such satisfaction to the minister of St. Clement's, and had his child baptized by Mr. Alderson, that the minister then demanded that Mr. Alderson and the seaman should be punished, and desiring the direction of the House in the premises. Seal. [N. WILLIAM GOULD to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 15. Plymouth.—“Since my coming hither with Colonel Wardlaw . . . and those few men we brought with us . . . we have met with many difficulties, chiefly in the settling of the authority of the said Colonel to the command of the Militia here, which hath been mainly opposed by some of the town, who strive to uphold the Mayor in the managing of the military affairs, which he is not capable of, and the soldiery will not submit unto. This occasioned the loss of Mount Stanford . . . upon which loss, for the prevention of further mischief I was enforced to take the fort and island, the most considerable strengths in the West, out of the hands of the townsmen, who had long kept them without any care of providing them with sufficient garrisons, provisions and ammunition—wherewith I have now stored them—to the inevitable loss of both, if it had not been thus prevented, for the town cannot be safe without their safety, nor will be useful to the enemy though taken, these places being secured. What I have done herein I desire may be approved by the House, and do pray that further care may be had . . . for the preservation of this town, now a long time closely besieged . . . for we want men, money, ammunition, and arms, the 500 men brought down by me being near half killed, wounded and sick, and besides those left, few fighting men in the town.” Seal. [N. III., 79.]

The EARL OF WARWICK to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 15. Down.—Complaining that the ship keepers at Chatham have been without victuals for the last ten days, concerning Captain Hodges and his prizes, and forwarding the complaints of merchants of Dover and elsewhere that all their foreign letters have been opened at Rochester, and through the carelessness of the clerks many letters and bills of exchange have been “imbezilled.” (See Commons' Journals, iii. 314, where the date is misprinted 5th.) Signed. [N. III., 80.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 15. Hawarden Castle.—“Upon Saturday last Sir Thomas Middleton and myself, with some nine troops of horse and two small foot companies, marched from Wrexham towards Chester, leaving the city two miles on the right hand, and advanced to Hawarden Castle, which is a strong castle, and in very good repair, and is commodiously situated for blocking up Chester, which was so unprovided as that upon summons it was delivered up unto us, and the gentlemen and others thereabouts did submit themselves and are admitted into the Parliament’s protection. Sir T. Middleton is returned to Wrexham to a general muster appointed upon Monday, myself remaining here in the Castle, which is unfurnished and wants a new Draw Bridge, which I desire to secure and victual with all possible speed. The whole county hereabouts tremble and dare not make any opposition and Colonel Davies and Colonel Mostyn are fled and their commanders dispersed, only we hear that the Bishop of York, and the Bishops of Chester, St. Asaph, and Bangor, and the Grandees of the country are at Conway, which they have exceedingly fortified, forming the body of an army and expecting the landing of the Irish army, under the command—as they report—of the Earl of Ormond, but I rather believe of Colonel Moneke or Colonel Gibson, whom they daily expect with 3,000 or 4,000 old soldiers, besides the Irish rebels; if the coming over of these could be prevented or they repulsed I doubt not, through God’s assistance, to be able to give a good account of Chester, as also of all these parts of Wales. But I received certain intelligence from Dublin that 11 Bristol ships and 15 Wexford barques were on Tuesday November 7th come to the Bar of Dublin to transport 3,000 or 4,000 soldiers to the relief of these parts. I do therefore present this my humble request, that if these foreign forces throng in upon us, or if any part of his Majesty’s army fall downwards into Staffordshire or Cheshire, that then some considerable part of my Lord General’s army suitable thereunto may be designed to wait upon and attend their motions, whereby we shall not only be much enabled and encouraged to do the better service, but it may also contribute very much towards the settling and composing of all these parts of the Kingdom of England and Dominion of Wales.

Postscript.—Since I concluded this letter I have received several advertisements of this Bristol fleet hovering upon the coasts of Ireland. Some report they have taken some of your ships bound for Liverpool laden with arms and ammunition, which though it be uncertain whether it be a true report, yet it is most certain that these will intercept and seize all those that come from London to Liverpool, and it is not to be expected that your small fleet at Liverpool should be able to afford them any protection or relief, besides the danger of conveying over the Irish army, which I make bold to present to your consideration, and do humbly beseech that it may be recommended to my Lord of Warwick to give some speedy order herein.” Signed. Seal. [N. III., 81.]

[WILLIAM LENTHALL] to [SIR WILLIAM BRERETON].

[1643, November 16.]—By order of the House thanking him for his services, refusing his request about the King’s, Queen’s, and Prince’s revenues in Cheshire, contained in his letter of October 21st, but promising an equal sum if proposed in a more convenient way, and enclosing an order concerning Eccleshall Castle. (See Commons’ Journals, iii. 313.) Draft. [N. XII., 87.]

[SIR WILLIAM WALLER] to [WILLIAM LENTHALL].

1643, November 16. Farnham.—“When I came to the generall rendezvous att Farnham, I tooke a view of the army, which consisted of 18 troopes of Horse, 7 companyes of Dragoones, three citty regiments, mine own—yet imperfect and not above three hundred strong—and four companyes of Colonell Jones his regiment. With these I marched to Alton with intention to have proceeded on to Winchester, where the body of the enemy then lay. But I there received information from good hands—some out of the citty, and some out of the country—that there were very considerable forces drawn out of [the] King’s army to cutt off my retreat. Whereupon I [altere]d my resolution, and marched to Basing; up[on the ground, that if the intelligence were true [I should] either fight with them singly—before any [other par]ty should joyne with them—or if I found my [sel]f too weake, make a safe retreat to Farnham, but a few miles distant from thence. If it were false, I might either make an assay upon that house—which by all men was represented to me to be but a slight peece and if I could carry itt, itt would have been a great encouragement to the soldiour—or otherwise I might advance towards Winchester, which that way was but two dayes march and the most direct way from Alton thither was no less. Att my first coming to Basing I received an assurance that there was no danger could threaten me—for the present—from Oxford, whereupon I resolved to attempt that place. I was first guided to the north side of the house which was most commanded and fittest to batter but upon a triall I found that the enemy had fortified most strongly on that side, with diverse retrenchments one under the command of another. Wee tooke in some outhouses adjoyning to their workes, but the enemy fired them so that wee were faine to quitt them. Wee lost in that fight twelve or thirteen men, and as many more hurt. This and the coldness of the night with fowle weather was a great discouragement to the London regiments, who were not used to this hardness in so much as the officers came to me and made itt their request they might be drawn off, with an intimation that many of the souldiours were hirelings, and their monye being spent, they began to thinke of their returne. The first remonstrance in this kinde was made by the field officers, the second by the captaines and inferiour officers. This was a great surprise to me, but the weakness of my condition without them, inforced me to yeeld upon condition they would give me in their desires under their hands which they did. Upon this, I drew the army into Basing Stoke to refresh itt for two or three dayes. In the meantime I seised upon the Vine—an house so called belonging to Mr. Sands—and putt some forces into itt, intending to fortify itt, and in regard of the ueerne[ss to Basing] to make itt a bridle to that place, to cutt off their contributions, and subsistence. The army beeing sufficiently refreshed, I resolved to [have ano]ther sling att Basing, upon an information I had received of a place that might give me some advantage. I intended to have fallen on before day, but the sluggishness of the soldiours was such that itt was after-noonne a good while before I could come upp. The order was to give the ennemy allarums on all sides, and to fall on, on two sides, the one thorough the Parke, the other on the side towards Basing towne. Att this last place I sett upp my rest where Major Strahan,—a gallant brave gentleman as drawes a sword—fell on with his dragoones, seconded by mine own regiment, and the four companyes of Colonell Jones, and the petardier with them. This was performed with as much courage and resolution as could be don by men. The ennemy had quitted one of their workes, our men gained the rampart, and the petardier applied his petard, but unluckily mistooke the place; for whereas he should have applied to a place in the old wall which was but a brick and a half thick, he sett it against a doore that was bricked upp and lined with earth, so that itt tooke no effect. In the mean time that squadron of the red regiment that should have fallen on upon the Parke side on a worke that flanked us, and where there remained but six musketers, the rest beeing runn away, could not be drawn upp, only they fired out of distance, and so fell off againe. This gave the ennemy new courage, so that they fell againe into their workes and beat our men off. I lost in this service, thirty men upon the place, and neere upon one hundred hurte. That night fell out so fowle that I could not possibly keep my men upon their gards, so that I was forced to draw into Basing. The ne[xt morning] early my scowtes came in, and gave me advertisement that Sir Ralph [Hopton with his] whole strength was upon his march within six miles of me, and by a party [which I] had sent out towards Reading, I was informed that Sir Jacob Ashly had drawne a considerable body of horse and foot out of Reading and the parts thereabouts, and was not farr from me. Whereupon I speedily drew the army into the field, and sent out fresh partyes on all sides to discover what way the ennemy held, for by some prisoners which my men fetch't in I was informed that Sir Ralph struck out of the road towards me, and marched Newbery way towards Kingscleare,—which was to joyne with the Reading forces—. When the regiments were drawn out, as I was riding about to give orders, I was saluted with a mutinous cry among the city regiments of 'Home, Home.' So that I was forced to threaten to pistoll any of them that should use that base language, and an ennemy in the field so neere. With this they were all very well acquietted. I then sent for all the field officers, to take advice with them concerning my proceeding. There were three propositions moved. The first, to march upp to the ennemy, and fight with him; the second, to march to Winchester, and seise upon that; the third to retire to Farnham and to preserve the country from thence, untill further supplies came to strengthen us. The first was carried cleere, and the officers dismissed to their severall charges. But they were no sooner returned to their regiments, but the mutiny broke out againe, with a protestation those of the city would not march one foot further. Upon this I was enforced to retire to Farnham where I now am. A great part of those regiments are already gon to London, and the rest threaten to follow immediately, so that I am in a deserted condition. What I can do with my horse, and an handfull [of foot] I will, God willing, perform with my uttermost endeavours. Itt [grieves m]y soule that I can do no more. I have some requests to make which w[ith reason]ableness, I shall tender to you. The first is that those regiments, which are levying for the West, may be immediately compleated, and sent upp to me with all possible speed. 2^y that wee may have some monyes sent to releve us, for wee are all in a most wretched degree of want. 3. That command may be given that what forces may be spared out of Kent, and the neighbour countyes may be dispatched away to me indelaidly. I have written to them, but I suppose some signification from the House would quicken them. 4. I desire that what I have written concerning the London regiments may not be taken in such a sence as might have a reflection of dishonour either upon the city unto which I owe all service and respect and particular obligations, or upon all the regiments, for there be many worthy gallant men amongst them. But the truth is, amongst the hirelings which were promiscuously taken upp, I have reason to suspect there [were] Malignants, that putt themselves upon this service only to overthrow itt, and they are the men that have blowne these coles. 3. [That there] may be some exemplary punishment inflicted upon runnaways; And lastly, that you will vouchsafe to pardon my many fa[ilings in this ser]vice which are not only my fault but my punishment." *Partly torn. SIR THOMAS STANLEY, Colonel RALPH ASSHETON, RICHARD HOLLAND, and ROBERT HYDE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 20. Manchester.—"We have now received certain intelligence from Colonel Moore that 11 ships laden with Irish soldiers are discovered near our coast, and already landed in Worrall. Another letter from a friend concerning the same thing reports the number of the ships to be 19 discovered by himself and by two captains at sea, And that one who was in Dublin the last Thursday night gave information that 10,000 are intended to be landed in these parts. We have also received information from several lands but especially from the Committee at Derby of the Earl of Newcastle's advance with a great force both horse and foot and many carriages into Derbyshire, where they spoil and destroy all before them in their accustomed manner, and at Derby they expect them daily. It is conceived that Hastings is joined with them, and whether their intent be indeed for Derby or to fall down into these parts is not yet discovered. Our assistance and march towards them is earnestly desired by the Committee, the rather, in regard Sir William Brereton and Sir Thomas Middleton having their forces now in Wales, and intending to besiege Chester, if not prevented by the landing of the Irish, cannot for the present help them without prejudice to their present designs, and we for our parts are as unable to answer their expectations as well in regard of the arrival of the Irish as also because of a strong garrison—being 30 colours—now lying in Halifax by reason whereof we are forced to keep a strong and constant guard upon all the east border of our county. Besides we are vehemently threatened to be visited by a party raised in Westmoreland being—as is reported—2,000 or 3,000 in a body. Being thus environed all that can be expected from us at present is the preservation of our own borders—if possible—wherein we shall employ our utmost and leave the success to God . . . We earnestly desire that some course . . . may be thought of for the prevention of the further landing of the Irish and suppression of those already landed, and likewise that directions may be given to the Earl of Manchester's forces to fall upon the enemy in Derbyshire or Yorkshire, and further that upon the first opportunity" some ammunition may be sent us. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 320.) Signed. [N. III., 84.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON and W. MANWARINGE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 21.—Since my last letter "there are two Bristol and Barnstaple ships and four others which have hovered these three or four days upon our coasts. If their men be not landed this day there are not many of them come on shore. It is reported by some that have been amongst them that there are three regiments under the command of Sir Michael Earneley, Sir Foulk Hunckes and Colonel Gibson, and that so soon as the ships are cleared of them, they are to return into Ireland to transport 8,000 or 10,000 more. If these had stayed but ten days longer, it is conceived the city of Chester could not have subsisted, whereas now we are constrained to draw our forces together and to unite them into stronger bodies to prevent their landing, which they seem not yet to attempt—whatsoever they intend—upon our Cheshire coasts, but on the Welsh shore about 16 or 20 miles below Chester. The Earl of Newcastle's forces press very hard upon the other side of our county which adjoins to Yorkshire. Derbyshire is much infested with them, and it is said that the Cavaliers are fortifying Chesterfield. It is also reported that the Earl of Newcastle's forces draw downwards towards Halifax, and that there are 30 foot companies thereabouts whereby the Lancashire forces are employed so as it should seem there is some correspondence and combination betwixt these and the Irish forces at one and the same time to attempt and distress these parts which were in a very fair way to have been settled and reduced entirely, if this shipping had not come out of Ireland. I shall presume therefore humbly to present this request that the Scots may be hastened and speeded before the countries be wasted and destroyed, and that some considerable number of shipping able to command and master the fleet, which now infesteth these coasts, may be speedily sent down, otherwise you may conclude these ships of yours which are six men of war which we have prepared will be in danger to be taken, Liverpool your only haven will be hazarded, and all these parts of the kingdom of England and Wales miserably distressed and ruined, if not subdued." Signed. Seal. [N. III., 85.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

(A duplicate of the last, in Sir William's own hand throughout, except that the following postscript is added.

"I am informed that these ships have taken Lurtine's ship, wherein was the ammunition sent down, part for me and part for the Lancashire men. It is my humble suit that when you send a fleet to clear these coasts there may be sent down 100 pair of pistols, 300 muskets, and 200 or 300 firelocks. These are not to be procured upon any terms in this country wherein I could raise good store of men if I could arm them. We desire also some 30 or 40 barrels of powder, wherof we have great use, having been in continued action in Shropshire and Wales ever since Colonel Mitton came down, which was in the middle of September.") the EARL OF DENBIGH.

1643, November 22. Wem.—“We cannot believe after so many expressions of your care of this country that you will desert it. . . . We beseech you pardon our boldness if we now lay claim to that power the . . . Parliament upon our solicitation have invested you with in reference to our safeguard, for certainly we shall have little benefit by it, if speedily it be not put forth in these parts. The rebels are now landed in Flintshire about Mesten (Mostyn) to the number of 3,000, as is reported, and Lord Capell is preparing to receive some part of them into Shrewsbury, his confidence being more in them than the foot of this county. Our garrison serves but for a present resting place, but cannot resist a puissant enemy, yet such is the interest we have in the people's affections, and such is the general distaste . . . Shrewsbury and the generality of the inhabitants of this county have conceived against Lord Capell's forces, that did your Lordship with a body of horse appear you would soon be master of the field, and have a confluence to you of a sufficient number of foot, might they have arms . . . All our labours is lost, if many days be spent before you come, and we of necessity must either quit the country and expose our friends to ruin or perish ourselves with them.” Copy. [N. XII., 62.]

Colonel THOMAS MYTTON, HUMPHREY MACKWORTH, and others, to RICHARD MOORE.

1643, November 22. Wem.—“Our want of a Commander-in-chief arms and horse makes us now useless and our condition desperate. Had we conceived the Lord of Denbigh would have thus neglected us, we would not run ourselves into such a danger. God hath hitherto exceedingly preserved us, but we cannot expect safety longer, if we have no better means of subsistence. The rebels are now landed in Wales and are hastening into Shropshire where there is preparation of the Lord Capel to receive them. The care that every country hath of itself will leave us destitute of help, and deprive us we fear of that little aid that for the present is left us to keep us this garrison, for since this news the Cheshire commanders sent to withdraw the companies they lent us, and which are the only stay of our garrison. As you tender the safety of this county and the prevention of much mischief in the kingdom which must needs happen, if the rebels here receive not a stop, we beseech you hasten forces into these parts, with store of arms and ammunition. Foot enough may be raised here, but our arms are lost and lent to our auxiliary friends, and none left us to arm new forces. We desire therefore 1,000 muskets and snaphances may be sent us, and if the Lord of Denbigh come not the four case of drakes and all his arms and ammunition . . . Postscript.—We hear the Lord Byron with a great force is coming against us. If horse be intended for Herefordshire I pray you let it be hastened down." Signed. Seal. [N. III., 91.]

WILLIAM CAWLEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 23. Farnham.—Acquainting the House "in what extreme sad condition I both hear and find Sir William Waller's army proceeding especially from want of pay, whereby they are altogether disabled for the present to do the Parliament that service, which if supplied with moneys may be expected from them. The soldiers, both horse and foot, want clothes, boots, shoes and almost all necessaries for their subsistence, yea their exigency is such and so great that when they are commanded upon any service—be the expedition ever so emergent—many of them cannot stir for want of money to shoe their horses . . . If speedy course be not taken to supply this so considerable an army with a round sum at least 10,000*l.*—for a small sum will rather discontent than satisfy—it's much feared by those who best know that a sudden ruin of this brigade will inevitably follow. I find Sir William Waller . . . very much troubled that he cannot punish the abounding vices and enormities of his soldiers for fear of mutinies and desertions to which for want of pay they are too apt, which not only produces a contempt of their officers, but great discontent also to the country, from whom they are sometimes necessitated to take that for their livelihood which the people can ill spare." Seal. [N. III., 92.]

SIR SAMUEL LUKE to the COMMITTEE at COVENTRY.

1643, November 23.—Informing them by the Earl of Essex' command "That on Wednesday night last there lodged at Ainxton some 10 miles from Oxford not far from Chipping Norton some 2,000 or 3,000 of the King's forces, horse and foot, commanded by the Lord Dowens and Byron, who report themselves 5,000 and that they were to march into Shropshire, or else Sir William Brereton would gain the whole county. If you find they design for any other place, you will give notice thereof and strive to prevent them." Copy. [N. XII., 66.]

SIR WILLIAM WALLER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 23. Farnham.—Having acknowledged the readiness of the House to take care for the preservation of this poor Brigade and protested their faithfulness I "crave leave to offer to your consideration the necessitous condition under which we labour. Want of money and want of clothes have produced want of obedience and want of health, I had almost said want of heart in this army; working like a malignant fever upon the spirits of our men, and dulling the edge of our swords, though I am confident the metal is unaltered. I cannot but take notice with humble thankfulness of 5,000*l.* voted for our supply, but I beseech you give me leave without offence to tell you it is impossible for this sum or less than double the proportion of this sum to stop the clamorous wants of our soldiers, for the last payment was so small that that it would not enable them to buy themselves so many necessaries as they wanted for this winter service and their hopes being fixed upon this supply, if this should fall short, it would instead of a satisfaction prove an irritation to them. God knows, I write this with a sad sense, but I have reason to doubt what command I shall be able to retain upon those, whom I can neither reward nor punish. I humbly desire there may be some present course taken to supply the army. I have presumed to send some parties to Godalming and Midhurst to take up some coarse cloths, linen, shoes, boots and stockings for the soldiers, and if there may be any assurance given to pay for their commodities, I am confident it would be best both for the soldiers and the country." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 319.) Seal. [N. III., 93.]

THE EARL OF WARWICK TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 24. Downes.—Stating that he had ordered the Ordnance in Upnor Castle to be brought to the Tower, as the Castle might be easily taken, and these guns might then turned on Chatham Dock, but that the gunners there refused to allow their removal alleging they had some prisoners there "as though ordnance were fit weapons to guard a few prisoners," and desiring the House to give order for their immediate removal. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 248, 345.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 94.]

ARTHUR STAVELEY, THOMAS HESELRIGE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 24. Leicester.—"This garrison of Leicester lies between Ashby and Belvoir, two strongholds of the enemy within this County, besides Newark and Warton House, confining close upon us, as also the road to Nottingham Derby and Manchester, so that the small strength of horse that is left us is continually employed either in convoys of ammunition and other commodities betwixt North and South or in service against the enemy, wherein—by the blessing of God—we have been always successful. Nevertheless they being too strong in horse for us take our friends, gather our rents, and hinder the collection of the weekly taxes, by reason whereof our soldiers are in great want of pay, so that the other day they refused service till we had taken up a great sum of money to satisfy them for the present upon our own engagement. Our humble suit . . . is that all such money as we can raise in this county may be disposed of for the maintenance of our forces." Signed. Seal. [N. III., 95.]

Colonel THOMAS MYTTON, HUMPHREY MACKWORTH and others to the EARL OF DENBIGH.

1643, November 24.—Our remoteness and the environment of our enemies prevents us from having answers to our letters, or knowing if our messengers have come safe to you. If you think these countries worth the gaining, you would with speed repair to us with your Body of Horse, though you want foot. We dare assure you, your regiment may be speedily completed here. We want only arms, which we hope you will supply us with. Sir Thomas Middleton hath taken the Fort Wrexham, Harding Castle and divers other places, all the Welsh are fled and dispersed, not an enemy near him save the Castle of Holt, which can have no relief. Chester is beleaguered round and can have no assistance. 500 Horse will clear this county and bring the country to subjection, which done, the towns will soon yield, but delays will prove exceeding dangerous, and make an easy work difficult, the men flying to strongholds and making every house a garrison. Sir William Brereton and Sir Thomas Middleton are both so engaged in their own countries that we cannot rely upon assistance from them. They have wholly left us to ourselves, and to your protection to which they advise us to have recourse.

Postscript.—We humbly desire you to send us all the arms that can be spared, we can raise 1,000 foot in one week had we but arms; the country comes in exceedingly. Our Auxiliary friends have got a great part of our arms. Copy. [N. XII., 68.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to SIR WILLIAM WALLER.

1643, November 25.—Acquainting him with the vote of the additional sum of 5,000*l.* (See Commons' Journals, iii. 319, 320.) Draft. [N. XII., 69.]

Colonel HENRY MILDMAY, SIR THOMAS HONYWOOD and others to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 25. Chelmsford.—Stating that five of the Committee had audited Sir Thomas Barrington's accounts and found them correct, and desiring that he should receive some acknowledgment for his services, and asking that Colonel Long should be caused to give an account. Signed. [N. III., 96.]

Colonel THOMAS MYTTON, HUMPHREY MACKWORTH and others to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1643, November 26. Wem.—“The landing of 2,000 at least from Ireland, and the sending of the Lords Byron and Molyneux with a great force of horse and foot from the King to Shrewsbury, and none in the field to relieve us, hath exposed us to certain ruin, if your wisdom and timely care of these countries prevent not. This county of Salop hath a strong party for the Parliament in it, durst they show themselves, and many of the great ones we are assured would come in and submit, if a person of eminence were here to command in chief with some considerable force. We have yet encouraged our friends and feared the enemy with the hope of the Earl of Denbigh's coming. We and our friends and also the Cheshire and Staffordshire gentlemen do much desire him. And we are most humble suitors to your Excellency to betrust him with some strength of foot and horse for the preservation of this part of the kingdom, which, as it hath yielded great supplies to his Majesty, if once cleared would send more to your Excellency, we being able, before the Irish landed, in this county to have raised 2,000 horse and foot, had we had arms for them, and could soon have had the possession of Shrewsbury, many friends there having made a good way for our admittance.” . . . We doubt our former letters have “mis-carried and do now again renew our humble petition for your warrant for 200 case of pistols, 200 dragoons, and 600 muskets with 50 barrels of powder, by the help of which arms and the coming of the Earl of Denbigh with some considerable forces, we doubt not yet, but through God's blessing these parts will be preserved and the enemy scattered, we being resolved to improve all the interest we have in this county, and to adventure our own lives still as we have done for the Parliament's service.” Signed. Seal. [N. III., 97.]

SIR HENRY MILDMAY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 27. Wanstead.—(The purport of the first part is given in Commons' Journals, iii. 321.) Desiring that the House may be reminded to provide for Dover Castle and the other castles on the coast of Kent, concerning which the Earl of Warwick had charged him to be solicitous with the House, “lest some of them be eaten out by the sea this winter, and the rest possessed by any enemy that will come and pay the soldiers”; and stating that the County of Essex grumbles much that there should be so great a sum in arrears, "not less than 36 or 40,000*l.*, and the honest part still put to pay the new payments before the old are cleared, which will most light upon the Malignants and the neutrers." [N. III., 98.]

THE EARL OF MANCHESTER to the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF PEERS.

Colonel RALPH WELDON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1643], November 27. Blackfriars.—Desiring that the House of Commons be informed of the sad condition of the garrison of Plymouth for want of pay, they being more than 22 weeks unpaid since January last. If not suddenly relieved the soldiers must leave the place or starve. Had already remonstrated this to the Committee of Safety. Seal. [N. III., 101.]

Major JOHN BRYDGES to Colonel PUREFOY.

1643, November 28.—Desiring him to inform the Earl of Denbigh and the Committee that the Worcestershire men have called in of the County, with which and those few forces they have, it is said, 600. They are set down before Coughton Court. You know how we are concerned to give them speedy relief; if that place is lost, all that part of the country is gone. Our men have little ammunition, therefore, I beseech you get orders that all the horse and foot that can possibly be spared be sent, and we will use all diligence to be ready to go with them. Copy. [N. XII., 67.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to his brother, SIR RICHARD SKEFFINGTON, at Coventry.

1643, November 28.—"The condition of these parts are not so hopeful as of late when God was pleased to make way for us into Wales through great difficulties, and by our proceedings there to make way for the recovery of Chester and reducing . . . all these parts . . . likewise the Lord Capell's army being almost routed, so as we had no opposition in Wales nor our proceedings against Chester till the Irish army landed . . . which consists of more than 2,500 foot, and these ships are returned by whom is speedily expected Colonel Berne, an Irish rebel, with 3,000 rebels. The Earl of Newcastle's army presses near upon us upon the other side of the county, so as we were recalled out of Wales to defend our own county, . . . and expect daily invasions on each side. Our condition may therefore be accounted very desperate . . . By the concurrence of these dangers unless some speedy aid be sent by sea to prevent the landing of any more forces out of Ireland the preservation of these parts . . . may be much endangered. More cannot be expected from us than is possible in our power, who have with a small strength and without any supplies or assistance of the main body or almost of any neighbouring counties made our part good and defeated many supplies from the King's army. But if still multitudes of fresh forces, not only domestic but foreign, increase upon us, we can do no more than we are able . . . Lancashire men, whom we had to our assistance when we were in Wales, deserted us in our greatest extremities, or otherwise we might . . . probably have prevented the landing of this enemy, whereas now he is as near and expected as much to make invasions out of Wales into this county as he was expected to land . . . We are gathering into a body speedily and resolved to go towards the enemy if they come not to us . . . If it come in your way procure relief to be sent to us. Hasten the Lord Denbigh, and assist us with all your means.

Postscript.—Mr. Mackworth will inform you at large if he reach Coventry, who is going to meet the Earl of Denbigh." Copy. [N. XII., 70.]

DOM ANTONIO DE SOUSA, Portuguese Ambassador, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 28.—Complaining that no answer had been sent to the memorial he had presented eight days ago concerning the Press and Type seized at Richard Herne's house. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 322.) Seal. [N. III., 102.]

[The EARL OF STAMFORD] to Mr. LISLE.

1643, November 28. London.—Desiring that the Committee appointed to examine his charges against Mr. Nicoll would excuse his attendance that day "being somewhat indisposed by an extreme cold." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 327.) Seal. [N. III., 104.]

SIR JOHN SEDLEY, Colonel RALPH WELDON, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 28. Westerham.—Declaring their apprehension of the unsupportable proportion which they hear is likely to be charged on their county for the maintaining of his Excellency's army, and desiring a respite till some members of the House then employed in the defence of that county which is even ready to be invaded, may be permitted to represent the condition thereof. Signed. [N. V., 44.]

SIR WILLIAM WALLER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, November 28. Farnham.—"Yesterday morning I had notice by my scouts that the enemy showed himself in a party of about 300 horse upon the heath a mile and a half from me. Whereupon I sent out a party to visit them who entertained them with a warm skirmish for near two hours. In this time we discovered their whole body advancing. Whereupon I drew out that small stock I had into the Park under the favour of the Castle. Besides foot I had not above ten troops with me, the rest being quartered in villages more remote, where they can find provisions, came not up to me till towards evening. The enemy drew up in a full body before us upon the heath, as near as we could judge about 5,000 horse and foot, and after a while advanced into the Park to us with their foot and some horse within musket shot, but we gave them such entertainment with our pieces that they thought it their best course to retire to the heath again, where they made a stand, but were quickly driven from thence in disorder by our culverins, whereupon they all retreated. I sent some parties of horse and dragoons after them, who charged them in the rear and beat them off the down into the lunc. We took some prisoners and killed some men and divers horses. If my horse had come up time enough I might have done good execution upon them. That night the enemy quitted Crundall and retired further off towards Hook. I have sent out parties after them to discover which way they move. The Kentish troops came last night hither from Guildford to quarter with me. There came with them likewise five companies of Sir Arthur Heselrig's regiment. But to allay this accession of strength I am now informed that the London Regiments resolve to be gone to-morrow or the next day at the furthest, but I hope they will not. I humbly desire there may be some course taken that they may stay, till some other strength come up to me, otherwise I am left at sixes and sevens, neither able to follow the enemy nor defend myself, and my old friend is so gallant an enemy, that he will quickly take his advantage [of] it to my destruction. I have received information that [his] Majesty is drawing this way. Postscript.—I am informed that Colonel Carr's soldiers, which were about 200, are turned out of their quarters and thereupon all disbanded and gone, to the great discontent of the officers who raised the men out of their means, and yet never received their full fortnight's pay. If they had received any help the Regiment might have been completed before this. I desire I may not be deprived of his service, for he is an honest man and a brave old soldier." Seal. [N. III., 105.]

THOMAS [LORD] GREY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, December 25. Leicester.—“Upon Friday last it happened that Colonel Waite sent out 20 horse to scout out toward Belvoir, who having intelligence that two troops of the enemy’s horse were quartered in a town called Waltham did ride up to the sentries and fired upon them, and fell into their quarters, where they took some prisoners and 11 horses. The governor of Belvoir and the rest of the commanders there . . . next day drew out . . . eight score horse, and marched within a mile of Col. Waite, according to their accustomed manner plundering the country, and swearing that if he did not speedily quit Rutland, they would not leave a town unplundered. The Colonel immediately drew out three score horse, six of whom were musketeers horsed, and with extraordinary courage marched to the view of the enemy, and being resolved to win the horse or lose the saddle, sent a trumpeter to sound a challenge. The enemy refusing to answer, made a retreat, our body pursuing them, and on Sproxtton Heath the enemy drew up into a body, which no sooner they had done, but our men were ready to charge them and did. The first charge we had something the better, the second charge we routed them wholly, and chased them to the very Castle walls. Herein Major Plucknet, a notorious plunderer, was slain, with divers others, but the number of them I do not as yet directly know. The governor of Belvoir run into the face and shroldly cutt; forty-six prisoners, who make themselves all common soldiers, but I hope that we shall find some officers amongst them. We took three score and odd horses, redeemed one hundred and forty head of cattle, and divers plundered horses. We lost not a man, only Col. Waite’s Captain-Lieutenant was shot in the thigh, and three more wounded, but they are not mortal.” Seal. [N. III., 108.]

The EARL OF FORTH to SIR WILLIAM BALFORE.

[1643, early in.]—I have showed his Majesty your list of Prisoners for exchange. He is not yet resolved what prisoners he will have exchanged, but when it is resolved I will send you a trumpet of my own. Lord Grandison has promised to send his own trumpet with his answer. At the ending hereof he sent his answer to me which you shall receive enclosed.

Postscript.—Thanking him for getting Lord Essex’ pass for his wife, though it came too late. Copy. [N. XII., 200.]

Captain THOMAS SHILBURNE to the EARL OF ESSEX.

[1643-4], January 15. From my quarters at Adington.—"In behalf of the country, being so earnestly pressed by them I do humbly beseech . . . that some forces may reside near this place, they fearing that if your Excellency should be pleased to command us away, they shall live under the same slavery and bondage as they did before we came, which was intolerable, but as soon as we came near them they ran away and would not abide to hear the sound of our muskets and drums, except we should have gone to Oxford or Banbury, so base and cowardly are they. I hope we have spoiled the two regiments which Colonel Dinton and Colonel Smith was to raise, the one of them having but three soldiers, as I am credably informed, the other having officers enow for a regiment, but not above 30 soldiers, which are to hard for us at running away." Examination of JOHN CHAMBERLAYNE, Mariner.

1643[-4], January 26. King's Lynn.—He was taken by a man of war and carried into Newcastle. Sir Thomas Glemham, the Governor, is now with his forces in Northumberland, and Sir John Morley, the Mayor, is Deputy Governor, and has in garrison only 500 men, all townsmen. The High Castle is fortified, but no other place within the town. The forces there have demolished a fort raised between the Uplight and the town, and there are but two other small works about the town called the Spanish work, and the Lower Light Fort. Tynemouth Castle is fortified, and has in garrison about 400 men. No arms or ammunition have been brought to Newcastle for the last ten weeks except 150 barrels of powder, and some small pieces brought about 8 days since from Amsterdam in a Danish ship and 500 muskets from Scarborough in two cobses. Browne Bushell is at Newcastle and has been there 6 or 7 weeks. A little before he took the Ipswich Sarah a prize, and she is now laden with coal for Holland to fetch arms thence. There are five men of war at Newcastle, and a ten gun ship lately run ashore on Coquet Island and was lost, but her guns were carried to Sir Thomas Glemham at Alnwick. They daily expect two ships from Holland with arms and ammunition. Till Tuesday last Sir Thomas Glemham was quartered at Alnwick, but then retreated six miles towards Newcastle, and the Scots marched in the same day. His forces are reputed 5,000 horse and foot, but half are unarmed. Many of the inhabitants of Newcastle are well affected to the Scots. There is much coal on all the stairs in great plenty. The examinant came yesterday from Newcastle. [N. XIII., 188.]

Information of MILES CAUSTON, Master of the George.

1643[–4], February 1.—Coming from the West Indies he was taken and carried into Dartmouth, and his ship and goods made prize of; they saying that all Londoners were rebels, and that it was their mercy they did not commit him longer to prison, because he resisted on their boarding him. In Dartmouth there are divers men-of-war ready for sea and others preparing, some of them intending, as he understood, to go for the Canary Islands and Madeira and the Azores to seize on any English ships there, and thence to the Isle of May and the Cape de Verde Islands, and so to seize all the English shipping there, and thence to the Barbados and the other Caribbee Islands to surprise all English ships found trading there, and to secure all those plantations to themselves against the King and Parliament, and so to pass northwards by Virginia, New England, and Newfoundland, there to take all fishermen that are for the Parliament, with which ships and men they intend to make a complete fleet to set on against the Parliament, and to master the Narrow Seas, and for this purpose four are now setting forth, and the rest will do so as soon as they hear the Parliament ships are coming. Some Bristol men there told him there were also ships at Bristol about to sail for the same purpose. The Governor of Dartmouth had ordered a ship or two to relieve the Castle of Guernsey. Captain Smith and his Vice-Admiral have two Biscay shallots to row in and take such pillage as they can under the shore, and are likewise bound for the Trades, there to take all the Scotch and English that shall pass that way. Mr. WHITTACRE’S Report.

1643[–4], February 2.—Concerning the alleged affront to Sir Thomas Walsingham by Dillon, a servant of the Dutch Ambassador, and giving Dillon’s version of the matter. “We desiring the Ambassadors’ answer to the request of the House of Commons, which was that they would give way that he might be examined by a Committee . . . or by the House itself; M. Bourrell answered he must avow the man to be his servant, and that he was now to attend him to Oxford, and that he much marvelled, if these things being done 3 or 4 days since it should not be complained of till now upon the very time of their providing to go to Court, and professing an unwillingness to have him further examined as was desired.” (See Commons’ Journals, iii. 384, 386.) [N. XVIII., 57.]

SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, THOMAS HATCHER, ROBERT GOODWIN, ROBERT FENWICK, HENRY DARLEY, and RICHARD BARWIS to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643[-4], February 5. Morpeth.—“The Lord General advanced with his army to Newcastle, where upon Saturday morning being the third of February he shewed himself before the town, and the Committees of both Kingdoms thought fit to send a letter to the Mayor Aldermen and Common Council,” whereof we enclose a copy and their answer. “The Marquess of Newcastle, whom they call the King’s General, came late into the town the night before which was unknown to us, and upon the approach of some of our soldiers to a work of theirs without the town, —where some few were slain—they within set on fire and burnt down all the streets and houses lying without the walls on the North side of the town, by which and the other circumstances we gather that they are resolved obstinately to hold it out to the last. All the county of Northumberland on the north of Tyne is now in the power of the Parliament, where if care were taken for the settling of a good ministry you might hope for better fruits from thence, than you have hitherto reaped.

Postscript.—We hear that General King and the Lord Witherington are also in Newcastle.” Signed. [N. III., 114.] Enclosed:

————— to —————

1643[-4], February 23. Shrewsbury.—“Prince Rupert on Friday morning sent out Major Legg with six troops of horse and 150 foot, who not only faced those at Wem at their own ports, but brought away between 20 and 30 loads of hay out of their quarters, they not so much as sending out a man to hinder him. On Saturday three musketeers of the late Irish defeated at Nantwich and gone into Wem, came hither with their arms. By these we know the state of the town, and that their first fear is lest the Prince should cut a great pond out of which they fill their ditches with water. To prevent which they summon in the country to cast up a tumultuary sconce for defence of it. The Prince's care is to draw together the dispersed forces, whilst his own regiment of foot marches to him from Bristol, whence they are set forward and convoy 200 barrels of powder, to employ which he hath put some ordnance and bullets in the casting. This afternoon 1,500 of those Irish which last landed in Wales are come into this town, so that we can already draw together 3,000 foot. Lord Byron is also this afternoon come hither whose army—as himself affirms—is in a very good condition in Cheshire, so that within this month we hope to be 7,000 or 8,000 men in field, besides which we hear that some Lancashire gentlemen have about 3,000 men ready for the Prince.” Extract. [N. 1644, April 6. Easington.—Have forwarded your letters of March 14th and 19th, with the enclosures, to Scotland, as the matters are so important that the answer should come from the Convention of Estates. The enclosed will inform you of the endeavours made for supplying the Scotch army still in Ireland, three regiments of horse being already landed in Scotland. 10,000*l.* in money has already been sent over, besides some clothes and ammunition. We again remind you of the great scarcity of money in the army. [N. III., 116.] Enclosed:

- i. VISCOUNT MONTGOMERY, ARTHUR CHICHESTER, SIR JOHN MONTGOMERY, ARTHUR HILL, THEOPHILUS JONES, ARTHUR GORE, and OWEN O'CONNALLY to the COMMITTEE OF THE ENGLISH PARLIAMENT WITH THE SCOTCH ARMY.

1643[-4], February 21. Newtown [Ards].—By our last of December 16th, we made known our good affections, and represented our great necessity and the danger of our regiments disbanding for want of victuals, wherefore we entreated you to mediate with the State of Scotland for so much meal as would supply our six regiments for two months only, till the Parliament should provide better supplies. We received no answer in writing to our modest request, but were told that you would not mediate with Scotland, having no commission from the Parliament to that effect, but that you would represent our desires to the Parliament, and send our other letter to the Committee of Adventurers. We have with all patience waited for their and your answers, but hungry bellies make pressing tongues. We think it therefore fit to let you know our wants have been so far from being any way yet supplied that the Scotch army, being likewise reduced to want of victuals, has been laid upon our poor exhausted quarters for their relief, whereby both our forces and the country people will inevitably starve or forsake the country, unless very speedily both the Scotch army be supplied hereafter, and relief sent us, not only to repay the country what has been taken from them for the support of the Scotch army, but likewise so to maintain us that they may be eased of the burden they have lain under. This we again earnestly recommend to your care to do it either by mediation with the State of Scotland or otherwise, and ask you to let us know what answer you have had from the Parliament or Committee of Adventurers to our last, for if their answer with the supplies does not come very soon, and such as may prove satisfactory to the country people, officers, and soldiers, this country—now the best strength and stay of the Protestant subjects of this kingdom—will be wholly lost to the Rebels. Copy. [N. XII., 74.]

- ii. Major-General ROBERT MONRO to [the COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND].

164[3-]4, February 23. Carrickfergus.—“Lest your resolutions of the army's stay or removal should not answer unto the present exigency what may befall us of the army or what hereafter may befall unto our country for want of timeous advertisement according to my bounden duty and the intelligence I have of the wicked applotments of him most bound to guard us under God I have thought fit in all haste to acquaint your Lordships that the Marquess of Antrim now loadnit with titles of honour from his Majesty in hope to do good service against us—Amongst others his titles he is called Chief Justice and Commander of the Isles of Scotland and General of the Catholic army of the Rebels in Ireland, as I understand by several intelligences from our noble friends from Dublin and elsewhere—That he is marching with a strong army against us of Rebels, whereof he is the chief, and is clad with commission to persecute the Scotch army, who were sent to be under the Parliament's pay of England, and it is thought they will spare none of the Scotch they can be masters of. For my part I shall think myself happy in the rencounter hoping my fortune may be to catch him the third time to vindicate myself from the aspersion of the wicked, for which I will strive to the utmost of my power with God's assistance to prove a loyal servant to my country in despite of envy. What relief or supply your Lordships are able to send unto us would come timely being of great consequence for us and your own safeties, for if the arme be disenablit, as God forbid, the body will be in danger. Howsoever it is my earnest suit unto your Lordships that, since the Rebels are provided of shipping for carrying their victuals—without which it will be hard for them to victual an army in the Province of Ulster—that your Lordships will consider that after their victuals is disloadnit they may make use of their shipping to intercept our victuals and our correspondence with your Lordships. That your Lordships would be pleased timely to direct forth some shipping from the West to prevent this inconvenience, and with God's assistance we shall strive to hinder their going to you and their supplies to their faction in England. We have also defect of arms and ammunition, which in all haste with other supplies would be securely convoyed unto us . . .

Postscript.—For your Lordships' better information consider of the enclosed, coming from one of our noble friends. 'The like I received from Dublin also.' Copy. [N. XII., 95.]

iii. Major-General ROBERT MONRO and the other Commanders to the PRIVY COUNCIL and COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND.

164[3-]4, March 14. Carrickfergus.—“I having in conformity to the Act of transportation resolved the removal of the army and sent three regiments already to Scotland, we have the 11th of this instant received a letter from Captain McGill, showing it to be your earnest desire and pleasure that we should stay in this land, where also your Lordships against the last of March promised to assure us for our enablement in this service, and notwithstanding all our bygone extremity to testify our great respects to your Lordships and the good of our country we have delayed our further removal till the first of April, and have sent Major Borthwick . . . to show our conditions and minds aent the service . . . Therefore we expect your care towards us and the service in despatching your answer against the said day.” Copy. [N. XII., 98.]

iv. The OFFICERS OF THE SCOTCH ARMY IN IRELAND to the COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND.

va. The COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND to ———.

164[3-]4, March 16.—The Committee “having taken the demands of the Scotis armie in Ireland to their most serious consideration doe returne this answer.

To the first concerneing the sixtie thousand pounds sterline with ten thousand suites of cloaths and maintenance in tyne comeing, mentioned in their former instructious with Gedeon Murray and now redemanded, the committie does acknowledge that the armie may verie justlie crave this soume as a part of their arreares due to them for their bypast service and promiseist by the Englishe commissioners to have been payed before the first of Februar last by past. The not performance querof is a verie great dissappointment yitt are we confident that the officers of the armie are so judicious and reasonable in their desyres—which they have verie honestlie and kyndlie express in their late declaration—as they will not urge nor expect from this kingdome more then is possible for us to performe or that they thinke we are able instantlie without the assistance of the Parliament of England to delyver to them that sixtie thousand pounds sterline which not withstanding we acknowledge is far lesse then their deservings or our desyres. But as it is the verie earnest desyre of this kingdome that the armie may stay in Ireland for defence and preservation of the protestant religion and Brittishe plantation and for diverting of manie evils which will follow upon the relingquisheing of that kingdome to the rebels, so are we confident that in a verie short tyme suche supplies will be sent to the armie frome the houses of parliament in satisfaction of their former demands with what is and will be givin to them by this kingdome—who will leave nothing undone for their subsistance which is in their power—as may bothe enable and encourage them to stay and prosecute the warre in Ireland. And haveing out of the furst moneys could be raised their sent to them ten thousand pounds sterline with so much cloath as could for the present be had readie heir, and als haveing sent victuall both by the north and west sea as some effectuall begining of the supplies promiseist by us to thame our earnest desyre and order in behalfe of the estates of this kingdome to them is that they may be yitt content to stay in Ireland till the daye of Apryle nixt, to the effect that the estates of this kingdome at their ensuing meeting which is to be upon the tent of Apryle nixt may resolve upon such present and solide course for entertanement and maintenance of that armie frome the Parliament of England and this kingdome as may enable them to the active prosecution of the warre in Ireland. And as we have writtin to our commissioners in England and the committie with our armie to be instant with the houses of parliament for that end, so is it our desyre that such persons may be sent frome that armie in Ireland as they shall think fittest to the convention of the estates against the tent of Apryle who may be witnesses to our actions and the realitie of our intentions in doeing everie thing which is in the reach of our power for the maintenance of that armie, for resolving upon the best and most effectuall wayes for prosecuting the warre, for rectifieing anie former oversight or omission which hath been in the power or maner of commanding, and for everie other thing possible which may conduce to the subsistance and good of that armie. We sall be carefull to represent to the estates the prejudice the service sustains by the absence of the collonells or other officers of that armie and that there may be such a way takin as may serve for the encouragement and advancement of the officers who ar present as there service and valour does justlie deserve.

Whereas it is desyred that these regiments of the armie in Ireland who ar come to Scotland may be continued and not removed till they be recalled to the armie, or the armie brought hither, it is our resolution that these regiments sall for cloathes and money be putt in equall footing with the other regiments that are in Ireland. And in the meane tyme quill they are heir we trust they will be content we mak the best use of their service for repressing the insolencies of malignants who are knowin enimies to religion and their countrie, and defending of this kingdome against forraine invasion. And incase we sall find a necessitie for the good of the caus querin both that armie and we are ingadged that their regiments be employed ellis where it sall be in that way which we think will have approbatione of all who love religion and the caus querin we are ingadged for yow may be confident that we will be no lesse carefull of the preservation and strenthning of that armie and there just interest then of our owne saiftie. And since we are both in on shipe and ingadged in one and the same caus we are persuaded yow will with the same sinceritie be willing to contribut your best furtherance in everie thing may tend to the advancing of the caus and secureing and strenthneing of this kingdome.

That which is meened by the keeping of a garrison in Carrickfergus without the domination of the armie is that if the armie be transported frome Ireland—as we hope in God it will not in haist—there may be als many of the Brittishe in Ireland brought over in place of the Scots that sall be left in the garrison as may compleit the armie to be ten thousand besydes these to be left in the garrison to be under the command of Generall-Major Monro or his deputs.”

vñ. [The COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES] to [the OFFICERS OF THE SCOTCH ARMY IN IRELAND.]

Same date.—

“RIGHT HONORABLE,

We haveing received your letter frome Major Borthwicke and haveing considered your instructions to him and demands to us we cannot bot acknowledge what yow have done in sending over these three regiments is warranted by the act for transportation which the estates did meane of extreeme necessitie for preservation of the armie bot would have bene verie loath to remove the armie if there can be a competencie of meanes afforded for your subsistance there. We take your stay upon our letters sent by Captaine McGill as a verie reall testimonie and demonstration of your affection and obedience to the desyres of this kingdome which is also a verie powerfull motive to make us with the greater diligence and sheerefullnes to goe speedilie about the reall and effectuall performance of suche meanes as may enable and encourage yow to subsist and prosecute the warre in Ireland. And what we are not able to doe of ourselves we sall be earnest intercessors to procure the same frome the parliament of England and the estates of this kingdome, who are to meitt upon the tenth of Apryle nixt, and who as they have more power and auctoritie to injoyne and raise suche meanes as may serve for the supplies then we have, so we are most confident they will leave nothing undone which is in their power for your satisfaction and putting yow in suche a posture and condition as yow may activelie goe about the prosecuting of the warres in Ireland against our common enemies. We have returned ansere to your instructions and demands sent by Major Borthwicke, and our earnest desire to yow is that yow would stay in Ireland till the 24th day of Apryle nixt, and that yow would send suche persons as yow thinke fittest from the armie to the convention of estates to be heir the tent of Apryle nixt who may be witnesses to the proceedings of the estates and of the realitie of their desyres to performe everie thing in their power for the subsistance and weelfare of that armie and as may enable them most for the prosecuting of that service that both yow may reach the just recompence of your service and both kingdomes the fruits of your labours which we are confident—from the frequent experience we have found of your willingness to obey the desires of this kingdome—yow will not deny to doe. And then yow may certainele expect frome both kingdomes that supplee which may enable yow to goe activelie about that service wheirin yow have both done and suffered so much or if that sould faill—as we hope it will not—have suche a honourable and warrantable call for your removall, as may serve most for your reputation and employment ellis where, so yow may be most usefull for the good of the caus querin both kingdomes are so deeplie ingadged, and shippes and barkes will be sent for your transportatioun, And yow may rest assured that in following the advice of the estates of this kingdome and there committies there will be afforded to yow a competence of maintenance for following the warres in Ireland or at least yow will be putt in the same condition with your native kingdome and our armeis heir and in England for as our caus is one and hes commoun freinds and enemies, so we must resolve with Godis assistance to stand and fall together. And for our firmer union the commissioners of the generall assemblee and we have sent Mr. James Hamiltoun a faithfull minister in this kingdome and whois integritie is well knowin in Ireland with the covenant to be sworne be the officers and souldiours of our armie and all suche others of the Brittishe as sall be willing to enter into this covenant which is alreadye universallie received in this kingdome and by the houses of parliament and their armeis and is ordained to be takin by all sortis of persons in England. Concerning the fittest tyme of swearinge in this covenant we remitt it to your owne discretioun and the messenger sent with it but the soouner yow doe it we thinke it so muche the better which will confirme the confidence this kingdome hes in yow and will be a character to differance betuene the well and disaffected. In the meane tyme we trust that yow and suche of the Brittishe forces as love the religious and saiftie of thir kingdome will stand the best way yow may upon your garde against the invasion of the rebels. The reason why we did not anser the Generall-Major his desyre for exoneration of his bygane service and call heir is becaus of the desyre we have of his contning in that charge there. But if the armie be recalled he will find suche ane approbation of his by gane service and employment for the future as may wintes the gratitude of this kingdome and the constant resolution we have to continue.” *Copies. [N. XIV., 45.]

Vane, the last two letters being copies on the same paper.

HARCOURT LEIGHTON AND THOMAS HERBERT TO SIR JOHN TREVOR.

1644, May 23. Reading.—“On Monday by 8 in the morning we got to Henley, where the foot drew out to muster—which I oversaw—and the horse near Marlow and Maidenhead thicket, which Mr. Leighton and Colonel Pinder viewed. Part of the horse muster was deferred till Wednesday, when we mustered near Harrison's barn at Reading. The train of artillery was mustered with the foot, the several particulars of which we have, as taken in the field, but know not whether 'tis expected that we should certify the Parliament or Committee concerning it, but by the way we may be bold to acquaint you that some regiments are very thin, and some troops few and ill-armed, and especially we thought good to complain of the recruit horse. Few of them but were diseased with farcy and glanders or such infectious diseases, and generally very poor and reasty. By reason of the suddenness of the muster 'twas very confused, and impossible to be well viewed by so few, the foot mustering at one time in so many places, and for the horse we think it would be very helpful to the truth of mustering and prevent borrowing one of another, if the several troops were marched with distinct characters upon the near side, and to bring all their arms to the muster to be viewed and certified. . . . Postscript.—We are marching forward. . . . By reason the army marched so suddenly after muster, and that the rolls could not be closed, there is only $\frac{3}{4}$ allowed the horse.” On the back.—“The inconvenience both city and country and army may suffer by Greenland House is known to all. Saving my Lord General's consideration, we beseech that a guard may be set upon them by his Excellency, or that the city would please to send a regiment or two under command of Colonel Browne or some other. The place is excellently situate for battering in three places, and the pieces may be brought by barges very near the place—but let them be good ordnance as demi-cannon and culverin, and not small, such as be for campaignia—and especially employ seamen, who are best provided for such service, and with a gunner, and fit to scale or enter breaches.” Signed. Seal. [N. III., 117.]

SIR WILLIAM CONSTABLE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

Colonel HERBERT MORLEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, June 5. Arundel.—“Amongst the goods taken from the Dunkirk ships we have found certain pictures which contain most gross idolatry; upon one, the Trinity pictured in monstrous shapes like giants; upon another is painted the Virgin Mary as sitting in heaven with her babe in her arms, underneath is the Pope, on whose left hand stands our King perfectly limmed and completely armed, with his cavaliers attending him; on the Pope's right hand stands the Queen accompanied with her ladies, the King tenders his sceptre to the Queen, she accepts it not, but directs it to be delivered to the Pope. This picture was intended to be set up in the chief church of Seville in Spain, as appears by the direction on the outside of the box, in which it is inclosed. I look upon this picture as an hieroglyphic of the causes and intents of our present troubles, and the opinion of the neighbouring nations concerning them, and if the House please to command the picture to London and there permit it to the public view, I conceive 'twould very much convince the Malignants, and open the eyes of all that are not wilfully blind.” Seal. We entreat your Lordships and these noble gentlemen to represent to the Parliament that notwithstanding the constant endeavours of the Committee at Goldsmiths' Hall there are not any of these moneys as yet provided, neither out of the sequestrations nor in any other way, and to desire that some speedy and effectual course may be taken for providing and sending away the said 30,000*l.* and for the future maintenance of the armies in Ireland, conform to the votes above mentioned, which were long ago sent to the Kingdom of Scotland, and upon which those armies depend." SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, RICHARD BARWIS, and ROBERT FENWICK
to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, August 1. Sunderland.—Some gentlemen of the Scotch Committee, Sir William Armyne, and Mr. Barwis, by Lord Calander's desire repaired to Leeds to General Lesley for the affairs of Northumberland, Durham, and Newcastle. On our return we heard that Hartlepool and the Castle of Stockton had surrendered to Lord Calander, and found Major Douglas, son of the sheriff of Tividall, appointed Governor of the former with six companies of foot, and that a Captain with six score men had been sent to Stockton. "Lord Calander himself with all his forces marched towards Newcastle, and with a strong party of commanded men possessed themselves of Gateshead, and have made some works to stop up the passage of the bridge, and my Lord himself lies with the rest of his men on the top of the hill, not far from them If no forces from Prince Rupert, Goring, Montrose and his crew, who are endeavouring to raise men in Cumberland and Westmoreland do not interrupt us (sic), we are in good hopes to give a good account of the town of Newcastle. We have written formerly to know the pleasure of the House, how we shall demean ourselves to my Lord Calander and his army. We are daily called upon for many things, and hitherto we have endeavoured to accommodate him with all things in our power or what the country may afford for the use of his army, which we conceive will not be unacceptable service to you, and therefore till we know your further pleasure we shall continue." We enclose a letter from the President of the Parliament of Scotland, dated July 17th, and for the present are unable to satisfy the desires therein contained. We have also received a letter from some of the Scotch Lords concerning 5 pieces of cloth taken by the small catch, sent out of Sunderland by our direction, called the Robert of London. We desire that satisfaction may be given, and that they may be compelled to give us an exact account of all they have taken. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 124.]

Articles against THOMAS MIDDLETON of Horsham, a member of the House of Commons and one of the Committee for Sussex.

[1644, before August 26.]—Alleging that in the latter end of December last when the King's forces lately invaded Sussex, and had taken Arundel town and castle, pretending himself sick, he would not in any ways show himself against the King's forces, but discouraged the countrymen that took up arms for the Parliament when the King's forces were within few miles of Horsham, and that he was in all probability consenting to the bringing of some of the King's forces to take Horsham. It is mentioned that on the 11th December some of the King's forces were seen within four miles of Horsham riding towards it in the night, and that there was a garrison of the cavaliers at Wiston, and various statements are made to show Mr. Middleton's disaffection to the Parliament. (23 articles in all.) (See Commons' Journals, iii. 609.) [N. XVI., 36.]

The EARL OF ESSEX to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

1644, September 19. Portsmouth.—Having described the importance of the place, “I find the defect here to be great both by reason of the decay of the fortifications, the small number of men, and the want of a magazine of victuals to prevent the danger of a sudden siege. For the first the works are in very great decay and will cost a very considerable sum to repair which I hope your Lordships will be a means shall be provided so that the work may be put in a good forwardness, whilst my engineers are hereabouts, and brought to such a perfection before winter come too far on as may prevent the breaches from growing greater. How the men come to be so few this bearer must satisfy, but I find they are not above 400 men, where as indeed I conceive 1,000 are too few, and should be glad they were recruited to a considerable regiment of 1,000 men, whereof the one half may attend my army when the place is out of danger, and it is very necessary in my opinion that the town should be constantly furnished with 2,000 quarters of corn at least in store. Lastly I conceive that both for convoys and bringing in intelligence from abroad it were very fit there were a good troop of horse allowed to the garrison, which methinks might well be raised and paid by the county.” (See Commons’ Journals, iii. 638.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 135.]

SIR JOHN MELDRUM to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

The EARL OF ESSEX to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, September 26. Portsmouth.—“Receiving now this fresh intelligence from Sir William Waller, and Quarter-Master-General Dalbier, I desire that those things which were promised this army both for horse and foot may be sent, any delay from taking the field being very prejudicial at this present. In the mean time I have done what is in my power and that upon any summons from Sir William Waller I shall join my horse with his to make any impediment to the enemy if they march this way.” (See Commons' Journals, iii. 642.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 139.] Enclosed:

i. SIR WILLIAM WALLER to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1644, September 24. Shaftesbury.—“His Majesty and his whole army quartered the last night at Chard, and I make no question but they will advance speedily. A gentleman that saw them drawn up speaks confidently they are not above 10,000 Horse and Foot, and 17 pieces.” Seal. [N. III., 137.]

ii. Quarter-Master-General DALBIER to [the EARL OF ESSEX].

[1644], September 24. Burgett.—“The trumpeter which I sent for Captain Grenville is returned . . . He has left the enemy near Chard. Their head-quarters was on Monday night at Chard. They esteem themselves 10,000 men, horse and foot; they have 20 pieces of ordnance, but he says they have very few carriages or wagons. He could see not above twelve. He says that they give out to besiege Lyme, and yet they have sent 300 men to plunder Axminster, which makes me believe the contrary. The country people say they intend to march over Black Down, which is unlikely, unless they intend to pass at Minehead the sea and go to Wales. Sir William Waller has had a trumpet there too, who is marched through all their army . . . Your Excellency should make all the haste possible to get your foot armed that you may take a convenient post before the enemy be too near. The most part of our officers are absent, things will not be carried as it should. Postscript.—If they march over Black Down, it is their best way either to Taunton or Bridgwater. That they have so few carriages makes me consider that they are for no enterprise, rather for a great journey. I pray your Excellency will be pleased to let me know what is become of Prince Robert's forces, likewise where my Lord Manchester is. If the King takes the way of Bridgwater then he is for Bristol or for Oxford.” [N. III., 138.]

List of GUNNER'S STORES delivered out of the Leopard for the use of the Army in PEMBROKESHIRE.

[1644], October 6.—Signed “Richard Swanley.” [N. XIV., 12.]

SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, RICHARD BARWIS, and ROBERT FENWICK to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, October 8. Penrith.—“We have endeavoured all we can for the present to settle all the people in Cumberland and Westmoreland in their obedience to the King and Parliament, and humbly offer to the consideration of the House the settling of the militia there, and the appointing of Sheriffs, . . . and that Justices of the Peace may be appointed for both counties. Carlisle continues still obstinate, but they have been of late kept in that the country hath received little damage by them. Only the charge is very great to maintain such forces, as must of necessity be about Carlisle for the keeping them in on all sides. Sir Philip Musgrave, Sir Henry Fletcher, Sir William Dalston, Sir Thomas Dacres, Sir Timothy Fetherstonhaugh, and divers others remain still in Carlisle though they have been fairly invited forth by us. We have endeavoured by all the ways and means in our instructions and according to the Ordinances of Parliament to raise what money these parts will afford for the pay of the forces now there. Four regiments of horse are marching out of the country and two . . . are left behind to join with the forces in the country to block up Carlisle, and preserve themselves from any ordinary party that might suddenly fall upon them. The Covenant is well embraced in these parts, and we hope shortly to give you a good account of it. The Mayor and Aldermen of Kendal have been twice with us, and seem very cordial for the Parliament and are raising some forces for their own ” and the country’s “defence. Sir Edward Musgrave,—who calls himself Sheriff of the County of Cumberland—keeps in Scaleby Castle, a house of his own not far from Carlisle, and will not come out. Sir Richard Graham, his father-in-law, is in Carlisle. The General-Major David Lesley hath taken Thirlwell Castle in the edge of Cumberland, but Naworth Castle and Millum Castle, both in the said County, hold out still against us. Sir John Lowther, Sir Patritius Curwen, Sir Richard Sanford, and Sir Thomas Sanford and divers others of the prime gentlemen of both Counties have taken the Covenant and submitted to the Ordinance of Parliament. We forbear to trouble with the relation of beating the enemy from Penrith, and chasing them to Carlisle, which was done at the first coming in of the Scottish forces. . . . We find a great want of good ministers in these parts, as in the rest of the Northern parts, which, if not supplied, there is little hope of bringing the people out of that ignorance they have so long dwelt in. We send the names of several gentlemen . . . that we thought fit to be Justices of the Peace . . . and out of them High Sheriffs for each county may be appointed,” namely:—

In Cumberland—

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, }
 William Lawson, Esq. } of Iseild.
 William Briscoe, counsellor at law, of Crofton.
 Thomas Cholmely, of Little Salkeild.
 Mr. Thomas Lamplugh, fit to be High Sheriff.
 Mr. John Barwis.
 Mr. William Orfuer.
 Mr. John Skelton.

In Westmoreland—

Sir John Lowther, Bart.
 Sir Richard Sandford, Knight.
 Colonel Edward Brigges, Esq., fit to be High Sheriff.
 Mr. Richard Branthwate, Esq.
 Jervis Benson, Mayor of Kendal.
 Gowen Brathwaite, Esq.

 Mr. John Dalston.
 Mr. Christopher Dudley.

THOMAS TRAPHAM, Chirurgion to Serjeant-Major-General Skippon,
to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

(See Commons' Journals, iii. 658.) [N. XXII., 135.]

SIR HENRY HOLCROFT, SIR WILLIAM MASHAM, and others to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, October 10. Chelmsford.—"It appears by the inclosed, that by an order of the House some necessary works were raised by Sir Harbottle Grimston's care for the defence of Harwich and six gunners and twelve warders were appointed to attend the same by day and night their pay amounting to 3*l.* 3*s.* per week. The town is very poor and not able to bear the charges, and therefore they humbly desire that Parliament will assign the Excise of their own town for defraying" it, which request we support. Signed. [N. III., 141.] Enclosed:

The YORKSHIRE COMMITTEE appointed by the order of August 22nd.

1644, October 11.—Report that 7,000*l.* per month was as much as could be raised for the land rate on the county and city of York, and town of Kingston-upon-Hull, 1,000*l.* each upon Durham, Northumberland and the town of Newcastle, and Cumberland, 600*l.* on Westmoreland, and 1,753*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* on the county and town of Nottingham, that all the revenue from assessments, sequestrations, excise, King's and Queen's revenues in these Northern Counties would be short by 25,000*l.* per month of the 31,000*l.* to be paid to the Scotch army and 25,000*l.* to the forces to be raised under Sir Thomas Fairfax and suggesting that the compositions with Delinquents throughout England be applied to make up the deficiency. Colonel MARTIN PYNDAR and THOMAS HERBERT to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, October 24. Reading.—"Upon Thursday last my Lord Generall advanc't to Southwick—Colonel Norton's house—wher drawing all his late divided regiments into one body, notwithstanding that the weather grew stormy and for three dayes and nights rayne fell incessantly, our foot marcht with extraordinary diligence and cheerfulness—through deep wayes and entertaynd in late and penurious quarters—to the generall rendezvouz at Basingstoke, the joy to joyne with that gallant army counterpoising their wants and nothing more overcoming the difficultyes of the march than hopes to fight with their Cornish enemyes whose barbarisme will never be pardond till some proporcionable requittal. Next day the three armyes drew up and we are confident there never was in England a gallanter army either respecting the being well armd or courage of the men, who were overjoyed to hear the enemy was drawing towardes them. All next day wee spent in expectacion but the king wheeld about toward Newberry, so as we could not gett him ingaged. Howbeit our horse beat up their quarters and tooke above one hundred horse and foot prisners. Wee are now at Reading.

Touching the necessities of our owne army, give us leave to represent some things to your consideracion. The army most parte of this march from Portsmouth has suffred in want of provision, partly through the indigency of the country through which wee past and partly through want of commissaries whose contynued absence is of extraordinary prejudice it being an employment both of care and paynes; and tho a deputy may endeavor, yet wanting the reputacion the worke fayles much in the practize. Wherefore wee beseech you to take some course both to expedit the commissaries of provisions—both which are and have long been absent—to attend their charge, and if the house seam pleasd, to hasten some bisquitt and cheese hither, the passage being safe, the way not bad, and the souldyer therby would be exceedingly cheered. The commissaries of the musters, both of horse and foote, are likewise at London. 'Tis fitt no money be issued out without muster. Wee are constrayned to complyne, for the servyce suffers much by their absence. The residence of an advocate would be advantageous to us here, for some exorbitances fall out now and then, which require a councell of warr, but by want of a judge advocate passe uninquird and unpunished. To supply the wants of our trayne and in order to the ordinance of parliament, the Isle of Wight voluntarily proffered fifty horse to my Lord Generall and accordingly this day he sent thither to quicken them, both to take an ocaasyon of retorning thanekes, and better providing for the teams who in these parts are so hardly to be gott, that of a dozen warrants for teems, not above one or two come in tho never so strictly commanded. The new trayne of artillery adds much to the contentacyon of our army. Wee are told ten or twelve more are designd which wee conceave may better be spared till Spring, the season affording little use, and the state if sent necessarily putt to excessive chardges.

Wee have no addicion, save that my Lord Generall has byn ill of late by an excessive flux and vomiting, but is better at this tyme." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 676.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 144.]

SIR JOHN HOTHAM to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

[1644, October 28.]—Petition. After referring to his services, stating that "he received his commission from the House in these words annexed to the petition, and had from you no other law, direction, or rule to square his actions by but this particular commission. That he never received from this house or any other any signification or commands concerning Martial Law nor was it ever published in his garrison or the Association of Yorkshire, Durham &c., and that your petitioner finding some unruliness in his garrison did by a letter to you solicit you to send him some commands concerning Martial Law, but was by you denied it by an order in these words 'That such persons under Sir John Hotham as shall offend against any law shall be punished by law, but for such as offend against the safety of the town and peace of the Army as mutinies and such like them he shall commit to prison till upon information to this House further course may be taken.'

That the Ordinance of Martial Law whereby he received his summons and the instructions thereof are a law made 14 months after his pretended crime was committed, and therefore humbly conceives, it cannot be extended to the trial of it.

That he had his commission and instructions only from you, by you he was trusted and conceives himself bound solely to answer it to you, that he returned all his addresses to you, and was always your immediate agent, therefore craves leave not to submit, nor to be put upon any trial, but immediate by you, that to you and to your judgments he submits his estate life and honour, he confesses many errors, and lays himself down at the feet of your justice, and anything else that can be against him, he will willingly embrace a trial by any law extant or known to him, when they were committed, for where no law is, there is no transgression.

All this he humbly presents to your just thoughts, with a full and true relation of his whole government of Hull, which he craves it as a favour from you that you would grant, which he doubts not but you will grant him considering that he has laid now 15 months prisoner in silence and has not interrupted your business with the least word of petition for his private advantage." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 679.) Holograph. [N. XXII., 137.]

THE EARL OF WARWICK TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, October 29. Holborn.—After my several representations of the necessitous condition of the Navy during my absence at sea I hoped the House would have found time and means for the consideration and supply thereof. But on my return I found it in the same state, and therefore thought it my duty again to remind you of my representations in my letters of July 1st, and August 12th concerning the defective stores and materials. Without a speedy supply the Winter Guard cannot be completed nor a fleet set forth next summer. I have caused an estimate—not including the gunner's stores—of, all the stores and materials necessary for setting forth the Winter Guard and the next summer fleet to be made, amounting to 15,078*l*. Great inconvenience arises from want of timely provision of money, which causes not only ships after coming in to lie at the State's charge in the river amounting lately to above 100*l*. a day, but also a long interval between the coming in of the summer fleet and the going out of the Winter Guard, and hence the guard of the sea is neglected, the enemy's ports opened, trade endangered, and the convoy of some of our own ships transferred to the Hollanders. Besides sellers are discouraged from giving provisions of proper quality by the non-performance of their contracts. The debts of the Navy, so far from being discharged, daily increase, and by the clamour attending them the officers of the Navy are disabled from doing their duty without distraction, which is the more considerable, because the Customs, whereby the expenses of the Navy are to be principally supported, have been anticipated, and hence great sums have to be borrowed, and a great charge for interest incurred. By not passing an Ordinance for the Commissioners of the Navy to act under me, they are discouraged from further acting and resolved to desist from the same as by the inclosed will appear, so that the business of the Navy will receive obstruction unless some sudden course be taken. I desire you to represent all this to the House. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 146.]

Enclosed:

ROBERT TWEEDY and the other Commissioners of the Navy to the EARL OF WARWICK.

SIR THOMAS MYDDELTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, October 30. Redd Castle.—“Having intelligence of the enemye’s intention to raise newe forces in Wales, and of their dailie pressings of men, and howe they intended to fortifie Ruthyn, and so make it a garrison towne—it beinge a place of great ymportance—I resolved to interrupt their proceedings the best I could and thereupon drewe out a small partye both of horse and foote and marched to Ruthyn, it beinge three dayes march from Redd Castle, and extreame wette weather. Att three dayes ende wee came thither, and founde Collonell Trevor and Collonell Trafford with about four hundred horse and foote whoe withstoode our entrance into the towne but after some exchainge of shotte wee beate in upon them, and beate them out of the towne. The enemyes foote ran into the castle, and their horse towards Denbigh. Wee lost never a man att that tyme. Wee killed one of theirs, tooke a cornett, a doctour, and a quartermaster, with some twenty troops. I hope wee have scattered them, and distracted them soe that they will not easelye rayse men agayne. The enemye intends to raise great forces in these parts against the Prince’s comynge which they expecte daylye, with ten thousand armes and five hundred barrells of powder. The cuntrye comes in reasonablye well in Mount-gomerieshire where I am, but wee wante armes exceedinglye and are like soe to doe, if our armes that wee provided and sent downe, both by sea and land shalbee taken from us, as they are, and wee lefte destitute and naked now in tyme of neede. Att my last cominge downe I sente by sea to bee landed att Liverpoole a parcell of armes—as by the particulars enclosed you may perceave—but are all taken from mee by one Captayne Tatum, without warrant as I conceave, and if our armes shalbee taken away att every man’s pleasure that are to come to furnish these remote partes, it is but follye for any man to attempte the reducinge of them. I brought one thousand armes to Namptwich and att the last seige they were all taken awaye, and twenty-eight barrells of powder and I can neither gett my armes agayne, nor any satisfacion for them. I humbly desire that Captayn Tatum and Sir William Brereton and the Cheshire committee may be ordered either to returne mee soe manye and soe good as they had of myne, or satisfacion for them, or that the honorable howse wilbee pleased to furnishe mee with fifteen hundred muskettes as many swords belts, snapsacks, and bandalyers, with fifty barrells of powder, eight of shotte, and one hundred and fifty bundells of matche, all which they tooke away of myne, else I shall not bee able to proceede in the worke I have begunne, nor to doe yow any more service in these partes. For excepte wee maye have armes, wee can doe nothings; and seinge I have entrenched upon your patience thus farre give mee leave, I beseech yow, fullye to disgorge myselfe. I have often pressed yow by my letters for releefe, both of men, armes, and moneys, but such hath byn my unhappines, that I have not received any satisfaction in any one of them. Nay, when motions have byn made for releefe, and the motion graunted yet it hath byn crossed, and stopped. I assure myselfe the wisdom of the howse had sufficiente grounde for what they did, but the commonwealth and myselfe suffer in the meane tyme. It is nowe six monethes sithence I came downe. I had 1,000*l.* of the howse att my cominge awaie, and sithence that tyme never a penny. What I had before my cominge awaye was laid out att London, as will appeare by the accomptes when yow please to call for them. I have loste more then the one halfe of my men for wante of moneye though I have stretched my creditte to borrowe all the moneye I could gette to paie the souldiers. I am much troubled that yow have noe better thoughts of these partes. Sure I am that from these partes the kinge first raised his powerfull armye, and Prince Ruperte a second, and a third, and if care bee not spedelye taken to prevente, they will raise another armye as great as any of the former. I am disabled to prevente it, for I have neither men to spare, nor money to paye those that I have, nor armes to arme those that are willinge to come in unto mee." I request therefore leave to lay down my Commission and that some one else be appointed in my stead. Enclosed is a list of the armes and ammunition on board the Marmaduke and the Cretian and taken by Captain Tattam. Postscript.—Asking that 3,100*l.* a legacy of Lady Campden's for buying impropriations might be granted him as ready money to supply his occasions. Signed. [N. F. SEYMOUR, SIR E. FORTESCUE, and 42 others to—1644, November 14. Exeter.—The sad condition of this County moves us of this County now assembled at our general meeting at Exeter to move you that the unhappy differences that are now and have been for too long a time between us may be happily composed. The reunion of you to us will so much advance your own and our peace that thereby exceeding great commerce and profit in these distracted times will redound unto us both. That and the sense of the miseries that befall you and us by this unnatural difference hath occasioned us thus to invite you to a treaty for peace, and that there may be some commissioners appointed of each side to endeavour a happy accommodation between us. LORD ROBERTES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, November 16. Plymouth.—Had long since represented what might be done here were a sufficient force sent to take the field. As they were otherwise employed, I conceived I might have been spared here,

“had I not received some advertisements of the enemy’s practice upon this place as much by fraud as force, against both which I was most willing to oppose my uttermost. Of the latter this day produced somewhat, which I herewith send whereby you see the enemy leaves nothing unattempted. Of the former I hope care will be taken to prosecute the victory . . . else the splinters of a broken army may wound our sides.” I desire the ammunition I asked for should be sent with all speed, and also that money be supplied for the garrison. “Had not a ship of fish and some lyneloth been taken, which for the instant necessity of this garrison we were forced to sell, I do not know how dangerous our condition had been. Here is now but one ship belonging to the state. I conceive that very good service might be done . . . were there 6 or 8 small ships such as the Providence here, the enemy making use of this season for his supplies.” Signed. Scal. [N. III., 150.]

THE DIRECTORY FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP.

1644, November 21.—(This is the identical paper presented by Dr. Burges (See Commons’ Journals, iii. 701) as “The humble Advice of the Assembly of Divines concerning a Directory for the Public Worship of God in the three Kingdoms.” These words have been struck out and “A Directory for the Public Worship of God in the three Kingdoms” substituted. Against each clause is written R. for Resolved. It is signed by William Twisse, Prolocutor, Cornelius Burges and John White, Assessors, and Henry Robrough and Adoniram Byfield, Scribæ.

The only noteworthy changes made by the House of Commons are, in the direction for the Administration of Baptism the addition of the last line to the Exhortation to the Parent and the omission of the next clause which was as follows: “It is recommended to the Parent or Christian friend to make a profession of his Faith, by answering to these or the like questions, ‘Dost thou believe in God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost? Dost thou hold thyself bound to observe all that Christ hath commanded thee, and wilt thou endeavour so to do? Dost thou desire to have this child baptized into the Faith and Profession of Jesus Christ?’” and in the direction for the celebration of the Communion or Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper the omission of the following clause: “None are to be admitted thereunto but such as being baptised are found upon careful examination by the Minister, before the other Church Officers, to have a competent measure of knowledge and ability to examine themselves, and do profess their willingness to submit themselves to all the ordinances of Christ, and are of approved conversation according to the rules of Christ. The ignorant, the scandalous, the obstinate are not to be admitted; nor those of another congregation, except they have sufficient testimony, or be very well known.” (See Commons’ Journals, iii. 710.) The Preface is wrongly put with N. XXII., 5; N. XXII., 51 is another copy of the Preface. [N. XXII., 6.]

1644, November 23. Kingston.—Concerning Captain Withers and Mr. Andrewes' cause. The former had been given possession of the latter's estate to repay his losses from the King's forces, which he put at 2,000*l.*, whereas Mr. Andrews hath made it appear to us that his losses are not above a quarter of that sum, and that he has already been recouped out of the profits received by him. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 152.]

SIR JOHN WITTEWRONGE, SIR JOHN GARRARD, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644, November 30. St. Albans.—The letter of the House dated October 28th represents there hath been a great negligence on our part for the supply of Newport Garrison. We are very sorry we should be so misunderstood in declaring the pressures of our County as that in desiring relief we should be rendered neglectful of our duty. Since receipt of your letter we have sent to Newport 500*l.*, which we borrowed, and appointed two of our Committee to go with it, and take an account out of the Treasurer's books there what we have paid and what other the Associated Counties have paid. We find we have paid for that garrison more than all the Association as appears by the inclosed account. Our humble suit to the House is that our County may be relieved of its insupportable burdens, which are as follows:—First, the County hath been set at above half in many ordinances with Essex when they ought not to have been above one third, and yet they have conformed in'all obedience to pay their rates; Secondly, the great weekly disproportion of the ordinance for the Earl of Manchester for the maintaining of the associated forces, which amounteth in this County to 112*l.* 10*s.* weekly above their just proportion with Essex, which hath been continued now near 12 months, which in the whole year amounteth to 5,400*l.*; Thirdly, the great and insupportable burthen of the free quarter during his Excellency's army the last winter on them, amounting in only two Hundreds to 10,760*l.*—the other three not being yet cast up,—besides the great damage that befell them during that quarter; Fourthly, the heavy burthen to the County in the passing and repassing of the Parliament's forces for the most part on free quarter. Besides all this the County hath sent out upon the commands of the Committee of Both Kingdoms their own domesticall forces, which have cost them over 9,000*l.*, besides the great hindrance that hath accrued to them by the miss of their men. Many more are the pressures, which we forbear to mention. We therefore humbly pray that the County may be relieved in their former disproportions, and freed from that disproportion that is and hath continued on them in the Earl of Manchester's Ordinance, and specially that that great and grievous charge of the quartering of the army may be speedily repaid, and other the Associated Counties may be brought up to equalize them in Newport Garrison. The County is no way able to beare such charge as they now are under, it having cost them 3,800*l.* a month the last year, besides the free quarter, the excise, the fifth and twentieth part. Postscript.—We desire that the Committee or any two of them may be given power to make distress on all persons who disobey their warrants in paying the levies laid on them for the use of the armies as they pass and repass, for the charge of our imprest soldiers, and for such like services, as are of necessity to be done upon any emergency. Signed.

Annexed is the following account:—

This account we received from the Treasurer of Newport, written with his own hand. Teste William Love, William Dany.

So it appeareth Hertfordshire have paid more than either Essex, Norfolk, or Suffolk by 0950 00 00

Besides we paid Colonel Ayloffe out of the treasury at Hertford, while he lay at Newport with his forces to help keep that garrison:—

And more we sent to Cambridge to pay

So it appeareth that though any of those counties be valued at three times as much as Hertford in magnitude yet taxed but equal to us, they of that tax imposed are short of us. [N. III., 153.]

[SIR ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER] to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1644, December 15. Orchard.—“The last night we brought all our carriages safe to Taunton with our horse. We find the Castle in no great want of victual only of powder and salt. The town began to be in great distress, and it is almost a miracle to us that they should adventure to keep the town, their works being for the most part but pales and hedges and no line about the town. The enemy endeavoured twice to force it, but were repulsed, and since they have only kept them in by a quartering round about the town at a mile or two distance. Notwithstanding the townsmen made daily sallies and got in store of victuals without which it had been impossible for them to maintain such numbers of unnecessary people. The enemy on Friday last have quitted their garrisons in Wellington, Wycraft, and Cokum houses. The two last they have burnt, and, as I now hear, they have quitted Chideock house, whether it be out of fear or to make a body able to encounter with us we cannot yet understand, but Sir Lewis Dives coming up with his horse to the Bridgwater forces argues the latter. However, we are in a very good condition if they receive no assistance from the King's army, which we most fear, this county being of so great import to the enemy that it will be worth their engaging their whole army which may prove a successful design to them, if we have not a considerable strength ready on all motions of the enemy to advance to our assistance.” (See Commons' Journals, iii. 734). Signature torn off. Seal. [N. III., 155.]

The humble Advice of the ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES.

1644, December 16.—Concerning the Visitation of the Sick. This shows the Clauses omitted by the House of Commons for which was substituted the part in the printed copies from “And if the sick person shall declare any scruple” to “door of hope to every penitent believer.” These omitted clauses are as follows:—“Exhorting him to declare what burden or trouble lyes upon his conscience, what sense he hath of his sinnes, what scruples, doubts, temptations are upon him; and shall accordingly instruct and relieve him. If the minister bee unacquainted with his conversation, he shall inquire of it, and what communion he hath held with God in his publique ordinances, how hee hath prized the Gospel and the meanes of grace, what care he hath had of private duties and of keeping a conscience void of offence towards God and man, and what evidences or hopes he hath gotten of the pardon of his sinnes, and his peace with God.

If he find that he hath not walked as becometh the Gospel, he shall endeavor to convince him of his sinnes, of the guilt and desert of them, the filth and pollution which the soule contracts by them, and of the curse of the Law, and wrath of God due to them, that hee may bee duely affected with and humbled for them, letting him know the danger of deferring repentance and of neglecting salvation at any time offered, thereby awakening his conscience and rousing him out of his stupid and secure condition to apprehend the justice and wrath of God, before which no man can stand but hee that being lost in himself, layeth hold upon Christ by faith.

If hee hath endeavored to walk in the wayes of holynes and to serve God in uprightnesse, although not without many failings and infirmities, or if his spirit bee broken with the sense of sin, or cast down through want of the sense of God's favour, the minister shal labour to raise him up by setting before him the freenes and fullnes of God's grace, the sufficiency of righteousnes in Christ, the gracious offers in the Gospel that all who repent and beleive with all their heart in God's mercy through Christ, renouncing their own righteousnes, shall have life and salvation in Him.

Hee shall further endeavor to strengthen the sick person so qualified, against the feare of death, as having in it no spiritual evil to be feared by those that are in Christ, because sin, the sting of death, is taken away by Christ Who hath delivered all that are His from the bondage of the feare of death, triumphed over the grave, given us victory, is Himself entred into glory, to prepare a place for His people, so that neither life nor death shalbee able to separate them from God's love in Christ in whom such are sure, though now they must be laid in the dust, to obtayne a joyfull and glorious Resurrection to eternal life.

If weaknes disable the sick person from giving cleare expressions of his repentance and obedience to the Gospel, the minister—with all prudence and discretion—shall advise him as to beware of an ill grounded perswasion on mercy, or on the goodnes of his condicion for heaven; so to disclayme all merit in himself, and to cast himself wholly upon God for mercy in the sole merits and mediation of Jesus Christ Who hath engaged Himself never to cast off them who in truth and syncerity come unto Him. The minister also is to take care that hee cast him not down into despaire by such a severe representation of the wrath of God due to him for his sinnes, as is not mollified by a seasonable propounding of Christ and His merits for a doore of hope to every penitent beleiver." [The COMMITTEE FOR IRISH AFFAIRS] to [the PARLIAMENT].

[1644.]—Proposing to raise the Excise on Beer imposed by the Ordinance of September 11th, 1643, explained by that of October 17th, from 2s. a barrel to 3s., the additional revenue to be paid to them for the maintenance of the Parliament's forces in Ireland, because, "it is manifest from the date of the said Ordinance the retailers did advance one farthing upon the quart . . . by colour of Excise, and so continued till farthings would not pass in payment. It is certain that two thirds of a farthing do implete the duty of 2s. . . and the other third part . . . is exacted contrary to the Ordinance and produceth half as much in the gross sum as the rest. . . The Commons take this to heart that so much should be exacted from them and detained to the benefit of tapsters and retailers and not to be converted to the supply of the State's service, and so prevent such further impositions as might be raised on the subject for that purpose, and this doth often beget controversies. . . Since there is an equal number of statute quarts in a barrel with that of farthings in 3s. . ." if the duty be raised to 3s. a barrel "it would give abundant satisfaction to the subject, and the retailers be left without any just cause of complaint, whose insolency is growen so great that since farthings pass not in payment they now usually take 2*d*. for the quart of beer, which before was sold for six farthings, which raiseth the Excise to the Common 6s. upon the barrel and 4s. to the retailers' benefit." BRIAN DAWSON, of York, to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

[1644.]—Petition stating that of the lead brought to York by the Earl of Newcastle about 34 fother belonged to the petitioner, which was sold and the proceeds applied to the use of the Parliament's army, and praying that some money be immediately paid him and the rest allowed out of the Customs and Excise on such of his goods as be imported or exported into or out of Hull. [N. XXII., 139.]

THOMAS LAWE, Mayor, EDWARD BYLES, NORRIS CANE, JOHN HOBSON, JOHN BROWNE, SAMUEL CUST, and JOHN WHITINGE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1645. Boston (?).]—We take the opportunity of Mr. Pelham's bring here to represent the state of this place. From the beginning of these troubles we have been forward to advance the cause of the Parliament. 'Tis very well known of what consequence this garrison is not only to this County but also to the whole Association. It hath notwithstanding been of late so much forgotten that the soldiers though not half so many as are necessary are many months in arrear, and therefore ready to mutiny. The want of pay for their quarters hath so impoverished the inhabitants that they are no longer able to bear it in respect of which and their late great losses of ships and goods as also that they have been put to great charges in making great and chargeable works, which they are unable to finish or hold without the assistance of the house. Wherefore we pray that a competent garrison may be established, and the arrears discharged, which are above 2,000*l.* Signed. Seal. Endorsed "from Lincoln."

(This letter is probably from Boston, as a Thomas Lawe was Mayor there in 1652-3 and no such name occurs in the list of the Mayors of Lincoln. It was probably sent up with the letter from Lincoln of August 4, 1645, post, p. 237. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 263.) [N. V., 106.]

Breviate of the SCOTTISH PAPERS.

[1644, December.]—(See Commons' Journals, iii. 717, 723.) 1. That some solid way may be taken for securing the payment of the 31,000*l.* monthly.

2. That the assessment, sequestrations, excise, King's and Queen's revenues of the six Northern Counties, and whatever other means are or may be assigned for the payment of the Scotch army, be ascertained and secured against being otherwise applied.

3. That the deficiency of the 31,000*l.* be otherwise secured by Parliament.

4. That the Northern Counties where the Scotch armies are be not over-burdened with new levies and quartering of troops which consume the entertainment and accommodation of the Scotch army in those barren and wasted counties, and being under no command commit great disorders, and that such as are raised be removed to other places where they should be upon service.

5. That, in respect the 31,000*l.* for the monthly pay of the Earl of Leven's army will not much exceed a fortnight's pay, it is desired that the Parliament, upon whose invitation the Earl of Calendar came into this kingdom, should resolve on some means of entertainment of those forces.

6. That victuals and provisions sent from London to the Scotch Army be sold at a reasonable price and be free from Excise. [N. XIX., 103.]

Examined Copies of SEVEN PAPERS that passed between SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, Commissioner of the Parliament of England, and the ESTATES OF SCOTLAND, all at Edinburgh.

1. FROM SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE.

1644[-5], February 4.—Announcing his appointment to attend the Parliament of Scotland, and desiring that Commissioners from both nations be appointed to take the accounts between the inhabitants of England and the soldiers of the Scotch army since their entrance. [N. XIX., 91.]

2. FROM THE SAME.

Same date.—Desiring that no protection be given by the Scotch army to any English subject against the orders of the Parliament, and in particular that the order of the House of Commons, dated November 19th concerning Delinquents in Newcastle, be put in execution. [N. XIX., 91.]

3. FROM THE SAME.

1644[-5], February 7.—Whereas the Parliament of England have appointed the Excise and Sequestrations in the Northern parts for the maintenance and pay of the Scotch Army, desiring that orders may be given to the said army not to hinder, but on the contrary to assist, those appointed by Parliament for that service. [N. XIX., 96.]

4. FROM THE ESTATES.

1644[-5], February 12.—It was agreed by the Committee of both kingdoms at Newcastle that such persons should be employed for working the coals there as were able to do so, for the maintenance of the army, some of whom are within the said order of November 19th, not from any intention to protect them, but from mere necessity for upholding the coal works, which necessity still continues, notwithstanding which the Estates agree that the said order be put in execution, except as regards persons included in the capitulation of Tynemouth Castle. [N. XIX., 92.]

5. FROM SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE.

1644[-5], February 13.—Whereas the burthens of the kingdom of England are so great that they have not been able to pay the Scotch army the monthly sum of 31,000*l.*, desiring that the Estates would reduce their forces in England to such an establishment by lessening the number of regiments and officers that the money that is or can be provided may be disposed of to the best advantage, seeing it is one part of the treaty that the Kingdom of Scotland should manage their army in England as for themselves. [N. XIX., 95.]

6. FROM SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE.

1644[-5], February 18.—Whereas the paper of the 4th instant consisted not only of a particular desire concerning the Delinquents of Newcastle—to which the answer of the 12th has given satisfaction—but also of a general desire, desiring that all Protections already given to Delinquents without the consent of the Commissioners of Parliament be limited to their just intention, which is conceived to be restraining the soldiers from all acts of violence, and not extended to the prejudice of any order or power of Parliament, and that no Protections be given or Capitulations made in future without the consent of the Committee with the Army, or in more difficult cases of Parliament itself, if possible. [N. XIX., 93.]

7. FROM THE ESTATES.

[1644-5, February.] — In reply to the last paper all Protections complained of or to be complained of shall be revised by the Committee of both Kingdoms on the place, and on review of the list of Delinquents they shall take such course for removing them out of the Counties or securing them by imprisonment or caution for their good behaviour as they shall find most necessary, and for the future we agree with the said paper, but where the generals of our army think it necessary to delay the execution of any orders of Parliament or their committees, such necessity be represented to the Committee of both Kingdoms on the place, and to our Commissioners in London for preventing mistakes, without prejudice to keeping and falsifying (sic) the conditions in necessary Capitulations not being against the laws of the Nation or the National Covenant and whereunto the advice and consent of the Commissioners of the Parliament of England should be craved if possible.

In reply to the paper of the 4th we have ordered the Committee that goes with that Army to appoint some of their number or others to concur with the English Commissioners or with whom they shall appoint for the ends therein mentioned.

In reply to the paper of the 13th we have appointed the Committee of Estates to go really about the recruiting and reforming of the army, who we are confident will go heartily about it.

In reply to the remonstrance of Northumberland concerning the moss-troopers [ante, p. 202] we have given direction to the Colonels and Committee of War on the Scotch Borders to apprehend those mentioned in the list, and any others they can try to be partakers in those robberies, or their reseters, and to do justice to the satisfaction of the English Border Counties, with whom they are directed to concur, and the Committee of Estates have been appointed to write to the Lord General, that by the advice of Colonel Welden or any other instructed for Northumberland all possible concurrence may be done on our behalf for that effect.

In reply to the paper of the 7th we doubt not that the Lord General and the Committee with him will concur to further all ordinances of Parliament, especially those for the Exeise and Sequestrations. [N. XIX., 97.]

SIR WILLIAM WALLER to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

[1644-5, February 11.]—"Upon an information that the enemy had three regiments of horse with some dragoons quartered at Andover, I gave order to a party of my Lord Generall's horse, and some regiments of mine owne to advance to Roply intendinge from thence to march with them, and to attempte the beatinge up of that quarter. But when I came thither I received advertizement that the enemy—by some intelligence from Old Alsford—had taken the allarume, and was retired to Newtontony neare Amesbury. The enemy from Salisbury have sent out there warrants for the bringinge in of cariages upon paine of death, which is a cleare implication that they intend to march, and I guess itt wilbee westwarde, in regard I heare Majour-Generall Holburne hath ingaged Sir Lewis Dives' forces. It wilbee of very great consequence to dispatch away forces to there present releife, with a strength answerable to so great a worke. I am now labouringe to gett the foote heere to march, but I know not how farr I shall prevaile with them. I heare nothinge yet of Ailisbury regiment, neither is Colonell Morleyes foote yet come to me. The comissioners cann give you an accounte how farr I fall shorte of the number of my horse. If all his Excellencyes foote might bee drawn out of Reddinge, and a course taken to secure that place in there absence, I shall—by God's assistance—bee inabled to bee master of the field, and goe thorough with that worke in the west, which I looke upon as the greatest service in the field that now lyes before you; whereas if through the weakeness of this partie, I should receive any blow, itt would bee very dangerous to the East and West. I humbly desire that the particulers mentioned in my former letters may be immediatly dispatched unto me." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 46.) Signed. Seal. [N. III., 159.]

SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1644[-5], February 26. Newcastle.—Have 'delivered the letters committed to me and several other papers grounded on my instructions to the Parliament of Scotland, where I stayed near a month. I had stayed longer, but my health and my desire to return to my former charge in the affairs of the Northern Counties did not permit it. The multitude of business in which the Parliament was engaged hindered my receiving answers to some of the papers I presented, but Mr. Bowles shall shortly give you an account of it. I have sent the letter about the army marching southward to be presented by Lord Wariston. I desire a recompense be made to Mr. Bowles. Signed. Seal. [N. III., 161.]

This I have often represented to the House in sundry of my former letters, and at this present there are gentlemen here of the country attending upon the Parliament and your Lordships for redress of their miseries, which if not suddenly helped will be past recovery." M. DE SABRAN to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1644[-5], March 4.—It appearing that the conference was broken off rather than finished, and more by the shortness of the time than by the design of the Deputies or the two parties, and since the King in addition to the offers he made during the last days has desired a prolongation, allow me, persevering in the duties imposed on me by the orders and affection of their Most Christian Majesties of watching incessantly over everything that can facilitate a peace, to represent that if the expiration of the time fixed for the conference, when the said offers from his Majesty and marks of his good intentions were received at Uxbridge and by the Parliament, has hindered your taking the resolution you might perhaps have taken, it is better worth trying by a new prolongation of the conference to shorten that of the war than by its termination to augment the mutual distrust of the two parties. And if you judge me a fit person to be entrusted with your answers and intentions on that subject I will very willingly delay for four days my departure to the King of Great Britain, which I had fixed for to-day, in order to await your resolutions. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 68.) In French. Signed. [N. XVII., 6.]

The next Tuesday being the 27: of Feb: I went out and took good stor of provision going to Bostoune guarded by some musquetiers who run into a wood so could no be had. On Weddensday next at night the 28: of Feb: I went to Nook with my onne hors and dragounes, leaving my dragounes at Eislip Bridge for our saver retreat. We entered the hous and took some armes with other things necessarie for men and horses—belonging to the enemy—out of the hous. We pursued the enemy through the hous to the leads quher ther was a narrow trapp and a double door so we could goe no further. I did not stay long, it being day before I came to Nook, I retreated close by the King's troops, losing but two horses which was nothing in respect of what we got. Sunday the second of March, I borrowed from Sir Samuel Luk one hundred hors and that same night marched towards Kidlington wher the King his troops quartered. We made our passage over the river with faggotes at Eislip Mill with the on half of the partie commanded by my self to get betwixt them and Oxford, so that I was in the village befor they knew. The rest of the partie I sent to Casworth Bridge—commanded by on of Sir Samuel his captaines—to brak open a chain with a lock, and a turnpick with another verie strong lock which was the way of our retreat. This troope consisting all of gentlemen wer quartered at Oxford. Som of them gon that afternoon befor I cam thither, leaving ther servants and horses at ther quarters. We took six or seven prisoners with on of his Majestys commisaries betwixt thirtie and fourtie horses with manie pistoles [and] carabines; we gave them a strong alarme at Oxford, and all the countrie round wher the enemy ar quartered. Cononell Palmer—on of the enemy—with his regiment made a show of pursuing us, but at verie great distance. Ther is on of the enemy—a sarjant—came to me out of Bletchington hous, another yesternight out of the King's troope who affirmeth the enemy to be verie feared so that they ar gon from Nook to Bletchington hous, sine we bate ther quarters up at Nook. Ther is eight scor of the enemy in Bletchington hous which if it wer under the comma[nd] of the parliament—being thought a verie considerable place—who ever should be in it wer able to doe good service commanding all for the most part betwixt Oxford Wister and Banburrie.” *Signed. The AMBASSADORS OF THE STATES-GENERAL to the KING.

1644-5, March 23. Oxford.—After expressing the gratification the States-General will feel at the manner in which his Majesty has received their propositions, and the interest they take in the maintenance of the Protestant religion in England and of the laws of the kingdom regarding the rights and prerogatives of the king and the liberties and privileges of all his subjects, they proceed thus: But all human actions, even the best and the most just are subject to men's judgment and to various and sometimes sinister misconstructions. It is more than a year since we have been in the kingdom, and since we addressed ourselves to the Lords and Commons of the Parliament at London. After demanding for some months our admittance, which was at last granted, we declared the sincere intentions of our lords and masters in order to be able to offer our mediation for the settlement of the distractions of these kingdoms. We have been for five months soliciting an answer, and when we obtained it at last we found it couched in such general and obscure terms that we did not know what to make of it. We have by letter informed our said lords of everything, and they, having learnt by a second reply of the Parliament, that they did not as yet declare themselves plainly, have ordered us in that case to repair to your Majesty, charging us to declare that they find themselves greatly honoured and obliged by the confidence your Majesty has deigned to show in their devoted services and their duties, to be employed by us their Ambassadors for the good of your Majesty and all the subjects of his kingdoms. And, since it has not pleased the great God of peace to terminate the present distractions by some way of accommodation, committing themselves to divine Providence, they will not cease taking the best opportunities and suitable means, which may tend to a good termination of the present distractions, that they may see themselves overwhelmed with satisfaction at your Majesty, once more united with his people, enjoying perfect peace, the love of his subjects, and all the grandeur and happiness that the great friends and sincere allies of your Majesty and his Crowns could wish him. In French. Copy. [N. XVIII., 102.]

The COMMITTEE AT GROCERS' HALL to SIR HENRY VANE, the elder, and the rest of the Committee appointed to treat with them.

1645, April 10. Grocers' Hall.—Having protested their disinterestedness and willingness to contribute, and stated that no man can set up a trade without a stock or credit. “The committee to supply the army in Ireland heretofore are run in debt, which their creditors have long forborne with no little clamour to us, as if it concerned our private interest. . . . To redcem all, and to put us in esteem and capacity again to serve you and this business of Ireland . . . we lumbly propose it as necessary . . . that either that ordinance may pass—whereof we have delivered a draught to Colonel Jephson—in such manner as shall be thought fit, or that some other like expedient may be found out to be a foundation of credit at all times to this Committee to answer your orders . . . for supply of moneys and provisions for the affair, which is the course hath been observed at Goldsmiths' Hall . . . and by which means they have done the state that faithful service there, which hath outgone all expectation, and we further crave humbly to represent our opinions in this particular that until some such course be taken that the subscriber may be satisfied and see a way laid before him to support that war, and that the Parliament is resolved to go on with it, the expense of their former disbursements for the service with so little fruit have put them out of all comfort that any good will be done by any such supplies which are only small—as we say—from hand to mouth and which dishearten the soldier also cheerfully to proceed, when he sees not how to be supplied again after the expense of that little which he thus receives. It must be also the assurance of these goods in York House propounded for to raise moneys and provisions to be put into the hands of the Committee by ordinance with power to dispose and sell, and likewise the remainder of the money to be collected upon the ordinance of 80,000*l.* after that 80,000*l.* satisfied, which will engage the Committee or whom they shall treat withal to lend money or make the provisions desired, which, if you shall be pleased to cause to be speedily done, so as they may sell them for the best advantage of the state and answer the values in what moneys they shall thus lend and provisions they shall thus make, and that these may be added to the other ordinance to make one work of all, for the better encouragement of any one concerned in this business." - i. An Act for the avoiding of all doubts concerning the validity of the late cessation and the indemnity of his Majesty's good subjects for having commerce and trade with the contrary party.

- ii. An Act declaring his Majesty's Grace and Goodness to his subjects of this his kingdom of Ireland.

The first clause grants a remittal of rents, &c. as in the bill mentioned in Lord Digby's letter, printed in Carte, Life of Ormond, vol. iii. p. 362, No. 347; the second converts the tenure in capite to tenure in socage for the undertakers, servitors, and natives, in the five escheated counties of Armagh, Tyrone, Fermanagh, Donegal, and Cavan; the third (which is in parts illegible) limits the benefit of the Act to such as have been obedient since October 23, 1641 to the authorities established by his Majesty in Ireland, and to such as shall be received into grace and favour; the fourth empowers the Lord Lieutenant to receive into grace and favour such persons and towns corporate as shall be deemed fit objects of his Majesty's mercy, and enacts that thereupon they shall be adjudged to be in possession of all lands, &c. in such manner as they enjoyed them on the 20th of October 1641, and shall be restored to their bloods and be in the same condition as on that day. Copy. SIR SAMUEL LUKE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, April 28. Newport.—The time appointed by the Ordinance for calling up the members now expiring, before leaving the place I will acquaint you with its condition. I desire that "you will take some care for providing some money for fortifying, soldiers, and workmen, not knowing what effects necessity and change of a governor may work amongst them. You have here 1,100 foot and 250 horse belonging to the garrison, which if I am not deceived have been raised and paid with so little a charge that none of the counties will have cause to complain when their Committees have been here and taken their account. I confess the keeping in of my Lieutenant-Colonel, who is their countryman, will be a great means to keep them together, but without money they cannot long subsist." Seal. [N. IV., 3.]

The EARL OF CALANDER to the SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS in LONDON.

1645, May 18.—(The substance of the first part appears from the paragraph of the Scotch Paper printed in Lords' Journals, vii. 391, second column, beginning, “This letter coming to the Earl of Leven.” It continues thus): “We should be forced to march upon his rear, and have little or no entertainment for our army, since all the provisions of the country would be eaten or destroyed by the enemy. If we should abandon Yorkshire and go into Lancashire this county would lay open to the enemy, and in all probability the City of York would be lost, besides many other inconveniences. If we stay here the King is left at liberty to go into Lancashire, where he may increase his army to a very great number by reason of the many disaffected persons in that county. We have offered to my Lord Fairfax to go into Lancashire, if his Lordship with his own forces, the assistance of the 2,500 horse and dragoons from the south, and the rest of the English forces from Derbyshire and those parts would undertake the defence of this county, or if his Lordship with those forces would secure Lancashire we offered to defend this county. But his Lordship declares he can do neither. It is altogether impossible for us to defend both being a line of above 80 miles, the ways and passages also between those counties being such as the forces in the one county cannot without great difficulty and marching a long way about give assistance to the other, and the King left at liberty to march into the one or the other, as he shall see his best advantage. The King's speedy march northward will, in all probability, hinder the coming up of many of those forces designed for our assistance, and for ought we can learn of Sir William Brereton's purpose we shall have little or no assistance from his forces. He conceives it will be necessary to put all his foot into their garrisons, otherwise" they "will be lost. And it seems he intends also to detain not only his own, but my Lord Fairfax's horse for the defence of the garrisons and counties where he is. Howsoever upon certain intelligence which way the enemy bends his course, we shall take the best ways and means in our power for opposing them. But we humbly conceive we needed not to have been put to so many difficulties and to bear so great a burthen of the war, when the Parliament have a strong army in the South, which might have followed the King on the rear, and we being before him by God's blessing might make an end of the war. And we also think, when a puissant enemy is ranging through the kingdom acquiring strength and subduing whole counties, that it is not reasonable to employ armies for the reducing of towns and lying down before strengths, but that it were much better for the security of the kingdoms and putting an end to our troubles to pursue the enemy in the field." (See Lords' Journals, vii. 386.) Copy. [N. XII., 104.]

[GEORGE LORD DIGBY] to [GEORGE LORD GORING.]

[1645], May 19. Newport. —“The bearer is despatched so suddely and I have written . . . so largely to the Prince's Council and in private to Lord Culpeper . . . that I have only time to tell your Lordship that the orders which you will herewithal receive from Prince Rupert to march presently with all the strength you can make to Marred Harborough (sic Market Harborough) in Leicestershire are dynt (sic ? sent) you by the unanimous advice of all here as a thing most absolutely necessary to our preservation, the Rebels setting up their whole rest upon encountering and distressing this army, where the King's person is, as will appear to you by their particular forces drawn this way whereof I have given an account in my letter to the Prince's Council. If their aims had been at the West all things had been laid aside to succour you and now vice versa you must do the like. For God's sake use diligence and come as strong as you can. In my conscience it will be the last blow in the business. Bring with you what powder and match you can possibly, and it is necessary that your design be kept very secret, and that it may be understood that it is for Surrey and Sussex.”

[PRINCE RUPERT] to [GEORGE LORD GORING.]

Same date and place. “I shall desire your Lordship to march immediately with all the horse and foot your Lordship can possibly can (sic) leaving a convenient and competent number within foy (sic) the garrisons the[re]. I shall expect by your Lordship at least 3,500 effectual horse, and all the foot as well Grenvil's as your own not staying for the new levies. I shall desire your Lordship to bring with you the lercehe (sic) my train and all the powder and match you possibly can. It is conceived the best way to direct your course to Harborough in Leicestershire, and you will do the least hurt to our quarters about Oxford and near Northampton, but I refer the election to you."

Postscript.—"The reasons your Lordships will fully [understand] by the Lord Digby." Copies. (The originals probably wholly or partly in cipher, hence the mistakes.) [N. XII., 77.]

DOM ANTONIO DE SOUSA, Portuguese Ambassador, to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1645, May 21.—My master has received a letter in the name of the Parliament of England, but it having been delivered by a private person, he cannot be sure from whom it is, and cannot give a suitable answer. He therefore commands me to say that the person mentioned in the said letter, who had already left Portugal when the letter arrived, had gone there for objects different from those alleged in the said letter. He has also ordered me to request the two Houses, that, should anything else require to be represented for the good of the two Crowns, to avoid similar doubts which might cause delay, they would represent it through myself, assuring themselves that his Majesty will endeavour not only to preserve the good understanding between the two Crowns but also to give satisfaction to the Parliament, without prejudice nevertheless to his Britannic Majesty, with the affection which is natural between the two nations. For my part I shall certainly proceed with the sincerity I ought and the neutrality I profess. In French. Signed. [N. XVII., 89.]

THE PRINCE OF WALES to GEORGE LORD GORING.

1645, June 15. Barnstaple.—During our late stay at Dunster Castle we received many great complaints from the inhabitants of those parts of the insolencies and injuries they undergo by officers and soldiers who pretend to be under your Lordship's command, the sum and grounds whereof we send you enclosed, and we earnestly recommend the redress thereof to your Lordship, presuming that your Lordship having informed us of your prohibiting the levying any money by your soldiers in that country—as indeed the condition thereof requires—will take such course that the poor people, who pay their contribution, assist that army with provision, and do all other duties very cheerfully, may not be discouraged by such usage. And we desire your Lordship to direct some examination to be taken what prisoners remain in the hands of any of your soldiers taken from their houses for no reason but to compel them to redeem themselves for money, all whom we doubt not but your Lordship will cause speedily to be set at liberty. Counter-signed “Richard Fanshawe.” Sign Manual. The EARL OF LEVEN, the EARL OF CALANDER, and A. HAMILTON to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

1645, June 21. Nottingham.—“The continuance of a firme union and good correspondence between the kingdomes, is so much in our thoughts and wishes, as that without it wee can expect no better then the weakning, yea undoeing of this Common Cause, and the strenthning of the common enemies. And although there be neither few nor small occasions of discouragements from the misrepresentation of our actions, and misapprehension of our intentions, from the cooling if not changing of that affection formerly exprest, both towards ourselves and toward divers of our countreyemen, who have deserved weell for their abilities and faithfulness in the publique, and from the usage, and entertainment of this army which is neither according to that which other armyes in this kingdome do receive nor according to the treaty between the kingdomes, nor at all certain, such as can avoyde the hatred and discontent of the people whose affections and goodwill wee desire to carry along with us: Yet notwithstanding all these and the like discouragements, our actions have been, are, and shall be reall testimonies of our constant resolution to persue actively the ends exprest in the Covenant, and to adventure ourselves and whatsoever is dearest to us in this cause. And that as wee had great reason to march into Westmoreland in regard of the intelligence both then and since confirmed to us, so wee have been as ready and willing to come southward, as wee were desyred by the honourable houses of parliament and by your Lordships. And wee have marched with more speed, and lesse interruption then is usuall in such cases, yea our march had been more speedy, if wee had not been stayed in some places for want of draughts and provisions. And now wee are with the assistance of God Almighty, to undertake any action which may be fittest for the cause and safety of both kingdomes. But if—which God forbid—for want of the conjunction, and assistance promised, or for want of necessary provisions, the public worke be retarded or disappointed, wee shall be blameles. And therefore wee doe recommend to your Lordships' most serious deliberation that some more effectuall and speedy course be taken for necessary provisions to this army, that both officers and souldiers may have in an orderly and constant way not onely a part of their pay in victualls, but also money for their other necessary uses, and in case of our conjunction with any other forces of the kingdome, that then the provisions of this army be no worse then of those other forces. Which things, as they are just in themselves, so they are the rather decayed, that this army may not be burthensome, nor hatefull to the countyes where wee come, and that wee may not be redacted to the unhappy necessity of not punishing strictly wrongs and disorders, which as wee have not only forbidden by the strictest edicts but have exemplarly and severely punished, so shall wee ever be ready upon complaint, and proof of the same either to punish the same by death, or other condigne punishment according to the quality of the offence. Wee further entreat and expect, that this warr might be managed according to the treaty by the committee of both kingdomes upon the place, and for that end, that a Quorum of the commissioners from the honourable houses of parliament may be constantly with this army. And that your Lordships may entertain charitable thoughts of our proceedings, confident, that according to the knowledge which God hath given us in the matters of our profession, wee shall improve all opportunities to the best advantage. Wee shall not need to put your Lordships in remembrance how necessary it is that before the armyes of either or both kingdomes undertake beseiging of any toun, they first endeavour a totall dissipation of all the forces which the enemy hes in the feilds, and so much the rather because by the blessing of God that dissipation shall be more easy if the armyes of both kingdomes be continually aiding and assisting each one to other, and that each act their part and attend the enemyes motions. What wee have written to your Lordships wee desire it may be made knowen to both houses of parliament and above all, that your Lordships would with all earnestness presse the expediting of the reformation of religion and uniformity in church government, together with the speedy prosecuting and ending of this warr, that wee may returne home with the comfort of religion and peace settled." Signed. [N. We are of opinion that if you assign him those foot that were brought by him to Taunton it will be your best means to draw together all those who have left their colours. We have likewise sent directions to the Committees of Cornwall and Devon to take speedy and effectual course whereby both those who have forsaken their colours and those who are to be levied according to the agreement be immediately sent you that that great work may be finished before the rebels can draw any forces for their relief. Countersigned "Richard Fanshawe." *Sign Manual. In your preceding letter—which was the welcomest that ever I received from you—you insist upon a particular concerning Sir Richard Grenville's commission of Field Marshal, a thing which I never had any knowledge of till your letter. But since, having informed myself of my Lord Culpeper, I find that that commission of Sir Richard Grenville's concerns not my Lord Wentworth nor you at all, it being merely titular as to your Association and he is with you in the army quite in another capacity. It is true that when the command of the army under Prince Rupert and of the Association yet in my Lord Hopton shall be united in your person, as is intended, then possibly there may somewhat come in controversy how that commission of Sir Richard Grenville's shall stand in order to both your capacities. As for any difference in point of command between my Lord Wentworth and Sir Richard Grenville in your present army—if any difference there be—that will be wholly in Prince Rupert's judgment and power to determine, being improper for the King to interpose in . . . *Signature torn off at end, but added to address. SIR THOMAS FAIRFAX TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, July 6. Crookhorne (Crewkorne).—Concerning the Clubmen I enclose copies of their petitions, directions and letter delivered to me by Mr. Holles and others and my answer. "I believe I shall have occasion very suddenly to write more concerning this business, if such an appearance be made upon a warrant lately issued out as is expected. Our friends at Taunton—the Lord be praised—are now at liberty ; the enemy drew off upon the approach of the army, before we got to Beaminster, and is marched to Somerton, and part of their army towards Bath and Wells. They brake down the bridge, which hinders our falling on their rear. There is a strong party of horse and dragoons attends their motion." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 292.) *Signature torn off. The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

1645, July 12.—“ We have very frequently represented . . . to the . . . Houses the hard condition of the Scotch army through want of necessary maintenance. Money is not given them whereby the country might be invited willingly to furnish them provisions and the endeavours of the Committees of the several Counties to bring them in without money . . . hath proved altogether ineffectual . . . and prejudices do inevitably follow, whereby the Army cannot encamp in the fields, but is forced to quarter at large in the villages, which subjects the Army to danger and the country people to those inconveniences from the soldier that otherwise might be avoided, and thereby makes the people everywhere look upon them not as Brethren to assist them, but enemies to take from them, while others pay for what they take. Two days of three are spent in procuring victuals for the Army whereas, being provided, they might proceed in a continued march; and when they shall come nearer the enemy will undoubtedly be reduced to greater extremities. The soldier is discontented, the country people disaffected, the public service disappointed, and the inconveniences every day so many, that the Army apprehends that either their condition is not rightly represented by us, or not believed by the Houses. We therefore earnestly desire that some effectual course may be taken for enabling them to perform the service that is expected from them, which in all probability must be in providing constantly money for the officers, and part money part provision for the common soldier. And that in the mean time power be granted for assessing the enemies' country, and places adjacent, till . . . a more regular and constant way of their maintenance be settled by the wisdom of the Parliament, without which we cannot see for the present how the war can be vigorously carried on in those parts, without being interrupted therein by daily wants before they be well begun. We desire also that the Houses . . . return an answer to the particulars presented the 4th . . . concerning that army and make known to them . . . their desires concerning their future undertakings, and that a Committee may be speedily sent to reside there, who at least may witness to the Parliament on the one hand the truth of this their hard condition from day to day notwithstanding the Treaty for their monthly maintenance, which is as obligatory and should be as effectual to them as any particular Ordinance is to any others, and on the other part the willingness and readiness of that army for the public service, if they were in any measure enabled and furnished with necessaries, while others are fully paid.”

We enclose an extract of a letter received yesterday. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 205). Signed “Jo. Cheislic.” [N. XII., 109.]

The EARL OF LEVEN and the COMMITTEE WITH THE ARMY to the SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

1645, July 8. Alcester.—We wrote to you from Birmingham the daily increasing hard condition of our Army. We desired from the Committee of Warwick and Coventry a constant way of entertainment, and in the mean time three days provision for marching and some money for officers under a Captain, but they have not done anything accordingly. We are now" here, "where we came yesternight a long march, and such we should make till we came where we might do service, but now we must stop here for want of provisions, for at the writing hereof the whole foot wants altogether officer and soldier alike, there being nothing to give the soldier and the officer having no money to buy anything. We think ourselves ill-used; we are called to march, march, that a plentiful country is still before us, where nothing will be wanting to us, but we find nothing by the way but solitude—pleasant places indeed for grass and trees, but no other refreshment, the country people looking upon us as enemies to take from them without paying for it, as others do, and so eschewing to bring in any provision, all which have been endured hithertill with admirable patience by the poor soldier. We can hardly believe that you represent what we write, or that you are believed in what you represent. Certainly neither ye nor we will be long able to feed the pinching belly of this Army with words, and to starve them with fair promises. They desire that Articles might be kept unto them, and that they may not be destroyed for their desire to save others We are now in the Shire we were desired to march to within a little distance of Worcester We shall be ashamed to be so nigh the enemy and do nothing worthy of the Army and yet we cannot contrary to the rules of reason and war, which require much order and great foresight, engage in any action from which we may be hindered or forced to leave from want of necessaries. We have so often given warning hereof that if it be not effectually and timeously remedied we cannot but apprehend—either in design or in consequence—the disabling and discrediting of this Army Therefore represent fully and freely to the Houses of Parliament" [what is represented in the Commissioners' Paper above].

Postscript.—"Of the addition of forces promised . . . we have not as yet seen any except two troops, as may appear by Sir John Gell's letter, and therefore desire you to use the greater diligence for procuring some part of our arrears to raise 1,000 horse to be constantly with us, seeing the enemies' strength is in horse. Necessity makes us so plain"

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1645, July 18.—Instructions to the Committee to reside with the Scotch Army.

They are to do their utmost towards the vigorous prosecution of the enemy and the preserving a good correspondency between the two kingdoms.

They are to acquaint the Scots "with the great straits we are in for want of money and that whatsoever failing of payments . . . have been from hence have not proceeded from any want of affection or intention to make good our engagements," and that a weekly assessment is now made for the maintenance of their army.

They are authorised to issue warrants for furnishing provisions to the counties where the army shall march, and to appoint sub-committees to assist them therein, account if possible to be taken of all such provisions that they may be charged on the pay of the Scotch army, and also to recruit horses for the army to replace those lost.

They are to take care that no protection be granted to any Delinquent, and the ordinances be put in execution against them.

They are to keep both Houses informed of their proceedings and observe any directions from both of them.

They are empowered, calling to their assistance the Committees of the Counties where such are appointed by the Parliament, to cause 200*l.* per diem in money and provisions to be furnished for the infantry of the army to be accounted as part of the 31,000*l.* per month.

1645, August 1. Cambridge.—Giving an account of what had been done in compliance with the order of the House for the speedy sending in of the proportion of horse assigned upon the County of Cambridge to

ROBERT CHARLTON, HUMPHREY MACKWORTH, ROBERT CLIVE, and others, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 2. Shrewsbury.—“We long since having occasion to send forth a party towards Bridgenorth took prisoner one Sir Thomas Whitmore, who is able to afford a good ransom . . . We have by small means so far prospered that the county is settled in such a condition, especially on the Welsh side the river that no small force of the enemy can hurt us, the country now in those parts unanimously joining with us. There only remains some garrisons of the enemies, which we doubt not . . . but will in short time be reduced, but in regard this county hath lain long under the burthen of contribution on both sides and so much suffered by plundering and other hindrances it is so impoverished that we fail much of the weekly subsistence we expect for ourselves,” besides our other great engagements and we therefore ask that Sir Thomas Whitmore's ransom may be granted us towards meeting them. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 12.]

Colonel MARTIN PYNDAR, HARCOURT LEIGHTON, and THOMAS HERBERT, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 2. Bridgwater.—“We have been longe silent by reason of the multiplicity of business in these parts especially in this towne of Bridgwater where the nobleness of the Generall for the preservation of the place hath begott us much trouble—which wee forethinke not—in labouringe both to satisfie the expectation of the soldyer and continue the townsman in his propriety. The rumor of riches here whored up will fill your expectations with large returnes of our labours wherein wee have as the answeere of a good conscience, soe the publike testimony of the country to certify you that in the first place the enemy himself seeinge to what he was reduced broke up all trunkes cabinetts and considerable places even in the time of parlie and tooke there all portable treasure which our poore honest soldyers let passe without riflinge, beinge accordinge to the Article; in the second place our owne soldyers notwithstandinge all the care wee could take beinge in number thousands to unity of us, over-maistered us, and soe made up theyr mouthes, who notwithstandinge will clamour for a share with the honestest of them that did nothinge; thirdly the numbers of persons upon oath attestinge both theyr propriety and necessity of securinge theyr goods in the place have wonne upon our judgments to deliver them such as are yet preserved from the fury of fire and warr upon easie and inconsiderable tearmes not worthy your trouble to take notice off. It remains only that wee present you with what wee found valuable and could not for it find a markett considerable: which is plate and hanginges—wherof wee have sent you a schedule—which wee have herewith sent up, by the safest convoy wee could get; humbly desiringe they may be committed to the care of the treasurers to be turned into money and speedily returned to the army, to be joyned to other monies made of such goods as have proved lawfull prize and have been by us sould to that purpose, promised by the Generall, that every soldyer should have a share in it. The successes of your armies, with theyr department wee presume have been faithfully and lively presented by Mr. Aysh and Mr. Moore whose presence and paines in the army have been of singular use. Wee shall only adde that some omission ther is to the compleatinge of those reall intentions agreed upon by you and published by us and in the generall expected by the country, the paiement of all your forces equally, which notwithstanding, there are divers regiments out of the establishment who pretendinge want of pay doe both take free quarter and plunder horses most unreasonably, not only to the dishonour of the parliament, but alsoe to the evill example of all the rest of the army. A president wherof wee make bold to present you with, and cannot much except against where pay is not to be had, but wee find noe other soe carefull as this generall to give tiquetts. There are severall regiments of horse that pretend the like want, as Collonel Popham's, Collonel Fitz-James', Collonel Cooke's, and all Major-Generall Massie's forces, whose service wee cannot but recommend, and whose paiement wee earnestly sollicit, that soe the reputation woune by your paiement of your army and the conquest wee have made over the Clubmen by paiement of our quarters may not be blasted by soe inconsiderable a party whome wee neither can pay or punish, deliveringe it as your knowne judgment that thousands have layed downe theyr armes merely upon the alteration of the soldyers' carriage, which worketh upon them more then lawes will. Yet wee humbly offer that it would much conduce to the perfectinge of the worke in hand, if wee might have your Declarations, Directory, the Cabinet of Letters, our instructions, and other thinges—fitt for the country to know—published in all places where wee march, the country hardly beleevinge you intend them either Liberty, Property or Religion, especially since you take away the Common-prayer Booke; which every soldyer doth practise to doe. Wee shall trouble you only with one thinge more: the hastning of your committees of sequestration and examination of the sufferances of the country: wee findinge the malignant rather to rule then to submit even in this garrison. And because they enjoy liberty and property they thinke the bitterness of death to be over and make use of their tongues, to the hearts' greife of the better part who have suffered by them." ROBERT MARSHALL, Mayor, THOMAS LISTER, Sheriff, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 4. Lincoln.—“ We taking into our consideration the great and growing strength of the forces of Newark and also of the weakness of the forces in this county upon which they do and have lain these several years have thought good to intreat Mr. Henry Pelham . . . to present unto the Honourable House how difficult a thing it will be to reduce Newark, unless it be speedily set on, before they shall have opportunity to get in their harvest, wherefore we beseech the Honourable House to take into their speedy consideration that the loss of this county is an inlet to all the Association, and consequently will be a ruin to those counties as also to Sir Thomas Fairfax's army, who are maintained from thence, to prevent which we humbly pray that some considerable forces may be speedily sent and commanded into these parts to join with our united forces for the blocking up and reducing of Newark." We also desire 60 barrels of powder, and want many other things which Mr. Pelham will represent to you. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 14.]

EDWARD LEIGH, and others the Committee at Stafford, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 5.—The Governor of Dudley Castle has lately executed one and the Governor of Hartlebury Castle threatens to execute another of Colonel Fox's soldiers. We have therefore delivered to Colonel Fox two Irish soldiers, which upon this occasion we purposed to have put to death by the Ordinance of October 24th last, but, as they were not put to death upon their taking, but so long foreborne, we desire the pleasure of the Parliament. *Signed. THOMAS LEVET and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 6. Burleigh.—“This last Tuesday being the 5th . . . God was pleased to give our forces a great victory over a party of Newark forces commanded by Sir Robert Dallison, which came up into the country as far as Stamford . . . to gather taxes, plunder the country and take prisoners. As soon as the alarm came to us Captain Allan . . . drew out all our forces with much expedition which consisted but of fourscore horse and thirteen dragoons sent after and went to intercept the enemy in their retreat, which was accordingly done. At Carleby near Stamford Captain Allan fell upon them and there routed the enemy, who consisted of 200 horse, but they were reported 400. Notwithstanding our men was not daunted, and God crowned them with success, they took there in all 51 prisoners [names given], and fourscore horses and arms. Besides five slain upon the place divers which escaped were wounded, and crept into the woods, and all this was done without the loss of one man of ours. There was also rescued the Alderman of Stamford with 15 considerable countrymen whom the enemy had taken prisoners.” . . . (See Commons' Journals, iv. 236.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 16.]

The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

1645, August 7.—Paper. “The pressing necessities of the Scotch army enforce us to represent . . . to . . . Parliament that notwithstanding the whole four months of the Ordinance be long since expired there is but a very small . . . proportion of the money assessed . . . as yet come into the Committee of Goldsmiths' Hall for repayment of the month's pay advanced by the City of London, and for satisfying the necessities of that army, which is reduced to that extremity in the present service wherein they are engaged that without the pease, apples, and wheat they gather from the ground they are not able to subsist. Some of the Counties, as Lincoln, Gloucester and Rutland desire to be excused and pretend their inability to afford any proportion of the money assessed upon them for that army, and little or none comes in from the rest of them.

It is above a twelvemonth since a month's pay was ordered by the House to be paid to the Scotch army out of the fines and compositions for Delinquents' estates immediately after the battle at Longmarston, a good proportion whereof is yet due, the payment of which is obstructed by several orders procured from the House for payments . . . for other uses out of those fines and compositions. Our earnest desire . . . is that some speedy and effectual course be taken for bringing in of the moneys due . . . for the four months past, that the ordinance may speedily be renewed, that the House will . . . appoint the Committee of Goldsmiths' Hall, first to pay the remainder of that month's pay voted after the battle of Longmarston . . . notwithstanding any subsequent orders, and, that the Committee of Goldsmiths' Hall may be enabled for the speedy payment thereof and of the incident charges, that the House will call for their reports concerning those fines wherein they can proceed no further without the approbation of the House." Signed "Jo. Cheislie." [N. XIX., 121.]

"A Remonstrance of the Deputy Lieutenants and Gentlemen of the County Palatine of Chester of the condition of that county and of the great advantage the reducing of the City of Chester would bring to the State and their humble request thereupon," setting forth the services done and the charges borne by the County and praying That "it may please this honourable House—the wealth of the County being well nigh exhausted and not longer able to subsist—to afford such timely assistance of horse and foot as you in your wisdoms shall think fit for the reducing of Chester on which depends the well being of this County, Lancashire, Shropshire, North Wales and the North part of England and also of Ireland, and that these forces be not maintained at the charge of the County. That shipping may be appointed for the guard of the Irish Seas to hinder the Irish from landing in England or Wales, who are daily expected, and Sir Marmaduke Langdale now sent into Wales with a power of horse to attend their landing. That our horse and dragoons be armed without which they cannot be serviceable and yet a charge to this County. That the Governor of Warrington may be commanded to relinquish the 29 towns lent him by this County for maintenance of that place, this County being now in distress, and that the money paid unto the said Governor since the serving of the order of this Honourable House for revoking of the said allotment be repaid. That some money may be afforded this County for payment of the horse and dragoons and procuring of ammunition which the County stands in great need of." [N. IV., 18.]

FRANCIS PIERREPONT and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 8. York.—"In respect none of the Northern forces are yet come up and a great part of ours being engaged in the blocking up those castles which the enemy yet holds in our county and that work being brought to so good a perfection that we hope it will very shortly be finished we cannot for the present observe the commands of the House, unless we should either expose this county to the plunder of the enemies' garrisons or the remaining party, if we should advance them to Newark, to be beaten by the enemy there. The Committees have now reduced the greatest part of this army, but the want of money both for satisfying those many officers, who must of necessity be cast, and also those soldiers which stand, we fear will prove very prejudicial to the service. And this County by reason of its being so harrassed formerly by unpaid armies affords little money, and it being now the harvest time makes the husbandmen unwilling to part with any." After a reference to the mutiny of the horse at Skipton, "we fear the same from the rest, and have little or no money to satisfy either them or the foot, who though they have been much better paid than the horse yet cannot forget their old custom of mutinying. However we shall use our best endeavours to settle them, and then we shall advance the force we can towards the blocking up of Newark, and we doubt not but you will take order that considerable forces may be drawn out of the Southern Associations to join with them." We desire a power to choose general officers. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 20.]

1645, August 8.—Again urging the exclusion of scandalous persons, arguing among other things that that power cannot be called arbitrary which is not according to the will of man, but the will of Christ, or unlimited, which is circumscribed and regulated by the exactest law, the word of God, and that it is not in the least measure inconsistent with the liberties of the subject, it being exercised wholly and solely in that which is not part of Civil Liberty, the Sacrament, which certainly none can claim as he is a freeborn subject of any kingdom or state but as he is visibly a member of the Church. RICHARD DARLEY and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 8. York.—Are informed that the House has designed 5,000*l.* for this army here as also 5,000*l.* more towards the discharge of the arrears of the officers who are to be dismissed on reducing the army, who are in number above 480. The honour of the state, the necessities of those officers and the present miserable condition of this country press us to beseech you to present to the House, that if these moneys be not speedily sent away to be employed for the purposes intended, the discontentment of the discharged officers, as it hath already in part, will, as we easily foresee, suddenly produce sad effects in the country and kingdom, and the standing army, as it is now moulded, cannot possibly be kept together, if this be not done. Signed. Captain TUTHILL to Captain STONE.

1645, August 8. Rushall.—“I have just now received intelligence from a man of quality, whose name I may not commit to paper, that the King is come to Bridgenorth this night, and hath with him 4,000 horse. His design is thought to be for the North. These are therefore, if you are doubtful of your strength at Tutbury, to intreat speedily to send them intelligence, that they may either be provided to fight or secure themselves . . . The next news is some forces for us have lately landed at Milford, routed Gerrard, taken four pieces and all carriages, the infantry routed, but the cavalry escaped.” [N. IV., 24.]

[JOHN RUSHWORTH] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 9. Sherborne.—“I have litle newes to adde since my former, for the Clubbmen are quiett since their being well beat att Hambleton Hill. The armie still continues before Shereborne Castle: it proves a difficult peece of worke, wee are undermineinge as fast as may bee, and makeing gallories; by the time the amunicion come to us—which came yesterday by sea to Poole—wee shall bee in a good readiness to fitt the myne for springinge. Wee are very close under theire walls, and make good our ground, notwithstandinge there many sallyes and throweinge of stoanes on our heads. The greatest hurte they doe us is by two keepers of parkes they have in the garrison, whoe in long fouling peeces, take aime throughe the loope holes in the wall,—for the most parte att commanders—. Captaine Horsey, a valiant honest gentleman was shott dead by one of them, likewise Captaine-Lieutenant Fleming to Colonel Rainesboroughe whoe is alsoe dead, and both buried with honour in Shereborne churche: Captaine Horsey, in the tombe there, where his ancestours were formerlie buried. Majour Doane, Captaine Crosse, and Captaine Creamer, all of them of that regiment likewise shott, but wee hope not mortall, most valiant men as any in the armie. Some of them were hurte in beatinge the enemy from a new batterie they were makeinge. Our peeces can doe noe good on the wall, it being twelve foote thicke, but when the great cannon comes, its conceived it will breake downe theire towers, and doe us great service. It is on the way from Poole. The mony is att Weymouth, and while the armee is mustered and paide—which will not bee till Wednesday att soonest, if wee had noe other worke to doe—wee must stay till that bee done and till our recrutes of foote come upp, which wee heare are within two dayes marche, and then if wee cannot carry the castle wee must leave a partie to doe it and marche into Devonshire with the armie, for the sommer spends and wee have much worke to doe. But, when wee be come before Exeter, I wish the materialls, and such things soe long sent for to London in order to seidges (sieges) may beo more timouslie sent downe. The Lieutenant-General of the ordinance here saith hee can acquitt himselfe by letter after letter, for great gunne shott, granadoes, great mortar peeces etc, but none is as yet come. This armie when wee come before a place, should not stay an houre for materialls. I desire you, Sir, to move—for the Generall above a moneth or five weeks since writt it—that great care bee taken to send downe things fittinge for seidges that being likelie to bee the business att the end of this summer. Goring lyes still and doth nothinge; within a few days I hope we shall rouse him.

Postscript.—Since the writeinge hereof, newes is come our recruits are this night within seven miles and our gunns and shott nine miles of. I come now from the work. Wee are within tenn yardes and lesse of the castle wall. Our demy cannon are just now planted of a new battery, when the shott comes and the whole cannon, wee shall drive them to a narrow compasse. Wee have dismounted all theire old ordnance; beaten them from all the four towers. Theire grate play is throwinge downe of stoanes. I make noe doubt with God's blessinge, wee shall have them every man. Our newes now is that the king is comeinge to Bristoll, gatheringe all the strength hee can to joyne with Goringe with the Cornish to raise this seidge. I had rather thincke it will prove but a pretence to doe it. Yet the place as to his affaires, and sup- portinge of the three parties is more considerable then Bridgewater was to him other wayes." Signature torn off. Seal. [N. IV., 28.]

FRANCIS BACON, SIR THOMAS BARNARDISTON, and others, to
WILLIAM LENTHALL

1645, August 11. Bury St. Edmunds. — Stating that the garrison at Lybb had no pay for a long time, and that their credit being now exhausted a quarrel between them and the townsmen was to be expected daily, and therefore desiring that pay might be speedily dispatched. Signed. [N. IV., 31.]

SIR JOHN CORBETT, WILLIAM PUREFOY, HUMPHREY SALWAY, and EDWARD BAINTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 11. From the Leagner before Hereford. — “On Wednesday last was sevensight this army marched towards Hereford, and on the next morning the foote were drawne upp before the towne. The Generall forthwith summoned it, and wee—by his advise—sent a letter to the Maior and corporacion. The trumpeter which was sent could not bee admitted into the towne but threw his message over the workes, and wee have just cause to beleve that our letter came not to the maior’s hands because wee have received noe answer thereunto. Since wee came hither wee have found the countrey very backward in assisting us. Though of what wee have assessed on the countrey for the maintenance of the foote, the provision brought in hath been small, wee cannot but say wee find a greate deale of chearefulnes and vigour amongst the souldiers, and doubt not but—upon the first command—they will bee ready to undertake any further enterprise against this place. Divers of our men have been slaine in this seidge already, but none of note save Lievetenant-Colonell Gordon of Colonell Stewart’s regiment who was killed with a greate shott, and is very much lamented in the army, hee leaveing behind him the memory of a very gallant man. The enimie hath yett made but one salley worth the taking notice of, in which they had two men slaine, and one taken prisoner, with noe losse on our side. Much of the shott which they shoote are slugges out of their muskettes, and crosse barr shott out of their ordnance. The biggest gunn that wee can find to bee in the towne shootes a 12th ball. Att present the towne is streightly begirt on all sides in most places within pistoll shott and wee doubt not but speedily to give you a good account of Hereford, till which time—had wee not doubted what construction our silence might have mett withall the parliament haveing comanded us to acquaint them from time to time with our proceedings—wee had a mind to have been silent. Wee are advertised that the king hath been lately in Glamorganshire and other partes of Wales, but cannot heare of any considerable force that hee is able to raise in those parts, most of some considerable counties in Wales being of the same humor with some of the western Clubmen, and now up for their owne defence. His Excellency receiving certain intelligence of the King’s being, marched to Wolverhampton last night with about 6,000 horse and dragoons, sent a party consisting of 8 regiments of horse, one of dragoons and 500 commanded musquetteers on horseback under the command of Lieutenant-General David Lesley and General-Major Middleton to attend his motion.” (See Lords’ Journals, vii. 538.) *Signed. SIR JOHN BROUNE to LORD BALMERINO.

1645, August 12. Rabbicol in Cumberland.—At my return from Newcastle to Cumberland, the Committee there did show me an express from the Committee at York, advising them not to assist the Scots with any entertainment, neither to contribute to any forces whatsoever except the Northern associated forces until such time as the Parliament had settled a garrison at Carlisle. . . . Be confident that I shall depart myself so that there shall be no just cause of complaint, although I well perceive and can evidence that the study of some here is to raise the country against me which hath been already attempted . . . Colonel Duglase hath also assured me that he will in no way trouble the country, until business be settled, seeing he can subsist a month. Within that time I hope your Lordship will think of the most convenient way for providing of that garrison, for the Parliament of Scotland doth think it incumbent to the committee with the army to take notice thereof but at this distance it cannot be expected that they will do anything therein. GEORGE [LORD] DIGBYE to [GEORGE LORD GORING.]

1645, August 12. Lichfield.—“Not only your humble servant, but the King himself, is hugely revived by your cheerful letter of the 4th of August, and with the hopeful propositions made by you to the Prince of Wales's Council for the sudden raising and maintaining a gallant and a well diseiplined army, of all which his Majesty extremely approves, as far as at this distance we here can judge of the constitution of those countries, but above all things that which joys us is to find you so resolved on your part to unite in the ways of the King's service heartily and friendly with the rest of his Ministers there, and may they be accursed, whoever they be, that shall not resolve to vie with you in compliance with one another. For what concerns our kind unkindnesses I shall say no more of them, for I am sure when we meet we shall both of us be forward to acknowledge our errors where really they have been. I send you here enclosed a copy of my letter to the Lord Culpeper, wherein you will find the state of the King's business in these parts and of his present resolutions.” [N. IV., 33.] Enclosed:

[LORD DIGBYE] to [LORD CULPEPER.]

Same date and place.—“Since you left us, we have . . . most luckily performed the second part of our wonderful retreat from Oxford the last year, the King's person with 3,000 horse and 300 musketeers having slipt by within four miles of the Scotch Quarters without ever awaking them so far as to be looked on by them in the rear, nor for ought we know did they so much as suspect the King's being gone till he was thus far. On Friday last, by which time we were at Bridgenorth, I am sure they knew not the king was removed out of Glamorganshire, which I do much attribute unto Sir William Fleming being near the Scotch army upon a secret negotiation with some of them daily pressing for an answer, which made them confident that the King had no intent of removing till he knew the effects of it. Whatever the cause was we are very luckily got thus far out of their reach free to pursue

362 : 338 : 95 : e7 : 79 : k4 : 14 : e7 : if they follow us not very quickly with their whole army—for we shall be strong enough by that time we are joined with Newark forces to beat their horse and dragoons—and if they do we shall be able to lead them such a dance, as to make them lose all the summer in following us, and the King at last, and worst, be able to retreat and pass his winter where he please, besides the dishonour to them of quitting the siege of Hereford, having lost great store of men before it. Thus, my Lord, you see what fair probabilities we have—as far as we seem to be chased from you—of looking back comfortably unto you ere this summer be over, if it please God that you in the West can but preserve yourselves from further mischiefs, of which we entertain here much more comfortable thoughts since I last heard from my Lord Goring, in a way of so much heartiness cheerfulness and resolution to draw with you kindly and industriously, whereunto his Majesty makes no question but you will give him all possible encouragement by all friendliness and compliance on your parts, without which good correspondence between you I am sure we must all be lost. God keep and prosper his Highness and bless and prosper your joint endeavours.”

1645, August 12.—“Whereas we are informed that the High Constable of Reading Hundred is lately imprisoned for sending forth tickets according to the general direction at the meeting on Hsley Downs, when you were both present, it is earnestly desired by the like general consent that you would be pleased to repair together with Mr. Hsley and Mr. Wilder to present the petition directed to the Honourable the Committees at Reading for his releasement. SIR HENRY VANE, JUNIOR, SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, THOMAS HATCHER, and ROBERT GOODWIN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 13. Newcastle.—“We have received this morning intelligence from the Committee of War at York, that the king is at Lichfield with a considerable strength of horse, and as Sir John Gell gives notice, intends for Newark, and therefore we humbly offer it once again to the consideration of the House, whether it may not be thought requisite to keep on those horse we mentioned in our last letters of the 11th . . . Besides we understand that there are very near 800 more that are scattered up and down in Yorkshire, and doubtless will draw to a head upon the first occasion, and no man knoweth for want of pay what party they may adhere unto." *Signed. 1645, August 13. From the Leaguer before Hereford.—Enclosing a paper delivered to them by the Committee of the Scotch Estates and their answer, and desiring that a copy of the treaty concerning the coming of the Scotch army, and of such orders as have been passed for their taking free quarter, and of the rules to be observed about the same, may be sent, and also enclosing a copy of the order by which Lieutenant-General David Leslie's party marched after the King. i. The COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND and the LORD GENERAL to the COMMISSIONERS OF PARLIAMENT.

1645, August 5.—“Whereas the Scotch army at the earnest desires of both Houses, and on their manifold promises that provisions of all sorts should be in readiness for them have advanced southwards from Nottingham and now are engaged in a siege before Hereford, the Committee of Estates . . . and the Lord General have thought it incumbent on them to acquaint the Commissioners . . . that during the whole time of their march they have been wrestling with extreme penury and want of victual for the soldiers. That they have had little or no assistance from the country of teams, which has been a great impediment to the march. That ever since the army's engagement before Hereford and the . . . Commissioners coming to reside with them, notwithstanding all the warrants issued for bringing in provisions the army's wants are a great deal more pressing than formerly, for in these eight days past there has not above one half day's provision been brought them, and the service they are now engaged in necessarily requires their constant attendance in Leaguer, so as they cannot go abroad to provide for themselves. And therefore . . . to desire that the said Commissioners . . . would condescend particularly what provisions of victual and ammunition the army may for this present service expect and depend upon, how much of the 200*l. per diem* promised . . . is in readiness and when to be received, what number of teams and what assistance from the country people for making of the works they will undertake to afford.” Signed “John Prymerose.”

ii. The ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS' ANSWER.

1645, August 8.—“Whatsoever failing of payments or provisions have beenc to the Scottish army now in Eng and have not proceeded from any want of affection or intention in the parliament to make good their engagements but from the greate straights they are in for want of money.

Att a consultation had with the Committee of Estates of Scotland and his Excellency at Micheldeane, 29th July last, the commissioners appointed by the Parliament of England to reside in the Scottish army agreed to lay seige to Hereford, being by them informed that by any intelligence they could gaine, the enemy had not a visible body to be pursued, but were devided into severall parties, which were adjudged inexpedient to be further followed with the whole army into soe mountainous a country, where a small part might miscarry and a greater could not with safety be spared from the army, nor have subsistence there.

If any wants of provision have happened to the army before the commissioners came to reside there, they can give noe accompt thereof, but are confident that those persons who were employed by the Parliament for accommodating the army did theire utmost endeavours to effect the same and to advance the publicke service.

The army comming before Hereford last of July, the commissioners of Parliament caused their warrants upon the place to be instantly issued forth, not onely to the high constables of all the Hundreds in the county of Hereford, but also to the committees of the adjacent counties for the bringing in of 200*l. per diem* in money and provisions, much fruite whereof could not be expected in fower dayes' time, consideration being had of the malignancy of the country, and their distraction upon the approach of this army, many high constables and petty constables absenting themselves and divers who appeared were fearefull and backward to exeute the warrants which much retarded the service.

The horse also taking free quarter in those parts, out of which the dayly provision was to be brought for the foote, not onely before the army sate downe at Hereford, but since, plundering of horses, taking away goodes and cattell of all kindes and some officers taking upon them to send forth warrants for money and provisions of all sorts hath disabled many from providing and bringing in proportionable supplies.

By all which the raising of provisions for the army is very much obstructed, and some provisions raised and upon the way towards the commissary have beene intercepted, and violently taken away by the souldiers.

And as for the proportions which are assessed upon Monmoth, Radnour and other counties, together with the remote parts of this county of Hereford, they cannot be had without a coercive power to obtaine them.

The commissioners are resolved to continue their best endeavours to cause 200*l. per diem* in moneys and provisions to be furnished for the infantry of the army, together with other necessaryes, and beleve they shall effect the same, the obstructions above mentioned being removed.

And they concurre with the Committee of Estates of Scotland and his Excellency, the Lord General, that the true causes of the neglect of publique service—if any shall happen—may be knowne to the world for the exoneration of those who are engaged in it." COLONEL THOMAS MORGAN TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1645, August 14 (?). Gloucester.]—It is well known to some members and also to a great part of this county what pains and travail I have taken since my coming here "in labouring to draw the distracted garrisons and discontented souldiers into any defensive posture, and indeede the onely means of our preservation hetherto . . . hath beene in regard the enemy hath not had of late any breathing time to fall upon us before the last Lord's Day, at which time he having some intelligence of our weakness in horss, their beeing only two or three broken troops in all the county, came out from Bristol—Prince Rupert in parson—who joyning with the men of Barteley maid up there number fourteen or fifteen hundreth horss and foote which violently and sudanly stormed a guard of ours two miles from Barteley to keepe in that castle, put twenty of them to the sword in could blood, tooke the captain his ensigne with seven common souldiers prisonours, bournt the house and some other neare unto it, plundred and rained up and down that part of the cuntrey, but upon Monday early I drew down all the foote I could, who joyning with the broken troopes faced and skirmished with them and tooke one lieutenant of horss to the Prince, slaying as maney of theirs, and withall sent speedy mesingers to Bath to intercept them—if possibly the could—in their retreat but they not staying longe nor adventuring to press further into the cuntrey in regard I had stopped the narrow passages and lyned the hedges with musquetteers although they were farr stronger than wee espetially in horss yet they drew of for that time, but the like hazard we shall dayly be subject unto hereafter to the greate dainger of the county, if wee have not a considerable body of horss to oppose against them. I have since my coming hither daily expected Collonel Cooke his coming with his regiment of horss, but I finde no certanty in it, moreover the burthen of the Scotch army quartering for a time in this county upon free billet hath much impoverished a greate part of it, and our sending them three of our greatest peeces of ordnance, fifty barells of poudour, twenty whereof wee were enforced to fech from Malmesbury—it beeing for the publike good—with a proportionabl quantity of balle and match with teames and carriages for to tranceporte them to the leager neare Heriford, besides keepinge their sicke men neare our garison, hath not a litle charged and pressed the county to crie out for suckour and support if they knew how to be remedid and as though these prisniers were not sufficient to undowe and ruen a county wee are charged by the comitioners residing about Heriford with 20*l. per diem* towards their maintenance notwithstanding a great part of the county be under the power of the enemy. I dare not be too troublesome else I could say much to express the deplorable condition and bleedeing estate of this county. . . . Postscript.—Upon the closing of this letter I had news that the forces of Bath and those parts upon my advertisement fell upon the Prince in his retreat. What defeat they have given him I am not yet informed, but divers of them are come wounded to Bart-cley and some my party met with and gave them Scotch quarter.” (See Commons’ Journals, iv. 248.) *Signed. THE SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

SIR JOHN GELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 15. Derby.—“I have given an aecompte . . . of the Kinges motion from Bridgenorth unto Ashburne in our countye, and this last night his head quarter was at Chatsworth. I doe perceave that his intent is to goe into the remotest partes northward of this kingdome, by some letters that were found in some of the prysoners’ pockettes that wee have taken. His strength is now most certeynly two thousand fightinge men, and of those, there is one hundred and twenty foot, two hundred dragoones. The rest, for the most parte, both ill armed and ill horsed. And truly, if upon my summons by request and upon my intelligence given unto Yorke, Collonell Rosciter, Nottingham, and Leicester with our owne have pleased to have joyned, I doubt not but to have rendred his Majestie unto his parliament. And yet if upon more serious thoughts, these counties will followe, there is little doubt to be made of takeinge his forces. Our horse, with parte of Stafford’s are now joyned, and doe followe in the reare, but a forlorne of one hundred of ours were more valient then discreet, they charged five hundred of the enemies, tooke some sixteene prisoners, whereof Captain Blake, formerly a majour of foot, was one. Twentye more were slayne of the enemyes, wee had one slayne and ten more taken. Soe wee sent a trumpett for exchange which did take effect. The kinge was pleased to send for my trumpett, and did enquire what forces did follow him. The kinge did seeme to beleeeve him and desired to knowe what they were, the trumpett answered a great strength of the Scottes horse. Now I have some hopes that Collonell Rosciter will joyne. . . . Postscript.—Since I writt this letter I receaved intelligence from Lienetenant-General Leasely whoe kept his Randevouz at Sturbridge in Staffordshire the 14th of this instant August and is marching as fast as hee can after the kinge.” (See Commons’ Journals, iv. 245.) *Signed. Several YORKSHIRE GENTLEMEN to [FERDINANDO LORD FAIRFAX].

[1645, August 15th.]—Colonel-General Poynts.—The gentlemen, finding the election of officers was carried by partiality, crave you to move the House for an order empowering me to grant Commissions in future. Mr. Pierrepont.—Unless the Parliament by themselves or the Committee of both kingdoms appoint the officers to be continued in the New Model, and take some course for employing others as well deserving as any that may be retained we shall here run headlong to destruction. The most part of the horse we had drawn to Doncaster to oppose the enemy's coming into this county in a mutinous way left their guards there, and came towards York, giving out they would plunder the city and cut the throats of the Committee. Mr. Chaloner.—Here has been a week of much distraction, the officers not elected extremely discontented to be set by without pay, which was represented to us by some of them by way of remonstrance, which I suppose you have seen from Captain Harrison, who was a remonstrant himself. Colonel Overton likewise complained of an undue election by a combination of kindred—as he expressed it—in that Committee of the East Riding of their Foot Colonel. Yesterday morning came a letter from our Colonel-General of the mutinying of the whole army. They would be at no command of officers, they had set upon himself a guard of firelocks, nothing less than one month's pay would content them. Mr. Farrer.—Our army is in great distraction, and yesterday at Doncaster mutinied. The Dragoons began, and the Commander-in-Chief called for all the horse, intending to force them to obedience. But they joined the Dragoons and with a general consent took him into custody, and kept him in a chamber with many insolent speeches, that if he provide them not a month's pay by Saturday night they will all go to York, and plunder it, and all the Committees there, and to day sent some of the discreetest commanders to intimate so much to the Committees. It is generally suspected that some of our Commanders have occasioned this mutiny. Mr. Stockdale.—This unhappy distemper prevents us of the hope we had to be masters of these three Castles in a few days. The sieges are like to be deserted, and if the king's and the Newark forces come on they will be presently masters of the field in this county. Mr. Thorp.—Touching the election of officers and the reduction. Colonel-General Poynts.—On coming hither I tendered the horse 10s. a piece, which the Committee sent them, which they utterly rejected and fell into a general mutiny, horse, foot, and dragoons, swearing they would plunder York and hang up the Committee, and because I had promised them a month's pay set a guard on my quarters, requiring security for it of me, but with much ado I pacified them till I should intimate their desires to the Committee. Your Honour may imagine what encouragement I receive in this employment, and can expect no change till the Army is satisfied. Mr. Hatter.—Worse than this the foot, who have been constantly paid weekly, on the mutiny of the horse, are mostly run away, some whole companies marching none knows whither with their colours flying. The enemy cannot but know of it, and will certainly shortly take advantage of it, and then the North is in great danger to be lost. WALTER STRICKLAND to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 16–26. Lenerdin in Friesland.—Having communicated the Parliament's declaration to the assemblies of Guelderland, Holland, and Zealand and found that it much satisfied all who considered it, I went to Utrecht where the States were not assembled, and the Deputies who act when they are not assembled alleged they had no power to hear what my audience imported, but desired me to return where the States were sitting. I then came here where the States were not assembled, which usually happens only once a year in February, but the Deputies who act in their absence, gave me a fair and courteous audience and received the Declaration with thankfulness, as appears by the enclosed answer, not differing much from that of Guelderland. I was here eight days before the Deputies despatched me, all which time I spent in giving such impressions as the Opening the King's Cabinet furnished me with, which before my coming from the Hague I had got prepared for them in a language they understand. I am now going into Overysseel and then to Groningen. I express my gratitude to the Parliament for their great favours to me. Seal. [N. IV., 39.]

PETER TEMPLE, Sheriff, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 16. Leicester.—Sir Thomas Fairfax hath commanded a garrison of 1,000 foot and 500 horse to be maintained here. This town and county are altogether unable to pay such a force, nor are there horses left in this county nor money to provide them. Your order of 1,500*l.* to buy horse and arms out of Delinquents' estates comes too late for our present exceeding great wants. We earnestly entreat that some course may be taken for the payment of these out of the public, and also that 250 horse with saddles, bridles, and pistols be appointed for us, and also 100 carbines. This garrison securing all trade betwixt the North and South of England as some help towards the maintenance thereof we ask for an order to receive the King's and Queen's revenues, the excise money and the sequestrations, and all the uncollected moneys and arrears in this county belonging to the public, and also for an order to compound with those who appeared here in arms at the King's taking of the town, which caused great number of the common people to follow them, and had not Sir Thomas Fairfax put a sudden stop to those beginnings they had drawn the whole county from the Parliament. The garrison of Newark is so strong that we are not able to subsist by it without your help. We humbly entreat that whatever is thought fit may be done speedily, and lastly that a power be given us and the Governor to call a council and exercise Martial Law. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 257.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 40.]

RICHARD HATTER to [FERDINANDO] LORD FAIRFAX.

1645, August 17. York.—“This morning Colonel Poynts wrote unto the Committee here . . . that he had received intelligence that the King quartered on the 15th . . . at Staley House belonging to Mr. Fretchvile, Governor of Welbeck, six miles from Sheffield, the number of his forces 3,000 besides the Newark 1,500 horse and 500 dragoons joined with him the 16th in the morning. It is supposed they intend for Halifax and so Northward. The chief commanders with him are Sir Thomas Glemham and Sir Marmaduke Langdale. Our forces are drawn from Sandall, Skipton, and Bolton. The horse quarters are along the South side of this river towards Turn Bridge and the foot at Brotherton and other towns on the North side. We are forced to decline an engagement of our forces, not daring to trust them alone at this time, in regard—besides they are fewer in number than the enemy—the great discontent they are in by the late reduction and for want of pay. . . . There is great necessity that the Parliament should take notice of the officers here, who are to be cashiered. If some order come not down for their encouragement there is very great fears that both officer and soldier will forsake the field, and that very shortly . . . Colonel Rossetter is in the Isle of Axholme coming towards us, but we are much troubled, for the enemy is interposed between Nottingham, Derby, and Stafford forces and us, whereby we cannot for the present join together, and we never had yet any assistance from the three North counties, and but a very few from Westmoreland and Lancashire. The cloud is very black; I pray God, if it be His will, it may blow over.”

Seal. [N. IV., 42.]

THOMAS CHALONER and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 17. York.—“We have lately represented . . . the dangerous constitution of this army as now it stands betwixt the condition of those reduced and the number elected to stand in this county, both parties being full of discontents for want of the arrears of pay, and for that cause they do join altogether in mutual mutinies against their commanders, whereof the enemies making advantage of the opportunity have drawn their forces to the borders of this country, and, as we understand, are quartered about the same parts where our forces lately quartered against Welbeck and Newark, and our men drawn off from thence and from all the sieges in this County are now retiring towards York, unless they find themselves able to make good some pass against the enemies’ forces. But the discontents of our soldiers having been declared in so high a manner are such as we can have no assurance of their uniting and resolute opposition of the enemy, unless we were furnished with moneys to give them satisfaction according to their demands, and that being wanting we have no other way to prevent the universal ruin and loss of this country but by our humble address to the House to desire the speedy supply of those moneys formerly designed to us towards the satisfaction of the vast arrears of the commanders and soldiers.” . . . We further request that “two or three thousand horse and dragoons at least may be despatched from the Southern parts to follow the rear of the enemy’s army to remorate their attempts in these parts, until the Parliament’s forces can be drawn into a body and be able to give them a field. . . .” Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 43.]

SIR GEORGE GRESLEY and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 18. Derby.—“How miserably this county hath been afflicted by the enemy is well known to all men, Newcastle’s army, the Queen’s, Prince Rupert’s, Goring’s and others having made prize of what they could get from our poor neighbours. The enemies have formerly had several garrisons in this county all kept by them for no other use but to oppress us. Though these be now recovered yet it was done by force, and not without great charge to the whole country. Ashby, Tutbury, Newark—and Welbeck of late—, all enemies’ garrisons, have power and means still to compel contributions from us and ruin those that deny them. The army of our brethren of Scotland was for a time very chargeable to this county which since hath been a passage for other forces of our friends, who have all lived upon free quarter and supplied themselves with such horses as came in their way. The King's army is now amongst us; they have passed through and made spoil of a great part of this shire. Some of the Parliament party are already come to our help, and more we daily expect, all which will have free quarter at least, and for those few horses that are left their owners have little hope to keep them long." We ask the House to grant us the excise of this town and county for the present maintenance of our own soldiers.

Postscript.—"Just now our soldiers are in mutiny, and 200 of them gone away with their arms." Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 44.]

JOHN HOBARTE and TRISTRAM DYMOND to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 19. Wisbech.—We received an order of Parliament for raising within the county of Cambridge and Isle of Ely 32 Harquebushiers to be employed about Grantham, and an ordinance of July 18th for horses more within the said county and Isle. We sent out our warrants forthwith for levying the necessary money, but having only three days allowed us we advanced the money, amounting to 200*l.*, expecting to receive it again on our warrants. But the order not mentioning any distress to be taken the greater part of the inhabitants refuse to pay their proportions, wherefore, unless the House gives us power to distrain, it is more than probable we shall lose the greatest part of that money. There are two divisions in our Isle, North and South, and most of the Committee living in the South, the whole business and burden of the North lies upon us. We therefore desire the House to appoint some Committeemen for the Isle living in and about Wisbech. Signed. [N. IV., 45.]

Captain WILLIAM BATTEN to [WILLIAM LENTHALL].

1645, August 19. From aboard the St. Andrew, in Plymouth Sound.—Being sent by the Committee for the Admiralty and Cinque Ports to Milford Haven to displace Captain Swanley, and settle Captain Molton in his place, on account of some information given the Committee against him . . . he stands much on his justification, which being clear and the information found false, I am confident the House will vindicate him for the good service he has done. He was very obedient to the order, and during my stay there very forward in advancing the public good, and so had been, by report of the well affected, during his whole employment. "I arrived there the 29th July, which day the Maior-Generall had taken the feild, with about eight hundred foot and horse, for the preservation of there corne, dayly threatned by the enemy to be fired, who lay neere Harfordwest and duple our number drew out to give them battle. The Maior-generall hearing of my arrivall, sent unto me for my assistance wheruppon I sent upp the Warwick friggot with two hundred seamen to land within two myles of our army, the one halfe of them myne owne men. The enemy not knowing of the seamen's landing, drew out to give us battle, wherein it pleased our good God to give us the day by routing there whole army, takeing and killing neere as many of them as our army consisted of; fower gunns, fower barrells of powder, all there carriages and neere one thousand armes, with the losse of but one man on our parte—but many wounded—. This was performed in the compass of one hower, by two troops of horse, and one hundred foot which had the forlorne hope; our mayne body having not tyme to come upp. About one hundred and twenty of the enimies' forces fled into the Castle of Harford, which wee begirt three daies and a demy cannon sent upp from the Lyon for battery but did no execucion, the walls being so extreame thick; which Captain Thomas perceaving tould the Mayior-Generall if he would give the seamen the plunder they would undertake to storne it—which was promised, but not performed—who presently made a great fire at the gate, scaled the walles in divers places, and so gott posession of that towne and castle, and at my coming away from thence, our forces were sate downe before Cary Castle, which was the 12th instant, and doubt not if the businis be well followed but you shall have a good accompt of all the small garrisons thereaboutes very shortly.

The prisoners being in number seven hundred were sent downe to me to secure them amongst the shippes, which I did accordingly, in which tyme I received letters from the Lord Inchequeene of the streightned condicion of Youhall—a coppie whereof goeth hereinclosed.—I have sent him four hundred and forty of the prisoners lately taken who have all taken the Covenant and expresse great forwardnes to serve against the Irish. I suppose they arrived the 13th instant. All the officers—two excepted—refused the Covenant, who are still in durance—so that I sent no officers with them.—I have sent him likewise out of myne owne shipp 8,000*li.* of bisket and ten barrells of powder, and out of the amunicion for Sir John Prise three hundred musketts onely, ten barrells of match, with bullett answerable and thirty barrells of powder out of the garrisons.

At my being at Milford, I received a letter from Sir Thomas Fairefax to let me know he had left six hundred souldiers about Bridgewater for Pembroakshire and desired shipping to be sent for them. Whereuppon I sent one shipp and three small barkques, but were not returned at my coming from thence.

The news at my coming away was that the King was in Cardife the 8th of the moneth, who was demaunded by twenty thousand Clubmen that are rissen, as they pretend to carry him to the parliament. There are many of good quallity amongst them, and well armed.

The king got away with a small party of horse to Ragland Castle. It is reported that the king endeavored to put the towne of Cardife into Papasts' hands to secure, which would not be indured, but on the contrary, the Welsh plundered them sufficiently. Those that escaped have sent there goods to Bristow.

The Clubmen likewise demaunded Gerrard and row to cutt him in peeces for firing the corne and plundering the county of Penbrooke. That Sir Jacob Ashley is made Mayior-generall of South Walies in place of Gerrard, I saw in a letter under his owne hand.

That the seamen being forty in number prisoners at Cardife and Newport were released by the king without exchange, and some of them [were] at Milfouard Haven before my coming from thence.

At my retourne from Milford I espied a saile to the seaboard of the Iland of Lundee. I sent Captain Thomas after her, who brought her in unto me, whom I found to be a Frenchman laden with salt, etc., and bound for Wexfouard. I shall take care to send her upp speedily." Signed. [N. IV., 46.]

1645, August 22. Stafford.—Stating the inconvenience caused by the excessive number of officers which causes a want of pay, and that want discontent amongst them which hath an influence upon the soldiers and causeth daily irregularities. Six months ago. . . . we joined with the county in a petition to that Committee (of both kingdoms) that we might have power to reduce all our horse and foot—which at that time were about 700 and under six colonels—unto two regiments only one of horse another of foot. This petition we hear hath been brought into the House, but . . . could not be taken into consideration unto this day, so that our forces remain all in many broken troops and companies to the discontent of the country and disadvantage of the public service. We therefore humbly desire power to reduce all our horse and foot into two regiments as aforesaid. Signed. Scal. [N. IV., 49.]

1645, August 25.—“Your horse and 3 or 4,000 of ours are in pursuit of the King. If they continue joined we doubt not but that, with God's assistance, they may within a few days give such an account of their design as may be much for the advantage of both kingdoms. If yours and ours should sever, the King who hath already taken Huntingdon may endanger the Association and be able quickly to go again Northward. The House of Commons thought it necessary to acquaint you herewith and leave it to your serious consideration.” (See Commons' Journals, iv. 253.) Draft. [N. XII., 124.]

Colonel JOHN FIENNES to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

1645, August 25.—“I endeavoured to keep my troops together being old soldiers and fittest for field service till the Committees of those counties where they quartered caused the country to rise upon them, and gave orders to the Governors of garrisons and captains of troops under their pay to fall upon them as enemies for no reason but because they took free quarter, a very harsh reward for soldiers that have done the State so good service as your Lordships know they have done. Though my officers did not at all fear what these men durst do against them, but could in despite of them and did keep their quarters till they received orders from me to remove, yet it was not fit for me to oblige them by orders . . . either to fight the Parliament's friends, or expose themselves to affronts and indignities not standing with the honour of soldiers to endure.” I therefore resigned the command of the regiment and gave discharges to the officers of the several troops and now ask for a pass and discharge for myself. Lieutenant-General DAVID LESLIE to the SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS in London.

1645, August [26 misdated 22], Nottingham. (The first part is to the same effect as his letter of the same date to the Committee of both kingdoms. It proceeds thus:) "I had resolved to have taken but half my party and to have left Major-General Middleton with the rest to join with Colonel-General Poyntz to follow the King, but neither officer nor soldier was willing to stay, the soldiers professing openly they would all for their country, so considering their unwillingness to stay, and that the half of my party was not sufficient without a conjunction of forces with me in Scotland to do the work without hazard, I resolved to go with all . . . I know some will censure me for this action, but, if they look on the business seriously I am confident it will be thought good service done to England, for if Montrose continue a while in Scotland without oppositions he would or long change the business in England, for though particular counties suffer for a time, if the public suffer not in general, that is not much. There be few horses left with our foot near Hereford. It were good for General Poinze and Colonel Rosseter with other county forces had order to attend the King's motions, and chiefly to interpose betwixt him and our army, yet I am confident the King cannot much trouble them. I entreat you to represent this to the Committee of both Kingdoms. . . ." Copy. [N. XII., 118.] Enclosed :

The EARL OF LOUDOUN to [Generals LESLIE and MIDDLETON].

1645, August 22. Berwick.—The Rebels "are now masters of the field running over and destroying the country, and will in all appearance prevail to do what they will, till God enable us to have an army in the field to oppose them, which if not speedily done—besides the ruin of this poor Kingdom—they will grow to such strength by Malignants, . . . and by pressing recruits in the country as may make a strong army, and invite the King to come . . . hither, or they to march to him, and so increase the troubles and wars in both kingdoms. For preventing whereof and for preservation of Religion, liberties and this kingdom from destruction it is conceived there is no meane so . . . effectual, as the speedy return of our army from England, whom God has made so useful there, to march with all haste, for employing their whole strength and endeavours for opposing and suppressing these bloody Rebels, and recovery of their native kingdom. . . . For which end I or some other person of trust will be sent to you after our meeting tomorrow at Duns for advising what can be done in the meantime till the army comes. But till . . . we have some body of an army on foot, to which the country's forces may resort, there will be no means of resistance made to the enemy. And therefore it is most earnestly desired that one or both of you may march hither with as great a strength of your cavalry as may be spared, securing the foot till the whole army come, with whom such forces shall be joined as can be raised in the country. The distress and danger of this kingdom, and the cause which we are sworn to maintain and your affection for both are so strong arguments for this public duty, as I trust will set you on present action to march hither." . . . Copy. [N. JOHN LOWRY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 27. Cambridge.—“The king beat our forces at Huntingdon, and took Major Gibbs and some 60 prisoners being all common soldiers, which are sent to Cambridge in exchange of some of our prisoners, and not above 5 killed in the fight. We have had strong alarms within 4 miles of our town. We stood upon our guard and summoned all the counties to come in, which accordingly came in to our assistance—only Essex—not a man of which came in notwithstanding letters sent unto them divers times of our dangers. The last answer I had from them was that our town and castle was taken, and so thought not fit to come. I have been drawing all our forces these three nights into the fields, taking no posts, which I believe standing upon our guard both in town and field hath hindered the king of his design . . . For the present our fears are somewhat blown over. The king marched from Huntingdon yesterday unto St. Eoates (? St. Neots) and this morning we hear that he is at Bedford, and they are very much affrighted as appears by some prisoners we have taken. We hear that Colonel Rosseter with some Scots is come to Stilton, which is about 35 miles from us, and we have sent six troops of our horse in the pursuit of the king this morning . . . Postscript.—Since the sealing of my letter our six troops of horse are retreated where they were, ten miles from us, and they report that the enemy was there with a strong party. But how true I know not, which hath put us into new fears, yet however are resolved to stand to it for the safeguard of the town.” (See Commons' Journals, iv. 257.) Seal. [N. IV., 57.]

EDWARD NEWMAN, Sheriff, and others to JOHN CREWE.

1645, August 28, 4 past noon. Northampton.—We enclose a letter from the Governor of Leicester, which we thought good to speed, “because Colonel Thorney the last night coming by us told us the Yorkshire horse were gone back, but it appears by this they are marching forward. We shall not take upon us to advise, but we fear the Scotch horse being gone to Scotland the army before Hereford may be in want of them. The king marched yesterday from Woburn towards Oxford as is conceived. Our horse, Coventry and Newport being joined, pursued his force through Brickhill. We hear not from them since, only it is said they have taken many of his rear” . . . (See Commons' Journals, iv. 257.) Signed. [N. IV., 59.]

Instances of the Discipline of other Churches given by the ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES.

1645, August 28.—Wherein there is not a distinct and full enumeration of all the offences for which the Eldership may keep a person from that Sacrament. The instances are taken from the Bohemian Brethren, and the Church of Geneva, the French Church at Frankfort, the Dutch Churches in England, the Reformed Churches of Nassau, and the Church of Scotland. Citations are also given from Origen, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and Chrysostom to prove that such was the practice of the early Church. Additional advice is given as to the method in which unworthy persons are to be excluded. [N. XXII., 25.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to the COMMITTEE at NANTWICH.

1645, August 28.—The House thought it not convenient for the present to make any resolve touching the assistance you desire for reducing Chester; but have deferred it till September 8th, hoping our affairs before then may be in a more certain condition with relation to the forces now with the King, that give alarms to so many parts of this kingdom and by their speedy motions make all such undertakings hazardous. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 254.) Draft. [N. XII., 126.]

1645, August 29. Derby House.—Enclosing a letter from the Scotch army, and stating that of the 200*l.* per diem assessed by the Commissioners of Parliament on the several counties for the maintenance of the infantry there is not one penny yet come in, and entreating earnestly that the month's pay voted to that necessitous army be speedily and effectually brought in, and that the ordinance upon the contract made with Mr. Davis may be speedily passed. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 60.]

Major-General EDWARD MASSIE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, August 30. Bridgwater.—I wrote from Lyme on the 23rd, informing you of our present condition and the state of these parts, and desiring a supply and speedy assistance. I enclose a copy of General Goring's intercepted letter. "The Prince upon Thursday last, the 28th . . . came into Exeter, and the Cornish with him. Near Broad Clyst was that day a rendezvous held, where was 6 field pieces, 80 carriages and about 9,000 horse and foot, those come out of Cornwall not come up to him at that time. Their discourse tends to march eastward, supposing they shall have a good addition of strength out of Dorset and the east parts of Somerset amongst the Club[men]. I marvel not at it, and had much desired to have prevented it, yet however my counsels have been as much rejected in that as not desired in other things in these parts, which have concerned these parts, the kingdom and myself in the service intrusted, yet notwithstanding have I not failed in my duty towards the Parliament, nor will I by God's mercy ever do." Postscript.—Commending the case of Major Backhouse's widow. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 261.) Signature torn off. Seal. Enclosed :

GEORGE [LORD] GORING to SIR EDWARD NICHOLAS at Oxford.

1645, August 25. Exeter . . .—"This is only to let you know that the respite which the Rebels have given us hath advanced very much our recruits in these parts, for there is great hopes that we shall have a body of 10 or 1,200 men together within eight days. I believe you have more certain notice of the enemies' motions than we have. We conceive Fairfax is ready to engage before Bristol, and that we shall be able to make a very good attempt for the relieving of it within three weeks" . . . Copy. [N. IV., 62.]

[WILLIAM LENTHALL] to Colonel-General POINTS.

Colonel WILLIAM PUREFOY, HENRY HERBERT, and HUMPHREY
SALWEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 3. Maysmore, near Gloucester.—“In our last of 31 August we gave you an account of our doubtful condition concerning Hereford Yesterday morning the army rose from before Hereford and were upon their march to Fownchope four miles thence in the road towards Gloucester. That may seem strange to you as well as those parts of the kingdom. The grounds—as far as . . . we apprehend—were these. The Commissioners of Scotland have long pressed a necessity—to save their own kingdom—for this army's removal Northwards to whose importunities we agreed so far as to make preparation for a march, it being also . . . recommended to the General in the meantime to use his best endeavour to reduce the town, whereto he engaged himself accordingly, and proposed in case it should be taken, we would provide how to keep it, that the Army might not be enforced to stay Whereupon we . . . wrote letters to the adjacent garrisons for a supply of men, wherein we were confident of prevailing. But on Monday last his Excellency and the Commissioners of Scotland informed us of the King's coming to Worcester with 4,000 horse and dragoons They affirmed themselves ready and resolved for storm next day had not this intervened. What posture to be in to meet the King was proposed We urged whether an attempt by storm might not be made before the King could annoy them being then 20 long miles off. To which the General and commanders delivered their opinion that it was most dangerous and not to be attempted, because the batteries could not be finished before 2 o'clock by which time the King might be upon them. We then proposed whether the siege might not continue and yet draw out such a party of horse and foot as might encounter the King's forces, our information being that their horse were weary and not of that number as reported. To which the General and commanders declared it could not possibly be done, they had so few horse and the rather because—they said—that Major-General Middleton was gone with Lieutenant-General Leslie into Scotland with all their horse that followed the King. This being solely a military point we thought it not fit to contest with men of that experience in martial affairs, and lest by persisting for action here contrary to their judgments we should undergo the censure of what prejudice might befall this army we . . . submitted to those votes . . . here enclosed We cannot but inform you of the sad and most miserable condition of these parts It much grieves us to see our friends . . . now ruined and all lost to the fury of a merciless enemy. If some speedy care be not taken for prevention, the King in all probability will again recruit himself hence to a great strength. What further is intended to be done by this army and which way they will march we shall with all speed acquaint you.” (See Commons' Journals, iv. 266.) Copy. [N. XII., 131.] Enclosed:

HUMPHREY MACKWORTH and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 3. Salop.—“Since our late success before Lilshall and Dudley . . . it hath pleased God to give us a further evidence of his goodness by delivering into our hands 140 of the enemies' forces belonging unto Ludlow, who amongst others to the number of 300 were sent under the command of Colonel Davelier towards Bishop's Castle to plunder the country and to apprehend all such as stood affected to the Parliament. After some hurt done our forces consisting of 80 horse and 80 foot under the command of Major Fenwick, which quartered in Bishop's Castle for securing that town and parts adjacent, drew forth, and within a mile of that place with the assistance of some countrymen which were got into a body charged the enemy. Our forlorn retreated disorderly, but our horse did second them so gallantly that after a hot charge they wholly routed the enemy, took 120 horse, all their foot and arms, slew many, brought off all the prisoners to the number above specified, whereof almost 20 were Commission officers, and we are credibly informed that there came not above 40 back into Ludlow besides those which were brought wounded in carts.” We desire that a sheriff be nominated for this county. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 65.]

LORD BALMERINO, ARCHIBALD JHONSTON, and CHARLES ERSKINE to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 3. Worcester House.— . . “Having certain information that the King's forces are marched towards Hereford, that Prince Maurice from Worcester and Sir Jacob Ashley from Wales are making all the preparation they can for their assistance whereby the Scottish army now in the absence of their horse—and those under command of Colonel-General Poyntz being few and at a great distance—may be brought into great distress, we do earnestly desire that you would be pleased to move the House to give order to Sir Thomas Fairfax for sending some forces for their relief and assistance.” (See Commons' Journals, iv. 263.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 66.]

The ELECTOR PALATINE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 5.—“How sensible I am of your busines and how loath to importune the House would sufficiently appeare, if the state of that which they have soe long agoe appointed for my supply were by those gentlemen unto whose care it was referred made knowne unto them. Wherefore I desire that you would put the House in mind to call for it, being myselfe unwilling to speake the language of those necessities which overburden your most affectionate friend." Signed "Charles." COURT MARTIAL upon Lieutenant BRIDALL alias BRYDLE.

1645, September 5. Oxford.—Report, sentencing him to be shot for carrying himself tumultuously among the soldiers and disobedience to his superiors. (He was an officer in the Lord Keeper's regiment, and alleged he was to obey no orders but those that came through the Lord Keeper.) [N. XIV., 78.]

Colonel WILLIAM PUREFOY, HENRY HERBERT, and HUMPHREY SALWEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 5.—"In our last of the 3rd . . . we acquainted you with the rising of the Scots' army from before Hereford upon information of the King's approach to Worcester. . . . The General and whole army quartered last night at Highnam, and are now marching through Gloucester to Cheltenham 6 miles hence in the way to Warwick. We cannot certainly let you know what is intended, but we apprehend by former expressions of the General and Commissioners of Scotland a resolution to relieve their own distressed country and therefore believe them unwilling to engage their army in this kingdom, frequently urging an impossibility for them to recruit themselves, should they receive a loss. To whose importunities we so far consented as that necessaries should be provided for their march. But to the place where, the time when, or which way hath not yet been in proposition. We conceive it too high a point for us to decide and therefore most earnestly desire some speedy directions from the Parliament. . . . Should the army hold their march towards Scotland we shall humbly propose whether our employment be not at an end, not knowing wherein we may be further serviceable to you by our residing here. Solely to make provisions for the army we suppose you will not expect from us; the Committees in the several counties . . . may be appointed for that purpose." Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 68.]

Colonel CHARLES D'OILIE and others to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

1645, September 5. Newport Pagnell.—Stating that the fifty prisoners lately taken with those they had before fill the prisons so full as to be dangerous to the garrison, and that, the allotted counties not paying their contributions, they have no money for their soldiers or for their prisoners' maintenance, and therefore desiring that the prisoners might be disposed of elsewhere and the counties made to pay. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 68*b*; omitted in Index.]

The EARL OF WARWICK to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 5. Leeze.—"Upon this alarm of the enemies coming to Huntingdon I drew up all the forces of Essex being 6,000 foot and 900 horse and 500 dragoons towards Cambridge as also 4,000 foot and 500 horse came out of Suffolk for the guard of Cambridge and the Isle of Ely. And upon the retreat of the enemy I dismissed them according to the order of the Committee of both Kingdoms, and sent 800 good horse of the Association and the 400 horse of Major Gibb's Regiment, as I was commanded by the House of Commons, to keep in the Newarkers from infesting the Association during the absence of Colonel Rossiter and his troops. I have caused the Counties to send a fortnight's pay with them, lest for want of pay they should take occasion to disband. The 400 under Major Gibb there is a course taken by ordinance to pay them, but for the 800 horse of the Association under Major Haynes they rely upon the promise of the House of Commons for their pay. I pray, Sir, move the House to take present order in it. 3,000*l.* per month will pay them." . . . (See Commons' Journals, iv. 265.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 69.]

1645, September 6. Worcester House.—Desiring that some portion of their arrears might be paid to divers officers of the Scotch nation who had been employed here in the service of the Parliament, and were now exceedingly desirous in the great distractions of their native country to repair thither. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 70.]

THE COMMITTEE FOR PETITIONS.

1645, September 6.—Resolutions on Bradshaw's Petition. (Printed in Commons' Journals, iv. 278.) [N. XIV., 79.]

THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS AT OXFORD.

1645, September 8.—Declaration that the Lord Dover's and the Lord Keeper's regiments were to do duty only in case of siege or other emergency, were not to be drawn out of Oxford except on sallies during the siege and were to be under officers of their own, by whom if necessary they were to be punished. That these regiments, consisting of scholars, gentlemen, and their servants conceive that, by a late sentence by a court martial on an officer of theirs, they may be thought subject to the same judgment, and the Commons being sensible of the great use of these regiments for the defence of the town conceive that this last judgment may have a very ill influence, and demand that their voluntary service, which they are forward to perform on extraordinary occasions, may not make them liable to be summoned by the military power, and that all other gentlemen and scholars with their servants may have it declared that they are not subject to a court martial, but for neglect of orderly duty to be punished by their own officers, and for anything that is capital by the civil power, and that the sentence on Lieutenant Brydall may be reviewed with some tenderness and execution stayed, they willingly affording him their favourable testimony, and conceiving themselves concerned in his sentence, because he is an officer in one of the regiments raised by their advice, and upon a dispute of jurisdiction undecided, and that for words spoken in that defence before his judges condemned as of mutiny. [N. XIV., 80.]

[WILLIAM LENTHALL] to [the EARL OF WARWICK].

1645, September 9.—In the name of the House thanking him for his recent services, and desiring him to convey their thanks to his countrymen. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 267.) Draft. [N. XII., 132.]

[WILLIAM LENTHALL] to [the Committees of several Counties in the EASTERN ASSOCIATION].

Same date.—Circulars in the name of the House forbidding them upon any occasion whatever to divert the monies collected for Sir Thomas Fairfax's army, but directing speedy payment thereof to be made according to the Ordinance. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 267.) Draft. [N. XII., 133.]

LORD BROGHILL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 9. Cork.—“The condition of this Province was desperate, before I arrived here with those supplies the Honourable Houses sent over by me, Youghal having been besieged three months, and notwithstanding all their miserable wants, constant and patient, the Lord President having done all that man could do for the preservation of so important a place for the Parliament, and God has so blest his endeavours that it is relieved with victuals and the enemy drawn off some five or six miles. The besieged made a fortnight ago a gallant sally, the rebels having possessed both points of the harbour and planted great guns on them, our soldiers made bold to kill betwixt 3 and 400 of them, seized upon their ordnance, spiked two brass demi-cannon, and flung them down a cliff into the sea, not being able to draw them off, took from them one brass saker and brought it with them, all this with the loss of two men. We do only expect Will. Jephson's arrival with the horse to give the rogues battle,—if they will stand us—. The season of the year is so far advanced there will be but little action. Next spring will, I trust in God, recover our losses of this summer I beseech your favour in any just desire that may be made to the House in the behalf of this Province, which, God willing, shall well merit the Parliament's care of them, being all resolved to sacrifice our lives and fortunes for their service.” . . . Seal. THE COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND to the SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS IN LONDON.

1645, September 10. Haddington.—“We have long tasted in these parts the bitter cup of Godes wraathe, whiche for our many provocaciones he hath in a large measour powred out among us and brought us verie lowe. The Lord in his mercie grant we may yet repent and turne from our evill wayes, and thane we hope he will repent him of the evill he intendit towardis us. We have reasone to be exceding sensible of the many testimonies of the brotherlic affectiounes we have receaved from the honourabill houses of the parliament of England, bot of none mair then that now in the day of our calamitie they send up their prayceers to God for pardoune and pitie to us. It is the greatest assistance can be given us, and we desyer you wald returne them heartie thankis for it from us. At the first meitting of the committee efter the Lordis hand was so heavie upon us at Kilsythe the Lord Chancellor was direckit bothe towardis our forces in England and the honorabill houses of Parliament there, fullie instructed with our conditiones and desyres from bothe, whiche we ar confident ere this can come to your handes you will find from himself, so that we have no wayes failed in our respectes to ather. Since his parting our faint hopes hes beine quickned by the presence and assistance of Generall-Levtennant David Leslie and his forces, who after four hundrethe mylles marche in twantie ane dayes and ane dayes rest—which was indeid the Lordis day—in the Mers, hes advanceit with his forces towards this place bothe for the saiftie and furdur provyding the castell of Edinburgh and securing our magazines of victuall in East Lowthiane.

The rebellis upoun Sunday last marched from Cranstonriddell towards Galowater from whence—as we ar this day informed—they can towards the Mers, and are now lying neir Stithell within a myle or twa of the Castell of Home wherin we have put a garysoun, and finding great slownes and disobedience to all publick orderes in the Mers and Teviotdaille it hes beine thought fitt for a tyme to secure the persones of the Earles of Home and Roxburgh.” Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 73.]

SIR THOMAS HONYWOOD and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 10. Chelmsford.—Thanking the House for the acknowledgment of their past services, and begging him to represent that in their confidence of having the arrears of the Association Assessments within their own county they had run themselves much in debt by these late alarms, and sending out their horse towards Newark, and asking therefore that the House should pass the ordinance prepared for that purpose. Signed. [N. IV., 74.]

HARCOURT LEIGHTON and THOMAS HERBERT to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 10. Bristol.—“Four dayes being subtely spun out by Prince Rupert in treaty—either to compleat his workes, or from hopes of Goring’s or the King’s horse to raise our seige—this morning twixt 2 and 3 the whole army alarmd or stormd the lyne and forts every wher rownd the cittie. Collonel Welden’s brigad fell on upon the south side towards Rateliff and for two full houres stood to it at lesse than pike’s length of their lyne, neither fearing their nombers—though 1,500 were drawne thither—nor the difficulty of passing the trench and water which exceeded there, but with undaunted spiritts exposd themselves to the shott which abundantly was made at them. Albeit, by reason the ladders were not long enough—many that were longer being unhappily left behind at their quarter—they could not enter, both horse foot, and canon opposing them, notwithstanding they left behind them honorable signalles of fortitude, for L[ieutenant]-Collonel Durfee was slayne, Major Crumwell sore hurt in the groine, and about threescore private soldyers close under their workes who to gett up had scratcht the breast-work and exprest an extream desire to scale but could not. Collonel Mountague’s brigad stormd the east part of the lyne and upon the very first attempt past over and most resolutely masterd Laffar (Lawford) gate and that part of the city which joynes to the castle; in which servyce—with the extraordinary assistance of the horse who on all sides kept pace with the musquetteers and seamd to emulate one another in courage and affection—Collonel Taylor, once a member of your house, was taken prisner and nigh two hundred other soldyers; of which there are eight captains and leiftenants. Collonel Raynsborough’s brigade alarmd the fort royall—wherin Leiftenant-Collonel Pride did bravely—and stormd Pryor’s fort and after an houres fight with losse of three men conquerd it. Itt is under the royall fort upon the lyne and commands both the royall fort and castle. It was desperatly defended by about seventy Irish, old soldyers, who all but twelve or fifteen were cutt in peeces by our men together with the Collonel or L[ieutenant]-Collonel—brother to Herbert Price some say—and in the fort we took four culverin and other armes. Hence the enemy are sufficiently gald already, and truly this fort with four other wee took affording nigh twenty peeces of cannon, a great comand to us and scanting the enemy, putts us in fayre hopes of overcoming the rest with lesse hazard and difficulty. In this storme wee have lost one hundred men and few lesse wounded. Major Bethell is one, a deserving gentleman and recoverable. Captain Lago with Major-Generall Skippon's men are sayd to enter the Prior Fort first and with him the rest of Collonel Mountagu and Collonel Hammon's. But to speak truth of all both officers and soldyers, I do not thinck a man gave back for fear or that ever any busines of this nature was managed with more heed or acted with more courage. What the enemy lost in the towne and forts as yet wee hear not but doubtless they had their payment. They are now burning that part of the citty which may give shelter or yeild approaches to us and their one thousand horse are circumscribed to the fort royall together with these lords: Rivers, Hawley, Barramore, Lumley, Crumwell, Newport, Cockayn, Grandison, Sturton, Capell, Bellassis, and others with abundance of gentry and ladies, Prince Rupert's associates. The Generall has desyred Collonel Pindar to speed to Lyme, Taunton, and Bridgwater to furnish us here with what powder and other amunicion their magazines can spare for the dispatch of this busines. Pray hasten money to pay the army. They looke long after it; and, if ever any army, this deserves it. Postscript.—The rumor here is that the King is at Ragland, Goring in Devonshire recruiting. We heare now Prince Rupert will yeild up towne and forts upon other condicions, and departe tomorrow early." Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 75.]

Major-General EDWARD MASSIE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 12. Milverton.—“Since it hath pleased God to deliver Bristol into our hand . . . I humbly suppose that his Excellency will not longer repose himself there than necessity requireth, but will pursue the service one way or other before the rain and cold make him unable either to keep the field or to march—winter drawing nigh—. And therefore where greatest advantage may be found that way I doubt not but the General will look. I am therefore both most humbly to mind—not counsel—the . . . House . . . of these Western parts, which require assistance; which had I had it or the country by any other hand sooner, doubtless the enemy had never recruited himself to so considerable an army as undeniable report doth render him. General Goring with a part of the army advanced yesternight as far eastward as Tiverton 3,000 strong, horse, dragoons, and foot and the body advancing up to them. My want of both dragoons and foot is that which rendereth me unserviceable or disabled to defend the country from ruin, or to stand or dispute it with the enemy, it being a country far more suitable for foot than horse to fight in, full of deep lanes and high hedges, &c. I therefore implore their speediest consideration that by a timely order to the General he may not be wholly engaged with the army in other parts, but may advance westward . . . at the only great service we may look after yet, before winter thrust the army into quarters. It is my faithfulness and zeal to the Parliament that bids me be importunate, for in the same I know no end or aim but my unfeigned desire to put an end to this bloody war, which I perceive can never be so long as we suffer a marching army to act its own desires without impeachment.” Seal. [N. IV., 78.]

Colonel ROWLAND LAUGHARNE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 13. Haverfordwest.—“I have received 269 soldiers, most of them armed, from Sir Thomas Fairfaxe. Manie appeare to be this countrey men and desire to returne to their families. I praise God we are in an indifferent state for foote, in horse vearie lowe. The other counties of South Wales of late entered a newe association and have raised a mightie multitude of Clubmen. I praie some of our next freinds maie be consigned to joine upon our advaunee to Carmarthen-shire. I alreadie solicited,—but cannot prevaile—for a partie of the Mountgornmrieshire horse. To engage this small remnant upon soe vast disadvantages I dare not, and to rewarde, encourage or support them heere the countrey—soe wasted as it is—will not bee able without your favorable consideration for additional supplies from the state in money and apparrell. The 3,000*l.* in money and provision alreadie sent, the comittee heere will rendor an account of, and I desire to present the acknowledgment of my thankfull obligacions. Mr. Arthur Owens by his constant integritie and resolucion for the publike merited our trust to agitate for us to the state. His addresses I desire may receive entertainment. Mr. Roger Lorte in our greatest exigencie deserted us, and in contempt of my comaunde for his staie, shipped himselfe for London, there—as I understand—makeinge Mr. Elliott of his faction, bestoweth himselfe in disgorgeinge private ranckor and malice against those whose merritt will endure the teste, and durst not appeare out of Pembroke, when they both kissed the King’s hand in Oxford. Since the takeinge of Haverfordwest, with the castell, wee have taken in Carewe, Manerbire, and Picton Castells, all the houlds the enemy had in this countie. The particuler account I refferr to the inclosed paper.” Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 79.]

The passage from "Presbyterians, Independents," to the end is underlined, whether by Cromwell or not does not appear. In this passage the following mistakes occur in Rushworth and Carlyle:—"All have here" for all "had here"; "have no names of difference" for "know no names"; "for being united in forms," for "as for being"; "And for Brethren" for "and from brethren.") [THE COMMISSIONERS WITH THE SCOTCH ARMY] to ——— [1645, September on or after 15.]—"Thursday, being the last of July the Scotts army satt downe before Hereford. The generall sent a summons for the surrender of the towne, which beinge refused, he layd close seidge to it, drew a line rounde within pistoll-shott of the wale, made all preparations of mines and batterys to take it by force, which was very hopefull; and spent most of our time. Munday the 25th of August, the Generall and Commissioners of Scotland enformed us that they had intelligence of a great defeate given by Montrose in Scotland, and that their country was wholly lost, havinge noe visible means leaft to regayne it, but this army; the great raginge of the Plague ther addinge to their misery. Affayrs thus standinge, the Commissioners of Scotland desired our advice what to doe. Wee did—as wee had just cause—much condole their sadd condition, yet wee thought it fittest for them to propose the means of reliefe, they best knowinge their owne desirs and wants; for that time wee brooke off, not concludinge any thinge.

Tuesday, wee mett agayne, had the same debate, and weare much pressed for our advice which wee still avoyded, thinkinge some action heare first convenient, if not necessary. They at last—implicitly desiringe a removall of this army, but willinge, as wee conceave, to have us advise it—offered this proposition to be resolved, viz.:

A. The question is upon the information received from Scotland, and upon consideration of the posture of affayres in the north, what will be the most fittinge and conducible service for the good of both kingdomes at this time to be undertaken and performed by the Scottish army now before Hereford, the advice of the commissioners for the Parliament of England is hearin desired. That day ended in nothing but some seeminge discontent.

Wensday wee mett wheare wee alsoe had the same debate, and to the former proposition wee gave this answer, viz.:

B. Wee shall be most ready as wee are bound by our league and covenant, to advise and act for the good of the kingdome of Scotland, as of our owne nation, whose welfares consist together, but before wee can give our advice to the question proposed, wee desire to bee satisfied in these particulars followinge, as a foundation therof:

1^o To knowe the condition and state of the army before Hereford, what probability ther is in takinge the same, and in what time, it beinge of concequence to this kingdome.

2^o Wither it may consist with the safty of the kingdome of Scotland to stay some time to gayue Hereford, or wither the condition of that kingdome be such as doth require a present remove of this army.

Uppon this it was tould us that it seemed Hereford was of more concequence than the kingdome of Scotland, and they must thinke how to save themselves if they could have noe advice or assistence from us; of which wee thought our former answer a sufficient vindication, and wee alsoe tould them till those particulars of ours weare answered, wee could not give any opinion. At last the Generall and Commissioners of Scotland enformed us that the towne of Hereford was very stronge, the moate deepe and the wals lined within, but our batteringe peeces weare smale, most of the mines fayled, and therefore 'twould be a worke of time, and that ther was a necessity for a speedy removall of this army to releive their owne country, havinge no other here. Wee pressed in what time the towne might probably be gayned. A weeke was agreed one as sufficient to perfect necessarys for a storme, uppon which this vote passed, viz. : August 27th.

The committee of both kingdomes uppon consideration of the present conjunction of affayrs, thinke it necessary that the Scotts' army before Hereford bee enabled for a march betwixt this and Wensday next, and doe recommend to the Lord Generall his Excellency to use his best endeavours for reducing of the city in the meane time, who engaged himselfe accordingly.

All preparations weare made of mines and batterys and alsoe for their march, but the time when was never agreed to by us, the word enabled beinge of purpose inserted in the vote.

Thursday, accordinge to the Generall's desire, wee sent severall letters to the adjacent garrisons for men to keepe the towne beinge somthinge confident a storme would have taken it, and beinge willinge to correspond with our brethren of Scotland that they might not longer then necessary bee detayned heare, wee had a promise of some men.

Fryday, as an introduction to an attempt uppon the towne, the Generall sent a second summons for surrender to save effusion of blood, which received a slightinge answer, with denyall.

Saturday, the Generall enformed us that all the mines weare fayled, beinge drowned with water, and ther was but smale hopes, without longe time, of gayninge the towne. Wee then pressed an attempt by battery and storme without mines, to which the Generall answered all should be done that possibly could bee.

Munday, the first of September, the Generall and commissioners of Scotland enformed us of the King's approach to Worster with four thousand horse and dragones. They affirmed themselves ready next day to storme the towne, and had given orders accordingly, the ditch beinge miraculously—as they sayd—dried up, but this interveninge they thought new counsell weare to be taken. The question was What posture to bee in to receave the King's forces if they came; in which debate wee urged wither an attempt by storme might not bee before the Kinge could come, beinge twenty myls off, to which the Generall and commanders delivered their opinions, it was most dangerous and not to be attempted, because the batterys could not be finished before 2 of the clocke, and should the Kinge—as he might—come uppon them as they weare storminge, 'twould ruine their army.

Wee then proposed wither they might not drawe off a party of horse and foote to secure them from the Kinge's forces, and yet leave the towne besiedged, and the ordinance one the batterys, our information beinge, the enemy not to bee of that number as reported; to which the Generall and commanders declared it could not possibly be done, they had soe fewe horse and the rather because they sayd Major-Generall Myddleton was gone with Lieutenant-Generall Leshley into Scotland, and ther weare not any that followed the King's motions. Ther came two letters alsoe of 27th and 29th from the committee of both kingdomes at London that the King's horse drew towards Bristoll as reported, which they thought fitt to lett us knowe, in case they should march towards the Scots army, that wee might bee upon our guard in a posture to receive them, but ther was not one worde of any that pursued the Kinge; and 'tis true wee knew nothinge of Poyntz' horse till wee came to Tewksberry. Sept^{ber} the 6th, and he was within five myls of us. The Generall alsoe affirmed the artillery and foote weare not to be separated, and that the canon could not be taken off the batterys with any safty, but in the night, these beinge soiy military poynts. The Generall and commanders havinge first delivered their opinions, the five Commissioners of parliament agreed with these votes, viz. : 1^o Septembris.

C. The committee of both kingdomes upon advertisment of the king's forces beinge neare Worster yesternight, from which place they may bee att the leagner to morrowe before the breaches can be made assaultable, thinkes fittinge and resolves that noe attempt shall be made against the towne of Hereforde for the present.

That the canon be drawne off the batterys this night.

Tuesday morninge, wee expected the army to bee in a posture fitt to receive the king's forces should they drawe towards them, beinge not without hopes of returninge to the towne agayne. But wee found the seidge wholly raysed and the army one their march to Founhope in the road to Gloucester four myls. The words of the vote are that noe attempt be made against the towne for the present, which words weare inserted one debate and must have relation to their resolution of doinge it one Tuesday, and drawinge of the canon that night because it could not be done in the day, if the king's forces should come; but for rayinge the seidge, marching away, or wither the army should goe or which way was never in debate, much lesse consented to by us.

Wee marched alonge with the army to Coventry, wheare some of the commissioners of Scotland tould us their intention was for Scotland and—supposinge wee would goe thence to London—they desired us to write letters to the severall committees, for their accommodations, which wee tooke into consideration, and findinge noe part of our instructions to march to Scotland, or to meddle with the affays of that kingdome, or wherain wee might bee further serviceable, wee tooke leave of the army one Fryday last, neare Bosworthfield in Leicestershyre, havinge writt letters to the severall committees as they desired, and are now repayed to London, leavinge all to the wisdome of the parliament." Copy. [N. XIV., 234.] N. XIX., 126, 122, are other copies of the Proposition and Answer in the above marked A. and B., and XII., 129, is a copy of the Votes marked C.

SIR HENRY VANE, SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, THOMAS HATCHER, and ROBERT GOODWIN to SIR THOMAS WIDDINGTON.

1645, September 16. Barwicke.—Concerning Mr. Gilbert Swinhoe, who after his release on giving a bond did not appear when summoned, but "went into Scotland, and—as we are informed—endeavoured—with the Laird of Graden—to raise the Moss troopers or thieves of Tynedale and Redesdale to join with the Rebels of Scotland. He was surprised within a mile—as we hear—of Montrose's rendezvous within the borders of Scotland and being brought prisoner hither the Governor of Barwicke—in regard he is an Englishman—hath delivered him over unto us." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 291.) Signed. [N. IV., 86.]

Colonel RICHARD NORTON to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

1645, September 16. Portsmouth.—Asking that money be provided for paying the garrison within a fortnight, as otherwise he must resign the command. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 280.) Seal. [N. IV., 87.]

JOHN [LORD] CULPEPER to GEORGE LORD GORING.

1645, September 17. 3 after dinner. Barnstaple.—"Just now I received from the Lord Digby this inclosed to your Lordship with one little one to the Council and a barren one to myself, wholly relating to a dispatch made by his Lordship to the Prince. Thereupon, finding as well by the complexion of my epistle as likewise by the discourse of the bearer many hints—but no particulars—of good news, I presumed to open the Prince's letter, a copy whereof—all but what is in cipher, whereof I have not the key—I herewith send your Lordship, hoping that this cordial may revive our drooping spirits, and much conduce to the work in hand. Neither in my opinion doth this success in Scotland and Wales make it more probable that Fairfax will advance to these Western parts, but rather that he should look towards the North. But your Lordship will be better able to form a judgment thereon . . . Postscript.—Cardiff is garrisoned for the King, and Wales is in much better temper since the raising the siege of Hereford, but I fear the loss of Bristol may relapse them. Your Lordship sees how much my Lord Montrose wants horse, and how much the enemy abounds in those cattle, and will—I presume—conclude with me that it is most necessary to preserve the body of horse with your Lordship. If they were well joined with the King they might do great things, otherwise his Majesty's joining with the Lord Montrose will be very difficult. Second Postscript.—5 after dinner. Since the writing of this news, Mr. Hunsham of the Crown Office and Sir James Thynn are come hither, who report that the Clubmen were about Cardiff on Monday, and that the King is going from Wales, but whether to Oxford or Northwards they cannot tell. Prince Rupert marched to Oxford." [N. IV., 88.]

[WILLIAM LENTHALL] to the STANDING COMMITTEE of each County.

1645, September 17.—Circular directing them to consider how their county may be best divided into Classical Presbyteries, and what ministers and others are to be of each classis, and to divide their county accordingly. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 276.) Draft. [N. XII., 135.]

THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES.

1645, September 18.—Paper reciting the Ordinance convening them and the Ordinances of October 12, 1643, and May 7, 1645, and stating that these Ordinances were never yet recalled. [N. XXII., 26.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to OLIVER CROMWELL.

1645, September 19.—Thanking him for his services in the name of the House, who “take it with much contentment to hear the unity mentioned in your letters, which they beseech God to continue. They are most joyed in your due and accustomed acknowledgments that all which is done was by the extraordinary Providence of Almighty God.” Draft. [N. XII., 138.]

THE SAME to SIR THOMAS FAIRFAX.

Same date.—In the name of the House thanking him and his army for their services. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 277, 279.) Draft. [N. XII., 139.]

THE COMMITTEE FOR THE ADMIRALTY AND CINQUE PORTS.

1645, September 19.—Order concerning the Becasse, presenting a list of the Winterguard, and desiring that the Ordinance for Martial Law at sea be passed. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 280.) [N. XIV., 81.]

WILLIAM BROKETT to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 20. From His Majesty's Fort of Castle Park.—“I received yours by direction from the . . . House of Commons with an inclosed from the Lord Digby, wherein under pretence of his Majesty's service poison lies sugared against my loyalty and conscience. When his Majesty's service is so Dagonized, who can but conceive the glory is departed from Israel, and who can but resolve to oppose such Philistines. My firmness in that resolution and my freeness from all intercourse with any who should tempt me to the contrary I could evince—my enemies being judges—by several demonstrations. But the insisting hereon unto you might seem to lessen the favour or distrust the confidence that Honourable House is pleased to make me an object of, both in clearing my innocence without dispute and intrusting me with the original of these letters. So ample testimony of their favour and confidence must further oblige me to the public service, if the bonds of conscience—which superlatively tie me to this duty—be capable of addition from other respects nor shall my continuance in that service be less than my zeal for it, for sooner shall the bonds of life than those of conscience be dissolved, or he prove either unfaithful to the cause of God, or undutiful to the commands of that honourable House, who is, your affectionate friend and humble servant.” Scal. [N. IV., 89.]

SIR MATTHEW BOYNTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 20. York.—“The forces of the Association are some of them coming in to our assistance, and others in a good way of preparation, so that we hope speedily to be in a condition not only to carry on the service in this county, but to be able and ready to . . . perform the orders we shall receive from the Parliament or the Committee of both Kingdoms for service in other parts. But by the speedy coming back of the Scotch army we are out of hopes of so sudden a conjunction as we expected, and if their abode be long in these

Northern parts, we shall not only be absolutely frustrate therein, but made utterly unable for the maintaining and continuance of our own forces, if any of the Scotch forces continue in Yorkshire. And in regard the time of the year for sieges is passing away, and the enemy's garrisons in this county are many and strong, it is of absolute necessity that we have considerable strength to join with us of the Association which by the late Ordinance are not to be burthensome to us." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 283.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 90.]

JOSEPH DALTON, Mayor, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 20. Hertford.—Representing that the extraordinary charges of the county were such, and that they, the committee for the county, besides their labours and charges have so far engaged themselves that they were unable by their own abilities or engagements to procure the money requisite for payment of the county's share of the 500 horse ordered to be raised by order of the 19th of May last, and therefore desiring to be excused. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 91.]

Paper in form of a PETITION.

1645, September 20.—Reciting their perplexity and amazement that the great business of Church government should to this day remain unestablished, and praying that the Parliament would make all possible haste forthwith to establish by their civil sanction that government and discipline which Christ has left to his Church—a model whereof the reverend Assembly of Divines hath framed—and that when Church government shall be settled the Presbytery may have such power as may fully enable them to maintain all Christ's sacred Ordinances, especially the Holy Supper of the Lord in their highest splendour and purity. At foot. Resolved: "That this paper . . . contains several matters scandalous to the proceedings of this House and untrue." Signed "H. Elsyng." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 280.) [N. XXII., 53.]

ii. The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS to the ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS.
1645, September 20. Stirling Park.—We received your letter upon our march this day, and with great joy read the news of the surrender of Bristol. Some of us that waited on you at Berwick are now separated for a time for the better prosecuting of our late victory. We are to meet again on Friday next, God willing, at Perth, where there will be a full meeting of the Committee of Estates. Thence we will not fail to dispatch that elected number of Commissioners of Parliament which we appointed to treat with you. We must confess the reasons of this delay hitherto has been not less grievous to us than troublesome to you. Since they are in some part removed after this meeting we shall labour to give you all satisfaction. Certified Copies. [N. XII., 137.]

NICHOLAS LEEK, JOHN MUNDY, SIR SAMUEL SLEIGH, ROBERT WILLMOT, SIR EDWARD COKE, ROWLAND MOREWOOD, and FRANCIS MUNDY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1615, September 22. Derby.—Having referred to the letter of the House in reply to their's of the 4th instant reproving them for their neglect (See Commons' Journals, iv. 267) "for clearing of ourselves wherein we take the boldness to remonstrate unto you the whole particulars touching that affair. The first command by us therein seen was a letter directed to Sir John Gell and by him about the 4th of September shown to some of our Committee then sitting, who desired him to observe the same, notwithstanding that himself and some others . . . much urged that 100 horse might be by us stayed, unto which we no ways condescending we believe he gave—as was desired—present order for their march. It is true that by our letter of the 4th . . . we desired to represent the state of our county, but utterly refused to stay anything in obstruction of any command, only referring the after resolution of things to . . . that great Committee. Within two or three days after we received another from the Grand Committee mentioning the former command of sending, and that the horse were not then sent, and commanding again a sending of them. Whereunto we answered by one of the 8th. . . . —which we believe came not to their hands before the date of yours being the 10th—, wherein we humbly informed that those horse were before that time sent"

And . . . that you may be pleased to take notice what may be expected from us in disposal of military forces we . . . humbly inform that by the last ordinance . . . for our county all we have therein to do lies . . . in this clause, viz., that our forces shall not be drawn, kept, or continued, forth of our county without the consent of the Committee, 5 or more of them, particular directions of Parliament, Committee of both Kingdoms, or of Sir Thomas Fairfax. Wherein we humbly conceive as things with us now stand we have only a bare assenting power—in cases not excepted, as be the three last—to Sir John Gell, Commander in Chief's drawing out and no more. . . ."

The EARL OF WARWICK to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1615, September 27. Westminster.—Excusing himself for having written to the Mayor of Sandwich touching the election of his son, Charles Riche. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 311.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 94.]

Colonel-General SEDNHAM POINTS TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 27. Chester Suburbs.—“In my last I promised a perfect list of our victory . . . which according to our common collection I have sent you inclosed. There are many considerable persons omitted being sent to Stafford and Shrewsbury, whereof I could receive no list. Sir Thomas Glemham proved to be Sir Henry Stradling, the late Governor of Carlisle. I hope you will pardon my mistake. The next morning after the fight I drew my forces out of the suburbs to Rowton Moor, where I remained till two of the clock in the afternoon, where I was counselled to quarter about Northwich, where I found a great inconveniency, so that I am moved this way, and do intend over the river into Wales, taking with me 1,000 foot to make good the Welsh side, and Colonel Jones on the other side, where I shall use my utmost endeavours in reducing this place, till I receive your orders to the contrary, and shall send about 1,000 or 1,500 horse to attend the King’s motion with his ragged remnant. I desire there may be some further encouragement thought upon for the horse, for this hard march hath been very heavy duty to them.” Seal. Enclosed is a list of the prisoners and slain, the former consisting of six knights and colonels, five colonels, the adjutant general, eight lieutenant-colonels, seven majors, eight gentlemen of quality reformadoes, twenty captains, sixteen lieutenants, seven cornets, four quartermasters, five trumpeters, seventeen of the King’s Lifeguard, twenty gentlemen, 1,200 common soldiers, and 1,500 horse, and the latter of the Earl of Lichfield, and at least 300 commanders and soldiers besides. [N. IV., 95.]

JOHN [LORD] CULPEPPER TO GEORGE LORD GORING.

[1645], September 27. Exeter.—Your desires in your letter to me shall be pursued by me before I go out of my chamber and I shall write very willingly, being much scandalized by Sir James Smyth’s disobedience to your orders, and more at his disputing your power. I would willingly attend you to-night at Tiverton, but have despatches of great consequence on my hands, and expect the Prince’s further commands to-night. But at 4 o’clock Sir John Berkley and myself will be at Thurverton in hopes of seeing you, which if your business prevents we shall attend you again tomorrow at any place you appoint. I take it for granted that my Lord Wentworth will come with you. [N. VIII., 137.]

Colonel-General SEDNHAM POINTS to the COMMITTEE FOR WAR AT YORK.

1645, September 29. Doddleston, near Chester.—“We hear the King has got a small body together, Prince Maurice and Sir Jacob Astley joining with him with all the forces . . . they could procure from Worcester, Hereford, and Wales. They are now about Denbigh and are moving this way with four fieldpieces intending to give us battle. I have written to London and to all our garrisons for assistance. One Nottingham regiment is returned and the rest with hard duty much discontented. We hear the Newarkers have orders to come this way. Therefore I earnestly desire you may give orders to the Yorkshire horse to attend their motion and to send your letters to Colonel Rossiter and Colonel Thornhagh to the same purpose, for we hear the King hath vowed to raise this siege or lose England. He expects 5,000 Rebels to come over to him from Ireland." Copy. [N. XII., 143.]

SIR GEORGE BOOTHE and other the Deputy Lieutenants to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, September 29. From the Leaguer before Chester.—Since the House called up their members and committed the Militia to the Deputy Lieutenants, though "we found the soldiers left in a mutinous condition for want of pay, and the country quite exhausted . . . yet it hath pleased God so to render our endeavours prosperous that the country and forces are now reduced to a cheerful and obedient condition ready and capable of any proportionable design that can be presented them for the service of the Parliament. . . Nevertheless we are informed there are some factious petitions presented to you, bearing the character of the whole county, but indeed being the act but of a few . . . intimating a necessity of Sir William Brereton's return and so insinuating an odium and scandal upon us and our actions to the disturbance of the present condition we are in and the hazard of the great attempts now in agitation . . . Postscript.—Major-General Pointz' horse with Colonel Jones' 500 horse are passed over the river and Colonel Booth and Colonel Duckenfield with such foot as we could spare to expect the King's attempt on the Welsh side." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 302.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 97.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to Colonel-General POINTS.

SIR MATTHEW BOYNTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 1. York.—Sending Colonel Overton's letter and the articles of the rendition of Sandall Castle, stating that they were in very great want of ammunition to reduce the other castles in the county, and desiring that a good supply be speedily furnished. SIR ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 1. Melcomb Regis.—Enclosing a communication "about the sad condition of Pool where the plague and famine busily contend for pre-eminence, and the distressed inhabitants impatient of either of their reigns threaten to break out to the inevitable danger of the loss of the garrison and ruin of the places adjacent," which we desire may be taken into present consideration on account both of the importance of the place and its affection to Parliament. We shall always be ready to contribute our best assistance, but "five of our great towns, Pool, Sherborne, Dorchester, Perret, and Week, being by the present contagion necessarily reduced to a just expectation of relief the county will not be able much longer to subsist under the intolerable burden of so many infected places and seven garrisons, especially when our weekly contributions shall be taken from us . . ." Signed. [N. SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE, THOMAS HATCHER, and ROBERT GOODWIN
to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 2. Newcastle.—“Our last letter to the Committee of Estates . . . of the 24th of September last hath prevailed so far as to produce a meeting on Monday next at Barwick . . . We shall not fail, God willing, to give them a meeting at the time and place appointed, and do therefore intend to begin our journey thitherwards tomorrow. We have not heard this week of any action between the forces of our brethren in Scotland and the Rebels. The Scottish army in England lieth in Cleveland, their head-quarters being at Stokesley. They have sent their train of artillery into this town, and the regiment of foot that convoyed it is quartered in the Bishopric. Some of their chief Commanders and officers are passed by this way into Scotland, and we hear that a great meeting is appointed this week at Jedburgh or Duns.”

Colonel THOMAS MORGAN, JOHN FETTIPLACE, and others to WILLIAM
LENTHALL.

1645, October 3. Gloucester.—Recommending Lieutenant-Colonel Kyrle as Governor of Cannon Froom in place of Colonel Harley resigned. “After the departure of the Scots out of that country all things were left in such fear and confusion that had he not adventured far, and been very careful in the Governor’s absence, the enemy had been now masters of that place.” Also “he never had any command or requital answerable to that great service he did the State in gaining Monmouth to their obedience, which had it been as faithfully kept as he was active and zealous in reducing it the Parliament long since had been clearly masters of that part of the kingdom.” *Signed. SIR JOHN GELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL

1645, October 4. Derby.—“The king with some 2,000 in his army—whereof 1,500 fighting men—are this day passed our garrison about eight miles distant and so for Newark. The most now that is in his army are Irish. Those that have any religion in them at all run away, whereof we have two. There is now commanders with the King General Garrett (Gerard), Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Sir William Vaughan, and now the Lord of Loughborough. There is no other commander of note with the King, Prince Maurice being gone to Worcester, but left his Regiment with his Majesty.” (See Commons’ Journals, iv. 299.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 104.]

SIR JOHN GELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 4. Derby.—I sent to Colonel Rossiter to give him notice of the King’s coming the Friday night before. I think it my duty to acquaint you with the enclosed, and what I did upon them, and to ask you to acquaint the House, the Committee of both Kingdoms, or whom else you please. "I was in a great strait what to do, all three of them being Committee men, and two of them soldiers, and the third—namely Mr. Clarke—only a Committee man, who likewise was well acquainted with all the former proceedings of Colonel Stockdale. At last" I resolved "to desire Mr. Clarke to go to the Earl of Leven and went to him to his lodgings to that purpose, but he seemed to be unwilling. Then I told him he needs must go and took him by the hand and wished him to go along with Colonel Stockdale. I was confident he being no soldier no harm would befall him, but that he would give satisfaction to General Leven in possessing of him of the truth of the proceedings in this business, and for the other two, being soldiers, I sent them not. He is since safe returned. If I had wholly refused, I know not what inconvenience might have happened, the whole Scots army at that time being at Nottingham and upon our county." If I have offended the House in this business, I am heartily sorry and beg pardon. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 303.) Seal. [N. IV., 106.] Enclosed :

JOHN [LORD] CULPEPER to [GEORGE LORD GORING].

[1645], October 6, at night. Launceston.—"My letter from the Lord Digby brought hither this morninge by Doctor Lloyd, Chaplaine to the Prince,—a copy whereof your Lordship will herewith receive—was written before his Lordship had heard of the London reports toching the Marquis Montrosse. But before he parted from the king—who was at Chirke Castle on Michaelmas day—, Mr. Spencer came from Oxford to his Majesty,—in his jorney over to Ireland—and towld the reports which came from London toching David Lesley and my Lord Montrosse much to the same effect as wee had them, which Mr. Lloyd sayeth was not beleived in the army, there haveinge been with the king an expresse from my Lord Montrosse with letters dated the 12th Sept. from Kelso, besides what my Lord Digby his letter mentiones from Kendalle. Doctor Lloyd sayeth that the expresse from Kelso affirmed that my Lord Montrosse did beate a considerable party of David Lesley his horse, and gave them the chace seventeen miles on English grownd. My Lord it is beyonde my power to reconcile all the particulars of this bussinesse. Uppon the whole I hope very well, yet am not quite free of my former apprehensions. If your Lordship have any new intelligence which may cleare these mysteries yow will extremely oblige me to convey them to me to Barnestable whither I am goinge tomorrow, and where I shall continue untill Saterday morninge. I understand by another letter that his Majesty had a very good appareance of his horse at his private rendezvous at Chirk Castle 29th Sept., and that Prince Maurice came thither to the king with five hundred good horse—part of them came to him from Oxford and were of those that were at Bristol and Berkely Castle—and—which your Lordship will not thinke fit to impart to others—that the king intended to goe to Newarke by the way of Worcester. The government of Oxford is changed and Will. Llegg committed as you heard, but noe such thinge as any restraunte on p[rince] R[upert]. I perceave that it would be very acceptable to the king, if withoute hazard to these counties and with safety to the body of horse, they could be joynd with his Majesty. But this hath been sufficiently considered of, and cannot have a full resolution withoute further intelligence of Fairfax his motions.” Postscript.—Desiring him to communicate this intelligence to Lord Capel at Exeter. Signed. SIR JOHN GELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 7. Derby.—“My men hath met with one Mr. Richard Johnson, Master of the Horse to the Lord Lichfield, who was prisoner at Nantwich, and had license to go to bury his Lord, and upon his parole for exchange, and so upon his journey from Newark did carry some letters, which I have sent to the Committee of both Kingdoms, with a Commission to my Lord Byron to be Governor of Conway and Field Marshal General of all North Wales with other expressions of great falsities. The King stayeth still at Newark, but intendeth the relief of Chester. The Lord of Linsey is also with the King.

Postscript.—This is part of my Lord Digby's letter to my Lord Byron : According to what I wrote unto you at large from Chirk, his Majesty is advanced as far as Newark, and we hope it will have the wished effect.

68. his Majesty will 81. God send you may hold out till he come. If it should not be possible, for all that is possible I am sure you will do. you are then desired to apply yourself to 81 particularly to 68. I have received newly an express from Montrose who was betrayed and lost two or three hundred men at most, and since that he hath given D. Lesley a great blow. General Goring hath had a victory against Massey, and Fairfax is marched back into the West in great haste to encounter him. Newark, October 5." Seal. [N. Colonel MARTIN PYNDAR and HARCOURT LEIGHTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 8. Bristol. — "The resolves of the General and Councill of Warr to fall on this city hapned at a tyme when our treasure was at the lowest, yet not held a sufficient ground to divert such hopeful resolutions. The care for supply of the army in the meane tyme was committed to us amongst others, as Mr. Ash and Mr. Moore can sufficiently informe you, to which purpose wee issued out warrants to the countyes of Gloucester and Somerset to have provisions brought in, engaging ourselves the country should be satisfied for the same out of the pay of the army, and the successe was answerable to our desires and necessities; but the irregularity of the soldyer hath prevented that just imposition on themselves, which by our instructions the honourable Houses of Parliament have ordered, and begott unto us much more trouble then is fitt to trouble you withall. Where wee can possibly reduce the charge by ticquett or oath to any regiment, troope, or company wee have upon moderate rates given debenters to the parishes for the same. Where wee cannot come to an exact rule, wee have left it to the committees of the countyes to allow out of contributions or assessments upon the severall Hundreds, without which perticular persons will be utterly undon, because they cannot say who hurt them, not being able to say whither our army or the club armyes eate up theyr provisions which we find and saw to be devoured and destroyed in an extraordinary measure, especially theyr h[ous]es which our foote soldyers were constrained to make use off in wet weather for hutts and in this also the club army had a proportionable share. What we now offer is the complaints brought in to us by the country who therefore apply themselves to us, because we have engaged ourselves for theyr satisfaction and say they are soe farre from receiving satisfaction for this dammadg; that the committees require greate contributions from them, and will not make any allowance thereout to the supply of the necessities of these people, who in many places have had theyr cattle driven, ther houses fired, ther goods spoiled by the enemy, and that little remaynder eaten up by the great confluence of people comminge to the leagure; soe that without a present reliefe they will be in a perishing condition. In perticular the committee for the city of Gloucester demand to the very walls of this city twenty-four monthes contribution, and inforce it by driving the country, imprisoning the persons, beating and wounding such as resist them in this violence, which they complaining to us off, we were bound to adresse our letters to the committee, cloathed with the best arguments we could use from whome was received such an answer soe seconded with the continuance of theyr former outrages that wee cannot but present both our letter and theyr answer to your honourable consideration humbly prayinge they may be some speedy rule given us to remitt such contribution as the enemy hath forced them to pay to this city to repaire, such daumage as they have suffered by our leagure before this city, and that each garrison may be bounded for contribntions that one clash not against the other as now they doe to which wee shall only adde that the visitation of this city increasing more and more wherby the soldyers are advisedly sent into the same parts and parishes to quarter they may be dispensed withall for a tyme that are thus burthened with quartering and interteining our sick and wounded soldyers whom though wee equally doe undertake to make satisfaction for, yet cannot be reimbursed by reason of that extreame retarding of the supplyes appointed for the army, which proveth of very dangerous consequence begetting daily mutinees, and causing many honest and stout soldyers to dissert the service rather then they will be a burthen to the country: which how farre it may exasperate the Clubmen and begett a new contest wee rather pray to prevent then prophecy to ensue. The Generall hath neglected no expedient to sweeten the soldyer with money and ere he marched hence did patch up a weekes pay to the private foote for which wee your commissioners are ingaged in this city as also to make up the gratuity of Bridgwater servyce all which must be paid ere we goe hence: where our employment is to make up a second gratuity which the Generall was pleased to engage himself to the soldyer, wherby to prevent that ruine which must have fallen upon the city by storming of it had not theyr appetite been cloyed by the expectation of this promise then which a more noble act was not to be expected, nor more nobly entertayned both by officer and soldyer, who obeyed the Generall's commands therein to the full satisfaction of the city. And the purchase of soe greata a benefit to a city of such concernment wee presume to say was not deare at fourteen dayes pay to the soldyer the collecting whereof hath byn committed to our care supposing that the wealth of the enemy would have made good the expected summe, which occasioneth us to present you also with an account of our proceedings herein. The city wee finde to have byn a den of theeves whither the enemy hath brought his plundred goods, and where methodically they have placed the same to theyr owne advantage becomming inhabitants and housekeepers and well provided of household-stuff, who being unrowsted (unroosted) by us have willingly left theyr prey behind them save only such as was portable and by the Articles permitted them to carry away soe that plate or mon[e]y we find not in any proportion. The goods themselves soe farre as concernes houshold affaires doe finde propriators for in abundance, whose affection to your cause caused them to be plundred and faithfulness in your servyce cause us to make restitution of what they can justly challenge to be theyr owne. Much other goods wee find stored up and kept in the city, brought in while Collonel Fines was governour and doth belong unto persons professing theyr integrity to the parliament though overpowered by the enemy whom we cannot esteeme as enemyes and therefore cannot deny them theyr goods. Other goodes there are of that nature that we may esteem prise because made soe by the enemy. Such is the corral brought in by Mucknell and the Hanburgers' shipp with the goods there, both which are owned by instruments imploied to that purpose and are respitted by us untill theyr clayme by the allowance of the honorable house of parliament be made knowne to whome we have referred the state of theyr demaunds. Wee find also that Mr. Thomas Marsham of London hath brought in some quantity of goods which yet remayne unsould, but by a pretended property transferred to merchants in this city for debt, which wee conceive to be purposely done to prevent that interest the army doth clayme in them, all which we humbly offer as arguments of necessity to annihilate the expectations of rich or vast prizes here to be had. Wee shall farther offer that wee have used all faire expedients to promote the gratuity which is of that necessary concernment that it is consistent with the being of the army and the preservation of any other city or garrison we may storne hereafter, to the effecting whereof wee have layed open the honorable care our Generall tooke to preserve the city from fire and plunder the one inducing him to give the Prince a passage which otherwise the wealth of the world could not have purchased from him, the other invitinge him to promise the soldyer that gratuity which would have cost the city ten tymes as much had they byn theyr owne carvers. And to make theyr burth[en] lighter towards which we have offered unto them all prizall goods of what nature soever here found, provided they would only make good the promised gratuity which after many dayes deliberation produceth this effect only: that they denie to medle with any of the goodes in one kind or other, pretending theyr inability to lay downe money for the same, yet that it may appeare how ready they are to acknowledg the greate benefitt they are partaker[s] of by that noble care of the Generall, they are willing to gratifie the army with the summe of 5,000*l.* towards the fourteen dayes promised the soldyer, it being the uttm^{ost} of they[r] ability and more then they find any probable way to advance. Wherin we desire to subscribe unto them, our owne judgments evideneing unto us that whatever perticular persons aymed at in the countenaneing of that party experience hath taught them that nothing but ruine hath accompanied them and desolation would have byn the issue of such a government, it being manifest that the city hath lost noe less of its wealth then of its reputation in the entertainment of such guests. What shall therefore want of the expected sum, which is computed by the Army to be near 12,000*l.* in all, and will not be advanced upon the Corall and other goods we pray may be added to the rest of your favours conferred on that army . . . and that it may be speeded unto them. Postscript.—[We suspect] Mr. Basset sometyne a member of the Howse of Commons and many persons of eminency both Lords and others to lurke in and have recourse unto this city, which we conceive would soone be remedied were here a Standing Committee once settled." Signed. [N. IV., 111.]

Colonel THOMAS MORGAN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 10. Chepstow.—"Beeing informed upon Satterday last there was some rising in the Counties of Glamorgau and Monmoth to stard upon their owne gaurds under the command of Sir Trever Williams and Collonell Mathews, with some shewes of beeing for the parliament, I made use of that oppertunitie and drew out five hundred of my horses and four hundred foote from Gloucester towards Chepstow, with which I entred the toune and sommoned the Castle of Collonell Fitzmorris for the parliament's use, unto which he sent a very peremtorey answer saying he kept it for his master the king, but beeing very desirous to reduce that garrison unto dew obedience of parliament I still continewed in the toune with that partie, and sent to the governour of Bristoll for three hundred foote for my assistance in the bussenes, which he willingly did, who came up to me upon Thursday night. Then I rayed a battrey within halfe musquet shott of the Castle and planted two brass colvering and one of iron with which when I had made a reasonable breach there came to my hand certaine intelligence of the enemys movinge from Worcester, Heriford, Lymster, Ragland, and Monmouth and intended to quarter two thousand horsse and foote this night at Aberganey, upon which I prepared with all possible speede to storme it, and for that purpose I drew out four hundred men and had sett them in a posture immediately to have faulne on, which the enemy discovered and bett a parley of which I admitted, and the then governour there send out a letter by his drumer desiring to treat, but because I would not admitt of any delays, I appointed an officer to returne him this answer, viz., that I had not now time to send him an answer in wrighting, but if he would deliver up to me the Castle with all the armes, ordnance, amunicion, and other provitions therein, for the parlamentes use and render himself with all the officers and souldiers my prisoners hee and they should have faire quarter for their lives, which he inbraced, and yealded himselfe and all with him my prisoners, and imediately marched out. The prisoners are Collonell Fitzmorris, Governour, Majour Bridgman Deputie Governour, Captain Hallome, Leutenant Jones, Ensigne Dauson, and one hundred and six prisoners. I founde in the toune and castle, eighteen peeces of ordnance great and smale, fifteen barills of poulder, four hundred barills of butter, six hogsheds of bisquet with greate quantites of other provitions. The countrey boeth here and in the Forest of Deane doe much rejoyce at our prosperous proceeding in the clearing this passage, by reson of the free traids they are now in hope to enjoye to London, Gloucester, Bristoll, and other parts of the kingdome, and I have appointed Collonell Heuges, Governour of the toune and castle of Chepstowe." Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 115.]

[GEORGE LORD DIGBY] to [LORD JERMYN].

1645, October 10. Newark.—“I hope mine from Bridgenorth is miscarried. It was more melancholy than upon second thoughts I would have written but . . . the loss of my Lord of Lichfield and the other gallant men and in the nick of that the Rebels' printed boasts of my Lord Montrose's total overthrow had put me into a fit of deeper melancholy and despair than I have ever before been subject unto. Since that I have received expresses from my Lord Montrose, wherein he relates the truth of his late misfortune . . . at Philiphaw . . . wherein he lost in all but 200 men, and bids us be assured that yet ere winter he will be in England with a gallant army. We since receive daily information from all parts in the North that he hath routed David Lisley, Colkito and his other forces being come up to him, for at Philiphaw he was only a small party invited to the Borders by Roxburgh and others who betrayed him. We shall no sooner receive an express of his good condition but we shall endeavour to get to him. In the meantime here we rest about Newark the unlikeliest place to be besieged and the strongest if it be, and from whence the King may not be hindered from marching away with his horse at any time, whither we marched from Chirk without any interruption, Poyngs having it seems been too much broken to follow us and opinating since the siege of Chester. If he give us leisure till we hear the certainty of Montrose he will much oblige us. If not, I hope with that addition which we may receive from this garrison, we may be able to fight with him for our passage. We are in hourly expectation of an answer from the Scots Army to those overtures made unto them whereof I advertised you formerly, and we have cause to hope well of that negotiation. It were impertinent to trouble you from hence with the westward news. . . . If Goring hath given Massey such a defeat as is believed and that Fairfax hath drawn back his army against him there will then be a fair blow for the setting us as high again as ever. I hope that our misfortunes will not make you faint there in soliciting all possible supplies of money arms and ammunition, for whatsoever sudden damps may seize us upon unexpected disasters, I hope upon recollection we shall none of us doubt but God will in the end magnify his justice in the prosperity of his Majesty's cause. Whatsoever happen let her Majesty be assured that I in the discharge of my duty shall still make good the confidence which she hath been pleased to have of me." Endorsed: "66 Digby to Germaine, but blotted out." GEORGE BOOTHE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 10. From Chester Suburbs.—“Upon Monday last we so straitly begirt the town on both sides the river, that none can get forth or come in to them, of which Sir John Byron complained in two letters, the one to his brother, the other to the Archbishop of York, intercepted by us that day. Yesterday we again attempted the City by storm. The most part of the day was spent in battery—after a parley of 24 hours held with them—we fell to the storm a little before sunset, which continued for the space of an hour and a half. The service was very hot, in which attempt we spent very much ammunition, for which the gentlemen of the County stand engaged. The service was performed by the expense of some blood, yet no considerable man lost. Amongst the wounded Lieutenant-Colonel Venables, a gallant man, received a wound in the arm but not dangerous. The premises set out our necessity, and plead for a speedy supply of moneys, without which we cannot continue in this posture. The help of the adjacent counties in provision in a due way proportioned, will be necessary for our support otherwise this overcharged county will be in danger to sink under the burden.” Postscript.—Praising Colonel Jones and Adjutant Louthiane and desiring that some notice may be taken of them. WILLIAM CAWLEY to ROBERT SCAWEN.

1645, October 13. Chichester.—“By reason of the Clubmen's insurrection we can neither raise men or moneys for Sir Thomas Fairfax's army, or upon any other ordinance, they not suffering our officers to impress, or when impressed taking them away by violence, sending sometimes a Constable or Tithingman with the blood running about his ears so that of 67 to be impressed in this Rape, were brought in but 27, whom at a great charge we were forced to maintain for 14 days, and then sent them to Lieutenant-General Cromwell to Winchester, so that we want 40, which we shall endeavour to raise, if the House will authorise us to apprehend the principal fomentors, and so punish them that by their example others may be affrighted from attempting the like. And in no better case are we for moneys, it being one of their Articles to pay such taxes only as they please, the fruits whereof we are too sensible of, not an 100*l.*—though above 4,000*l.* due—being brought in since their first rising, no collector daring to distrain for fear of having his brains dashed out, 40 servants and women rising together armed with prongs and other weapons, so that of eight months' due upon Sir Thomas Fairfax's army not two months' yet brought in, all which may easily be remedied, if the Houses authorise the Committee to sequester their ringleaders, fine the rest, and disarm all, till which is done, in vain will it be for us to issue out our warrants, our persons being scorned and threatened, and your authority abused and derided.” (See Commons' Journals, iv. 318.) Seal. [N. SIR JOHN GELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 14. Derby.—“According to your command I gave order for my horse to march to Chester, and they went hence yesterday. I have only reserved three troops for defence of this county, in regard many of the King's horse quarter near our country. The King himself continues still about Newark, and makes a show of taking up his winter quarters there. He hath appointed the country people to come in to Newark this day to be healed of the King's evil, and either he will remove just against that time, as formerly he did, or else he will make a long stay in these parts. On Saturday last a party of the Yorkshire horse fell upon some of the King's in Warsopp, and took some prisoners and horse, but the certain number I yet know not. General Poynts continues still about Chester. . . . The besiegers at Chester lately made an attempt against that city but lost about 18 men and had 80 wounded. At this instant I have intelligence that most of the King's horse are gone to Tuxford in the Clay. . . . Postscript.—

Colonel EDWARD ROSSETER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 16. Grantham.—"Upon intelligence that Prince Rupert with a party from Oxford was coming to Newark upon Tuesday I drew to Melton with my own troops, and those under the command of Major Baynes. About noon on Wednesday we lighted upon Prince Rupert with his brother Maurice, the Lord Molineux, the Lord Hawley, Sir William Vavasour with 300 in their party near Waltham. Our forlorn hope skirmished with them, upon my advancing to charge them they fairly faced about. We pursued them three miles to the walls of Belvoir and killed many, took prisoners a major, three captains and about three score gentle and others, six or seven score horses. They had no colours, but we took the Prince's trumpet and banner. The King amused us as if he had been for the North and moved towards Welbeck to draw us over Trent. I hear he returned to Newark on Tuesday with part of his force, but sent Sir Marmaduke Langdale with a party Northwards. Colonel-General Poynts yesterday came to Derby. The 1,000 horse and dragoons that came from London to Leicester are marched to him." Signed. [N. IV., 123.]

SIR JOHN GELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 16. Derby.—“This last night General Poynts quartered at Pislely in the midway betwixt Derby and Nottingham. Colonel Manwaringe quartered at Calveston within three miles of General Poynts, so that their forces are now united. Two days since the King’s forces lay between Welbeck and Blyth, and had their rendezvous at Warsopp, from thence they marched towards Doncaster, and I am informed their intentions are to march Northwards. Upon this Colonel Copley retreated with his horse to Sherburne, where his foot lies, and he earnestly desires that the King may be pursued in the rear, in regard that his men have lately been in some discontent. Yesterday morning about 400 horse of the King’s were at Harborough, their intentions was to go that night to Belvoir and so to the King. These came from about Banbury, and gave out that Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice were both with them, but that I conceive was but their report and little truth in it.” [N. IV., 125.]

FRANCIS PIERREPONT and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 17. York.—Enclosing a letter of the Commander-in-Chief of our horse and a list of the prisoners taken at Sherburne on the 15th. “Our foot was at first surprised, but this we are bold to say there wanted not our care and orders to prevent the same. . . . They were happily rescued by the horse, who, though their number was small and inferior to the enemy, yet their resolution and valour greater, and therefore merits all encouragement for so good service.” We owe them a fortnight’s pay by promise which we ask the House to supply speedily, and also to send some reward for their encouragement. By the enclosed from the Earl of Leven you may “perceive that the Scotch army are not in a present posture for their advance to Newark, though they have been several times earnestly solicited by us thereunto. We are the more earnest for money for our horse . . . in regard the former and present levies and billets by the Scots upon the North Riding have so exceedingly impoverished that large—and heretofore rich—part of this county that there cannot possibly be raised a competent subsistence for the horse and foot which necessarily are to be maintained in this county.” (See Commons’ Journals, vii. 316.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 126.]

The COMMITTEE FOR SEQUESTRATIONS.

[1645], October 17.—Report concerning Mr. Cockshut, Exigenter of London, alleged to be a Delinquent, but of whose good affection towards Parliament they declared themselves satisfied. (See Lords’ Journals, vii. 606.) Part in duplicate. [N. XIV., 185.]

SIR JOHN HENDERSON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 18. London.—Desiring a safe conduct from the House to go to the King in order to deliver the King of Denmark’s letter, and from thence to Scotland. Seal. [N. IV., 127.]

The SAME to the SAME.

Same date.—“I received yesterday morning an order from the Houses of Parliament commanding my sudden departure from this kingdom without any satisfactory answer to his Majesty of Denmark my master’s desires, but that by their own Commissioners they would send their answer. In this I humbly acquiesce, entreating . . . the House of Commons for a free pass to go to his Majesty of Great Britain for the delivery of his Majesty of Denmark's other letter " . . . and otherwise for permission to send one of my own servants or a trumpeter of theirs with the King of Denmark's letter and an open one of my own to the King. Seal. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 308, 328.) [N. IV., 128.]

SIR THOMAS JERVOISE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 18. Basingstoke.—Desiring that Captain Bettesworth, for whom they had written to the Committee of both Kingdoms for a commission to command their horse, and taken order for making him sberitl, should be appointed governor of Winchester Castle instead of Colonel Lower. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 314.) Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 129.]

SIR THOMAS JERVOISE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 20. Basingstoke.—Recommending Major Gifford, Major in Colonel Jephson's regiment of horse designed for Ireland, for his conduct at the storm of Basing House. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 130.]

SIR JOHN BAMPFYLDE, SIR SAMUEL ROLLE, FRANCIS BULLER, and ANTHONY NICOLL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 20. Tiverton.—“We came to the armie at Beaminster and from thence advanced with them to Chard the next day, where they remained some dayes in expectation of the recruits and mony for the armie and of monie for Majour-Generall Masseyes partie. Wee advanced thence to Hunnington (Honiton) from whence before our advance the enemy retreated neere Exon till which time they plundered all the countrie of cattle. From Hunnington wee advanced to Collumton on Thursday, on which day, Majour-Generall Masseye's partie came before Tiverton castle and summoned it, but received a refusall of obeying. Our noble Generall having notice of it, came on Friday with a parte of his armie hither, the residew hee sent to Bradnidge. Yesterday about two of the clocke after-noon, some batteries being made and all thinges being reddie for storming for which the souldiers with much cheerefullnesse prepared themselves, the Generall for the sparing of blood, with the advice of the councill of warre, resolved to sende them a second summons, which was written and signed and parties drawne out, who were reddie with their scaling ladders to storme, if a deniall were returned, but at that instant it pleased God so to directe one shott that it cut the chaine of their draw-bridge which instantly fell downe, and the souldiers spirrits were such, that they presently without ordre given, entred their workes. The enemies heartes failed, and wee became suddenly masters of the church, and castle, and their strong and regular workes in which they confided. Wee tooke the governour, Sir Gilbert Tawbott, and two hundred and four officers and souldiers of which you have heere enclosed a list, four greate gunnes, thirty barrells of powder, with other armes which cannot bee particularized, they being dispersed. Wee loste not a man in the storming, nor put any to the sword. Wee saw so much resolution in all the souldiers that wee cannot but make it our request that mony may bee speeded to them, without which, it is much doubted how they will bee supplied, the countrie where they advance not having in their quarters wherewith to supply them. But if money bee wanting to pay in the market which is appointed to follow the armie with provisions from our reare, the market will faile. Majour-Generall Masseyes men have not mony to shoe their horses. Goring is retreated to Chidleigh. What hee intends wee know not. Our industrious and vigilant General pittying the condicion of the contrie, who cries for his assistance and intending nothing more then the speeding of the worke, and the active Majour Massey resolve this day to advance in one body toward Goring who is strong and wee can not devide the armie, unlesse Lieutenant-Generall Cromwell come up with his partie, with which its hoped they may devide and the more speedily finish the worke in the west, without which the whole armie must follow Goring or runne a great hazard, the Prince, Hopton, and Greenvill being entred Devon with four thousand foote and fifteen hundred horse as wee are informed." Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 131.]

SIR HENRY VANE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 20. Anderweeke.—(Identical mutatis mutandis with the letter of the same date from Philip Lord Wharton to the Speaker of the House of Peers, which is printed in Lords' Journals, vii. 659.) Signed. [N. IV., 132.]

THOMAS SALUSBURY and others to GILBERT MILLINGTON.

1645, October 22. Nottingham.—“There is now a very great force of horse in our county with General Poynts to straighten Newark, but the extreme poverty of our miserably harassed country, which hath so long been under the power of so potent enemies, and been forced so often to entertain numerous forces for and against the Parliament will not admit of delay to be supplied from adjacent counties or otherwise.” We therefore desire the House to afford us speedy and seasonable assistance. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 133.]

CHARLES WHITE to GILBERT MILLINGTON.

1645, October 22. Southwell.—Asking him to solicit the Committee of both Kingdoms that if Newark shall be besieged this time, a standing Committee may be appointed out of all the adjacent counties to superintend and provide for the army, and that it may be maintained by the counties of Derby, York, Leicester, Rutland, and Lincol'n, and that what foot shall be designed for this service may be speedily sent, otherwise the country shall be consumed before the work is begun, and stating the impoverished state of the county and army. “The King and the Princes are yet in Newark. General Poynts lieth at Southwell with our horse and foot and some other horse of Yorkshire, Gloucester, and the London Brigade. Welbeck is also straitened. Colonel Rosseter is now at Bingham. We cannot approach nearer Newark without foot.” Seal. [N. IV., 134.]

Captain ROBERT MOULTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 22. King's Road, aboard the Lion.—Stating that when lately at Cardiff Sir John Strangeways was brought into the town, who is now detained more or less at large there, and interceding for him, mentioning that there is at Cardiff one Culpepper, nephew to the pretended Lord Culpepper, against whom there is no proof, but it may be suspected that he may serve to convey intelligence, and enclosing a copy of two particulars he had written to the Committee of the Admiralty. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 321.) This is written by a secretary and signed; then follows in Moulton's own hand with a fresh beginning and end: "one thing or two I had almost omitted . . . Washington with about 1,500 horse and foot fell down into the skirts of Monmouthshire, but by the timely rising of the Glamorgan-shire Clubmen, and happy intervening of Gloucester forces were put back and pursued as far as Hereford. The Clubmen about 6,000 remain still in the field . . . In my apprehension the multitude of general persons in these counties, each commanding in chief and absolutely, as Gloucester, Monmouth, Brecknock, Glamorgan, Pembroke-shire may in time cause some confusion if not prevented . . . I shall humbly propound . . . whether one whole Commander-in-Chief, appointed by his Excellency over all these counties with . . . 500 commanded men—strangers to the place—to whom the rest to be subordinate would not be more conducing to the public service." [N. IV., 135.]

SIR MATTHEW BOYNTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 23. York.—Concerning the mutinous spirit of the army, their want of pay, and the impoverishment of the county caused by the Scotch army quartering on it. (Printed in Grey, iii. Appendix, No. 47, p. 74.) (See Commons' Journals, iv. 329.) Signed. [N. IV., 136.]

The EARL OF WARWICK and others to the COMMITTEE OF LORDS AND COMMONS FOR THE EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

1645, October 23. Chelmsford.—Concerning the pay of the three regiments of horse sent to Newark in July, August, and September, which is due the end of the month or early the next month, desiring that the counties not of the Association who are charged with a portion of the pay and also those counties of the Association that are slow to pay should be quickened, and that arrangements should be made for the future pay of these regiments, and also that when the Parliament accepts a composition for a sequestration a portion of the composition should be paid to the county which had the benefit of the sequestration. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 327.) Signed. [N. IV., 138.]

SIR MATTHEW BOYNTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 24. York.—Since the battles at Roughton Heath and Sherburne there hath been brought in to this city near 500 prisoners, most of whom were formerly commanders in the King's army, who marched Northwards as common troopers. We enclose a list of the most considerable. In regard of the small number of soldiers here, and the general disaffection of the inhabitants, we consider it very dangerous to continue them here and therefore desire the pleasure of the House. We hear that the horse which escaped from Sherburne, being about 800, were stopped in their passage towards Scotland and are retreating again into this county, so that if the said prisoners remain here it may be of very dangerous consequence. Enclosed is a list of the prisoners. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 329.) Signed. [N. IV., 139.]

The COMMITTEE FOR PETITIONS.

1645, October 24.—Resolution on the petition of John Abbott. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 354.) [N. XIV., 83.]

Colonel THOMAS MORGAN and SIR TREVOR WILLIAMS to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 24. Monmouth.—Describing the taking of the place. (Printed in King's Pamphlets, E. 266, No. 12, and in Phillips, Civil War in Wales, ii. 279.) In Morgan's hand and signed by Williams. Seal. [N. IV., 139, should be 140.]

SIR MATTHEW BOYNTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 25. York.—Forwarding by Sir William Allanson divers letters taken at Sherburne and again desiring to know the pleasure of the House touching the prisoners. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 140, should be 141.]

JOHN [LORD] CULPEPER to GEORGE LORD GORING.

[1645], October 25. Launceston.—Stating that on the receipt of all Goring's letters to him he had answered them immediately. Seal. [N. IV., 137.]

Colonel JOHN HUTCHINSON, GEORGE HUTCHINSON, CHARLES WHITE, and others to GILBERT MILLINGTON.

1645, October 26. Nottingham.—Enclosing a letter from General Poyntz, showing their extreme want of match and powder, and asking that some considerable quantity of this may be furnished, and also competent sums to recruit the loss of horses and arms in this present expedition, and also reminding him of their former desire that the adjacent counties might be speedily made to contribute to the maintenance of the forces met together in that county. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 329.) Signed. Seal. Addressed "at the sign of the Pear in the little Centrey at Westminster." [N. IV., 142.]

The EARL OF LEVEN to the COMMITTEE OF WAR AT YORK.

1645, October 26, at 6 of the clock at night. Ripon.—"I have received your letter of this day, wherein you show me that Colonel Rossetter has altered his intention of marching this way to prevent the conjuncture of Prince Rupert with the King's forces at Newark, whom I cannot conceive to have any considerable body, the King having with himself 3,000 horse, being so oft defeat in several places. As for bringing of this army before Newark, I can determine nothing of that, till I know the resolution of the Convention of Estates now in Scotland. Withal clothes were very necessary for them against the winter, before they should be put upon such designs in this season of the year. I have received intelligence that the enemy are gone towards Skipton and . . . have sent a party thither, and whatever assurance they bring me I shall communicate to you. . . I have made all the haste I could to draw together 1,000 horse and 2,000 foot, which shall be in a readiness to execute what is most conducing for the safety of this country." Signed. [N. IV. 143.]

GEORGE HUTCHINSON and others to [GILBERT MILLINGTON].

1645, October 26. Nottingham.—"Though we forbear in our letter . . . to prescribe a proportion of match and powder to be sent to us yet . . . less than 100 barrels of powder and match answerable will not be sufficient for the managing of designs in these parts. And if this supply be not hasted—as also additional supplies from adjacent counties for the maintenance of the forces here—the country will be utterly undone, before the main . . . business can be enterprised.” Postscript.—Suggesting that supplying the ammunition from Lynn, Boston, or Hull would be the most expeditious way. Signed. [N. IV., 144.]

The EARL OF LEVEN to the COMMITTEE OF WAR AT YORK.

1645, October 26. Allerton.—Enclosing a copy of Sir John Browne’s letter of the 24th. Copy. [N. XII., 153.]

SIR ANTHONY WELDON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1615, October 27. Maidstone.—Stating that they had received the commands of the House to send the troop of horse sent under Major Webb to Basing on other service, and that they conceive that the ordinance for raising them only enjoins sending them to the rendezvous at Farnham with pay till they come there, after that to be wholly at the disposal and pay of the Hampshire Committee, representing that upwards of 9,700*l.* per mensem besides the Militia and other necessary charges is charged on the county, which not only disables them from undertaking new charges, but which they will not long be able to continue, and complaining that while these charges take away one-third of the revenue of the county, Sussex escapes with a 10th, 16th, or 20th part. Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 145.]

SIR WILLIAM VAVASOUR to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 27. Northampton.—Complaining that notwithstanding he had Sir Thomas Fairfax’s pass after the surrender of Bristol to go out of England, and Colonel Rosseter’s to return to Bath or Bristol, he had been taken prisoner near Daventry by a party from that garrison, and asking permission to go according to his pass, or to wait on him. (See Commons’ Journals, iv. 326.) [N. IV., 146.]

The EARL OF LOUDOUN, LORD BALMERINO, and HEW KENNEDY to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 28. Worcester House.—(Identical with the letter of the same to the Speaker of the House of Peers, which is printed in Lords’ Journals, vii. 668, where also is printed the declaration of the York Committee, a copy of which is here enclosed.) Signed. [N. IV., 147.]

SIR MATTHEW BOYNTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1645, October 28.] York.—Enclosing a copy of the last-mentioned declaration. (See Commons’ Journals, iv. 329). Signed. Seal. [N. IV., 148.]

The HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1645, October 28 and November 8.—Declaration touching their proceedings in the matter of Church Government, in reply to the Paper in form of a Petition of September 20th. (Ante p. 276.) After recapitulating the proceedings of the Parliament and the Assembly of Divines down to the latter’s petition of August the 8th, and the petition soon after of the Ministers of London and Westminster (namely, that of August 25th), to show the delay had not been attributable to the Parliament, and pointing out that the Assembly had been summoned only to advise the Parliament on such points as they were asked to give their opinion on, it proceeds: "Whilst we were in pursuance of our intentions and had almost brought them to a happy conclusion, some unquiet spirits, perceiving that . . . we were not like to knit up the power granted to the presbyteries . . . with a slip knot as they desired, whereby they or any other subject to the common corruptions of the sons of Adam might have liberty to vent their own passions and private interests or at least errors . . . under the stamp of God's holy ordinance . . . plotted and projected that pretended petition, wherein they intended . . . to muster up as it were an army of importunate petitioners against us, the multitude of whose hands they thought haply might prevail more on our affections and apprehensions, than the Divines had been able to do upon our reasons and judgements. Let any man now trace from step to step, from month to month, from day to day our proceedings . . . and then let him say, if he can, whether any delay or negligence can be justly charged upon us . . . unless that shall be esteemed a delay and fault that we do not exactly without any debate . . . confirm whatever the Assembly shall propose to us, because haply they are pleased to give it the name of Divine right. . . . The forwardness that we perceive already in the people to receive . . . from their ministers—as this pretended petition may testify—the impressions of Divine right in things of this nature is no great inducement to move us to put a boundless power into the hands of those that are so eager to claim it by such a right, as being once fixed in them also . . . the Parliament shall never be able to resume again . . . no, not so much as to regulate it by appeals or otherwise. The same principles that settle it in Presbyteries by Divine right . . . undermine the foundation of all appeals to the Parliament. We are not ignorant neither that in all ages those that have got that spiritual weapon into their hands have fought their own quarrels with it, and usually interested the honour and cause of God even in the least punctilios of their pretended jurisdiction and authority. And what troubles and mischiefs ensued thereupon, all stories, especially those of this kingdom, are full. Neither are we only . . . to look upon the ministers of the City of London—although neither there are they all of one kind—but throughout the whole kingdom also, nor are we in the making of laws to have respect only to the present times, but to those also that may succeed. We can in no wise admit that Christ hath invested the presbyteries with an arbitrary power to keep from the Communion . . . whomsoever they shall judge unworthy, and that the magistrate ought to confirm such a power to them by his civil authority. They say, it is no arbitrary power which is according to the will of Christ and hath the Scripture for its rule, but if it be left arbitrary to them to judge what is the will of Christ and what the rule of the Scriptures, the matter will not be much amended. They say Communion . . . doth not belong to any man neither as a man nor as an Englishman, and that therefore by abstention from it, he cannot be prejudiced in any of his liberties or rights . . . , but so long as England is Christian he that shall be rejected from Christian Communion will have little countenance in any civil conversation, and less capability of any employment or preferment either in Church or State. Besides we know . . . in the model of Church government, pretended to be according to the mind of Christ, that the civil magistrate is to second the censures of the Church with his civil coercive power, and not suffer them to be contemned. Will they then call the magistrate to strike and will they not allow him an eye to see, but only by the eyes of others, or will they raise up out of the dust again that exploded piece of Popery, that churchmen must declare persons heretics, and then by an implicit faith the magistrate must hang and burn them? that the ecclesiastical Consistories are to excommunicate them, and then without any further debate the magistrates must imprison them, fine them, banish them? Civil function . . . concerns only the civil magistrate, who is to give an account thereof to Him that intrusted him therewith, nor will He hold him excused, if He shall not find him use the like care and caution in the things that more immediately concern His glory and the Communion of Saints, which he doth in the things that concern the profit and politic society of men. . . . It is a maxim amongst all wise law makers to leave as little arbitrary as may be, and to make the rule, as . . . determinate as is possible, and we know that even in cases of treason . . . our law, though it acknowledge that divers cases may arise, which men cannot foresee, yet doth it not leave any indefinite power in the Superior Courts, but reserveth such cases to be declared in Parliament. And why should not the like be done, in point of keeping men from the Lord's Table? The ministers fear to partake in other men's sins, that shall communicate unworthily, and have not the Parliament as much and better cause to apprehend that they shall be partakers in other men's sins in keeping persons unjustly from that Sacrament . . . ? And who doth not know that if there should happen any such supposed case, which neither the wisdom of the Synod nor of the Parliament can foresee, that it is much better that some or few men should continue still in Communion till the case be determined than that the rule should be left so loose as haply might give occasion to the depriving of many worthy communicants . . . especially when as it is clear that neither minister nor any other is made guilty by communicating simply with an unworthy person . . . , but in so much as they shall not do their duties in removal of them, wherein they cannot be said to fail, while they are diligently pursuing it in an orderly way? What can the magistrate demand more reasonable . . . than only to see what it is he giveth his civil ratification to before he grant it?" There is less need to insist on this so much at this time, when Parliament is sitting and not likely to discontinue soon or suddenly, so that application may be had to them to supply anything proved by experience to be defective in the rule. If any one cannot satisfy himself while the matter is determining, he will be liable to the like scruples while the matter of fact is depending, and when the case shall be overruled on appeal contrary to his sense. "Therefore every man must be satisfied that he hath done or is doing his duty, otherwise he will certainly plunge himself into a bottomless pit of inexplicable or irremediable scruples. For the examples of other churches and countries it is more wisdom in us to take warning by the smart of others than by following their errors to cast ourselves upon the same rock that they did. . . . Reformation in most churches besides this . . . began rather by the influence of the ministers or the people, than by that of the magistrate . . . and therefore it is no great wonder if the magistrate lost some of his right, and the people much of their power. But the examples of Queen Elizabeth and King Edward the 6th, presented to us in the front of the pretended petition we shall willingly take for our patterns. And as we esteem it a great honour . . . that God hath held us worthy to endeavour to perfect what they so happily began, so shall we be careful to tread in the steps of our ancestors . . . in causing the Reformation to move from the Parliament, and carrying it on in a Parliamentary way; without prejudice to the freedom of the Parliament while it is in doing, and without impairing the just authority thereof when it is done, whereby to the magistrate will be preserved his right and to the people their power, whereunto we know no means so effectual as by leaving as little arbitrary as may be . . . for if it should be left to the discretion of every presbytery to keep whom they thought unworthy from the Lord's Supper, how far corruption might stir up men's spirits to quarrel and spurn against them, who knoweth? But when . . . they are not censured but upon such causes as upon solemn debate in Parliament have been judged just . . . all men . . . will be readier to submit themselves . . . and therefore if the ministers and presbyteries well consider it they will give us thanks for binding them to a prescript rule . . . that they carry before them the buckler of public authority . . . For the mischiefs . . . that are said to arise from the not settling of Church government we cannot deny but in matter of opinion and affection several differences . . . have risen, which we should wish rather than expect should have been otherwise, since it hath been incident to all reformatations . . . But we must not on the other side pass by the mercy of God to us that those evils have neither been so many or so great . . . as upon the motions and stirring of Reformation . . . have broken forth in Germany and other places, neither can we admit . . . that by reason of the not settling of Church government every man may do what seems good in his own eyes to the disturbance of the City . . . the City and other courts of justice in it being enabled to maintain the peace thereof and to restrain the licentiousness of any in it, if not so well, yet in a good measure without the aid of ecclesiastical discipline, and it were a great . . . dishonour to the Parliament and all inferior courts . . . if we should grant it to be true that for want of Church discipline abominable damnable and blasphemous opinions either have or may be broached or raised without control. That the hearts of any godly should faint through hope deferred, or that any should have cause to look upon Reformation as more difficult and improbable than ever, whereas it is confessed to be so near the birth we do not understand, but by what hath been declared we presume few are ignorant where or in whom the obstruction lieth, neither can we believe that any of our neighbours should be astonished at our delays, and least of all that our brethren of Scotland should have any cause so to be, since most other places had their interims and unsettled conditions in that respect much longer than we . . . and our brethren of Scotland, as they have been better acquainted with our diligence in this work from time to time, so they know that their own book of policy was hammering and perfecting in several meetings and general assemblies for almost as many years as we have been months about ours . . . Though we should seem in the space necessary for our deliberations . . . for the right settling of Church government to endure some inconveniences, yet better an inconvenience suffered for a while than a mischief settled for ever. Then might our enemies indeed scorn us as possessed with a spirit of giddiness if having so lately . . . taken all civil power from Ecclesiastical persons, and pulled down the High Commission we should presently set up a Higher Commission or a power more arbitrary in every presbytery. To shut the door against such as are grossly ignorant or notoriously scandalous is our duty and desire, but yet in such sort as we may not by that means give power to others to shut the door against pious and painful preachers or any others, because they do not agree with them to a hair, as we have had late and sad experience . . . We know how apt men are to make that blasphemy and heresy which is contrary to what they hold, and to esteem their actions heinous whose persons they hate. We see how ready men are in our days to brand one another with the names of incendiaries, covenant-breakers, children of Belial, and fighters against the kingdom of God, because they do not agree with them in every particular, or consent presently to what they desire in things which in their own nature are indifferent or at least very disputable. Needless separations we dislike, and therefore desire to take away all occasions of them by providing that the causes of excommunication shall be so just that none being thrust from Communion at discretion . . . may be forced to seek Communion where they may, because they are not suffered to enjoy it where they should. To such as plead for a toleration of all religious opinions we shall not give an ear, but cannot deny the modest request and reasonable relief of tender consciences, in whose behalf we shall stretch out the line of charity as far as the word of God and the peace of the kingdom will bear. . . . Who doth not see that by such comments as in that printed paper are made upon God's actions . . . what a door is opened to every one to make the like according to their several fancies? The assistance of men's persons in their several callings and of their prayers may further their own honest desires and our public endeavours, but such petitions as this will neither further their own desires nor others, and they will certainly hinder the work of God in our hands, which by His grace we shall hasten with all the diligence that may be, wherein when we shall have done our duties to the utmost, if all others shall not also be careful to do theirs . . . with a spirit of love and meekness we shall have little hope of the expected and desired issue of or of the ceasing of those schisms and troubles under which we labour." (Prepared by the Committee appointed September 20th, read a first and second time October 28th and November 8th, and not further proceeded with. RENÉ AUGIER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, October 31.—November 10. Paris.—“Sir Henry Compton . . . knowing I have the honour to be employed in this Court from both kingdoms” entreated me to write on his behalf asking that the pass for three months granted him on the 10th of September last to go to Spa might be extended for nine months as the benefit of the waters can be enjoyed only in summer. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 371.) Signed. Seal. [N. V., 16.]

The EARL OF LOUDOUN, LORD BALMERINO, and HEW KENNEDY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 1. Worcester House.—Enclosing the Earl of Leven's letter concerning the defeat of Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke Langdale. “We are further informed that the votes of both Houses concerning the Scotch army with the declaration of the Committee of York and others of the like nature are read in the churches and churchyards at public meetings, and free quarter is denied to the army, whereby many inconveniences are like to fall out. . . . Most of the soldiers of that army are naked, some wanting clothes, others walking without stockings or shoes and many of the officers are reduced to a very hard condition. We do therefore earnestly desire the Houses would be pleased to give order for some money to be provided for them with clothes shirts, stockings, and shoes, and to the counties to afford them free quarter in the mean time.” Signed. Seal. ii. SIR JOHN BROWNE to the EARL OF LEVEN.

1645, October 24. Carlisle.—Two copies. [N. V., 3 ; XII., 154.] Both describing the defeat of the forces under Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke Langdale. (Both are printed in King's Pamphlets, E. 308, No. 8.)

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 2, at 11 at night. The Suburbs of Chester.—“That party of horse and foot sent into Wales . . . have routed the enemy, taken 500 or 600 horse, and 300 or 400 prisoners, and slain a hundred in pursuit, which was most eagerly followed seven or eight miles by the Warwick and Derby Horse, who behaved themselves very gallantly. This victory was obtained near Denbigh, where our forlorn hope consisting of about 500 or 600 horse commanded by Captain Otter, a very brave and valiant man, was only engaged, the enemy having made choice of such a place of advantage that the body of our army could not come up to fight." Signed. Seal. [N. V., 4.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 3. Worcester House.—We intended to have sent the enclosed on Saturday, but forebore doing so as it contained little but the relation of a tedious journey. We now present it because "we understand some have spread insinuations to the prejudice of that party of Horse sent from the Scotch army to pursue the enemy, as if they had not all this time removed from their quarters, but the enclosed copy of a letter from General-Major Vandruske, Commander-in-Chief of that party, to the Earl of Leven, we trust shall vindicate them from so unjust an aspersion." Signed. Seal. [N. V., 5.] Enclosed:

[General-Major VANDRUSKE] to [the EARL OF LEVEN].

[1645, October 25].—"I divided my party and kept your Excellency's Regiment with me and joining with Sir John Browne marched over the river into Scotland another way than the enemy did, with intention to come before them and beat them out of Scotland again and I took the English regiments that came with me and some other forces of horse and foot of Cumberland to guard the passage of the river, that they might not come back again without being interrupted. And so I marched towards Annan, but the enemy hearing of my approach towards him and of some of my Lord Backlaughe's (Buccleugh's) men retreated back again towards the passage of the river where he came over. I, thinking myself very happy to have once the occasion to have met with him, marched as fast as I could after him, hoping that the English according to their promise would have kept the pass. But they, as soon as I was marched towards Scotland left their posts, and went their ways, and so by that means the enemy got leave to pass over again. I marched after them as fast as I could, and came over the main water by night time, but within three miles of that there was another river, which I could not pass being then sea water, and so I was forced to stay and give the enemy leave to be a great way before me. They be gone towards Millain Castle and by reason that our horses are extreme weary with so tedious a march I have sent a party to follow them, for I am not able to follow with all, seeing that I have marched so long, and in so evil ways that I believe no horse before have marched it." Copy. [N. V., 6.]

The EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to ONE OF THE ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS TO SCOTLAND [? SIR HENRY VANE].

1645, November 4.—Referring to the return of the Commissioners, the negotiations with the Scotch about their keeping garrisons in England, and the refusal to engage and the oppressions of their armies, the laying down of their commissions by Prince Rupert and his friends, who desire a pass, Lord Digby's defeat, and the letters taken in his coach at Sherburne, and the Western army. "By the multiplied blessing which God hath bestowed upon us our affairs are in a prosperous condition at present, but I shall still think them subject to alterations, unless we fix upon some more solid and settled way than yet doth appear to me." Copy. [N. XII., 156.]

The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

1645, November 6.—Paper. “Several votes of both Houses with declarations of private Committees being published in Yorkshire which very much reflect on the Scotch army and wherein all provisions and supply for their necessary subsistence is prohibited, on pretence that they are to depend upon the course settled for their pay by ordinance of Parliament, which affords them no entertainment, we have found it necessary before the Lord Chancellor’s return to Scotland . . . again earnestly to desire a speedy answer to our former papers, that we may have an opportunity to vindicate the Scotch army from the calumnies . . . cast upon them, and give satisfaction concerning any prejudices taken against them, and be able to give some account to the ensuing Parliament of Scotland of our proceedings here.” Signed “Jo. Cheislie.” [N. XIX., 127.]

The COMMITTEE OF THE NAVY.

1645, November 7.—Report concerning the Treaty with Denmark. (The purport appears from the votes thereon printed in Commons’ Journals, iv. 339.) [N. XVIII., 3.]

SIR THOMAS MAULEVERER and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 7. York.—Complaining of the extraordinary burthens and grievances the poor inhabitants groan under by many officers and soldiers of the Scotch army notwithstanding the care and readiness of the Earl of Leven upon complaints to redress the same. “By the continuance of that army in these parts the life-blood of the poor countryman’s estate is now drawing out, the little remainder of the oil in the cruse, and of the meal in the barrel is now spending, and before that be quite spent—which will be in a short time—we cannot but acquaint you that with sad thoughts we do foresee some fatal inconvenience is like to fall out by the discontented country. By means of that army lying among us a third part of the subsistence of the soldiery of this country is wholly taken away, and the residue much lessened by the infection of many places, there being at least three score towns of the most wealthy part of the county for trading in the West Riding visited besides divers parts of the North and East.” The supernumerary officers, whose three months are nearly expired, have also lain upon the country for the poor maintenance they have had, and have received no relief from the moneys designed by Parliament or otherwise. “By means of all which the country lies under inevitable ruin, and the soldiers are in continual mutinies and refuse to obey any orders. And as one instance that way . . . within these two days the officers and soldiers that were commanded on the design for the reducing of Skipton . . . did refuse to march till we were enforced to engage for their accommodation as for the rest of the army.” . . . We desire that it be represented to the House how necessary it is :

1. “That the Scotch army be speedily removed out of this county.
2. That the moneys ordered for the supernumerary officers and soldiers who are of this country be speedily sent down and that there be care taken for their maintenance for the time to come in regard they have deserved very well of the State.
3. That the excise of this county should be paid to the Treasurer of Yorkshire and disposed of towards the defraying of the public charge here.” (See Commons’ Journals, iv. 338.) Signed. Seal. [N. V., 8.]

M[ICHAEL] OLDISWORTH and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 7. Cardiff.—“The gentlemen of this county, whom truly we may not name without the ascribing much to their good affections and endeavours in the way of the Parliament having thought fit to address their bearer Mr. Philip Jones unto you with such instructions as being effected we conceive . . . may conduce much to the public good and not a little to the welfare of this county we cannot be . . . silent of his pains and good endeavours here. . . . We are yet . . . reasonable quiet in these parts, and shall assist to our utmost to preserve the country in such a condition. The gentlemen of best affection in Brecon, finding some untuneableness or not such reality as they had cause to expect in those parts have written to Major-General Laugharne to assist them with his forces, which he is with much forwardness drawing down accordingly and we doubt not but . . . may prove a very good and effectual expedient for the reduction of those parts, for the which, as they have desired, this country doth cheerfully offer them their best assistance, and is in preparation to come in under the command of Colonel-General Russell, a gentleman of much worth and hearty affection to the cause.” . . . Signed. [N. V., 9.]

Colonel WILLIAM SYDENHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 8. Melc[ombe].—“Being chosen a burgess . . . for this place I apprehend it my duty to recommend the care of the Garrison” to Parliament. . . . “Ability, faithfulness, and diligence will be requisite in a succeeding governor—especially till Portland be reduced which I have already blocked up.”—I beseech the House that the many well affected persons, from whom in case of great extremity I have borrowed, and also the artificers and labourers also who are not in a condition to forbear payment may receive at least some competent satisfaction. Seal. [N. V., 10.]

FRANCIS PIERREPONT, SIR WILLIAM LISTER, and JOHN ALURED
to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 8. York.—“By our former letter we desired some present course might be taken for ordering so much moneys as would make up the month's pay to the troops promised them by Colonel-General Poynts, which we conceive will amount to 3,000*l.* or thereabouts. They now refuse duty for want thereof which doth exceedingly trouble us at this time especially in regard we are in so happy a way—if this obstacle were removed—to clear this country of the enemy.” We again complain of the heavy burthens laid by the Scots on the country. We enclose Colonel Laseelles' letter and the articles for the surrender of Bolton Castle. Signed. Seal. [N. V., 11.] Enclosed:

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON and ROBERT DUKENFIELD to WILLIAM
LENTHALL.

1685, November 8. From my quarters in the suburbs in Chester.—In my last I advertized you of that victory at Denbigh, November the 1st, "when the enemies' whole body was routed and dispersed and at least 600 horse taken and brought away, but not altogether soe many prisoners. But soe many thereof as was brought into the countie I have herein enclosed sent a list of their names, the addition of which number to those wee had before, doth much add to our trouble and charge, having not only soe many as all our prisons and garrisons are capable of but wee are forced to disperse them into severall townes and parishes in open quarters as Stockport, Groppnall, Middlewich, Northwich, and Congleton, where wee are constrained to command the countrey to guard and secure them.

Of which trouble and charge it is humbly desired this countrey may be eased soe soone as conveniently may bee.

Wee are still endeavouring to draw a line from water to water on the Welsh side, wherein were it not that wee have received some interruption by a Royall Mount of the enemies lately made before wee tooke the suburbes, and also by the extreame fowle weather—which is soe violent that our men cannot endure out of doores—it might have beene in much more forwardnes then now it is.

Howsoever noe diligence nor endeavour shall bee omitted that may conduce to the advance of this service, touching which I know not what more to add. Since wee cast upp one mount at our bridg to secure it and another mount higher to confront their Royall Mount, they can receive noe reliefe at all, being our men are quartered at Poulford, Bretton, Diddleston, Eccleston and Brewers Hall which doth soe blocke upp that side that noe reliefe at all is brought or attempted to bee brought into the city, which on the Cheshire side is sufficiently begirt for wee keepe our guards close to their walls, and have cast upp and made such defences and brest workes against their gates and sally-ports as that there is noe great daunger of their issuing out to annoy and offend us in our quarters, wherein provision of victuals begin to bee wanting, this countrey being wholly exhausted and Lancashire and Darbyshire affordeing noe manner of assistance for provisions. And Wales which is most plentifully stored and lyes most convenient contributes very spareingly wherein the people remaine soe disaffected as that they rather prefer to bury and destroy or to carry away then that our men should partake thereof or our leaguer receive any benefit thereby.

The only expedient that I can propose for the prevention of what mischeife may ensue hereupon is: that either collonel Mitton may bee ordered to lye about Ruthin or Denbigh, who may send in provision of beeves, muttuns, and corne, out of that plentifully countrey to our leaguer here at Chester: or that there may bee a considerable partie sent from hence that may have authority to quarter thereabouts, and send in provision for the supply of our army here. . . . Postscript.—I received this enclosed letter last night from Helbree, being a copy of Mr. Dalbee his letter, touching the taking of Captain Bartlett's ship, which as I am informed is a ship of strength, and carries 20 pieces of ordinance with a little pinnace besides." Signed. Seal. [N. V., 12.] Enclosed:

WILLIAM DALBIE to [SIR WILLIAM BRERETON (?)].

1645, November 7.—Captain Clarke, commander of the Jostine, has just brought in here Captain Bartlett's ship, the Swan, and another, both stolen out of harbour. In Bartlett's vessel they have taken about 20 seamen, and 12 soldiers' firelocks set to keep her. [N. XII., 157.]

Colonel-General SEDNHAM POYNTS to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 9. Bingham.—“ Since the reducing of Shelford, it pleased God to assist us in the gaining of Wiverton House, the strength whereof moved me to give them fair quarter to march away with bag and baggage. . . . The foot ordered to me for the siege of Newark are not as yet come from the Eastern garrisons which retards my going against it. The garrisons of Welbeck, Tickhill, and Bolsover are dis-garrisoned by consent.” I enclose Colonel Bethell’s letter, who received many wounds at Rowton Moor, and the only man that stuck to me at my march out of Yorkshire to that service.

I make no question but the House will think on him and his deserts. For my own part I never received anything for intelligence, and am above 400*l.* out of purse. (See Commons’ Journals, iv. 341.) Signed.

EDWARD LEIGH and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 10. Stafford.—“ Upon Thursday last we sent out Captain Stone’s troope to Wrotesly House, a garrison which we have lately erected neare Dudley Castle. That night by theyr scouts they understood where Sir Thomas Aston quartered who was then upon his march towards Worcester, and on Friday morning Captain Stone’s and Captain Backhouse’s troopes from Wrotesly marched towards Sir Thomas Aston whom they overtooke betwixt Bridgnorth and Kidderminster and found him drawne up in a place of advantage with about an equall number of horse to them both, redy to fight with them. Our troopes made the first charge and were stoutly receyved, but at last they routed Sir Thomas Aston’s party and put them to flight in which Sir Thomas Aston often rallied with such as he could procure to stand, and engaged for the safetie of his men untill our troopes slew above twentic of his men upon the place, whereof Captain Aston, sonne to Sir Arthur Aston, and Captain Moore were two, and tooke prisoner Sir Thomas Aston himselfe, his lieutenant, cornet, quartermaster and corporalls, one Captaine George of Worcester, and forty troopers and eighty horse which they brought to this garrison.

We have herewith sent such papers as were found upon Sir Thomas Aston and such as he much valued. He had likewise with him a commission to be major-generall of horse under Prince Rupert and a commission for a regiment in the west, and an other commission to place a garrison at Kinnsbery or Nuneaton in Warwickshire, which we have sent to the committee for that county at Coventry.

There do yet remayne in this county three strong garrisons of the enemy; Lichfeild, Tutbury and Dudley Castles, which command a large contribucion weekly from a greate part thereof, and in the absence of the greatest part of our forces now at Chester leaguer where wee have according to command six hundred horse and foote, the enemy from these garrisons doe much oppresse the country neare them. The Brittainish monie required of us is 30*l.* per weeke and at present we are charged with provision for the leaguer at Chester to the value of 160*l.* per weeke. Two Hundreds of this county—which is divided into five Hundreds—are so much under the power of the enemy that we can get little or none of these provisions from them nor any pay for our owne souldiers but by force. And one of the Hundreds which is most contributory to us was wholly plundered and spoyled of above 20,000*l.* worth of goods by the king's armie this last spring when he had quartered ten dayes within five miles of this garrison, and the other two Hundreds are much exhausted by the free quarter of all those forces as passe this way towards Chester or northwards." To add to our straits, divers Delinquents, whose estates have in great part supported our Militia, are now endeavouring to compound at Goldsmiths' Hall. We cannot continue the forces we had raysed without some supply of money. We therefore ask you to inhibit three persons named from compounding at Goldsmiths' Hall and to empower us to compound with them and certain lesser offenders so as to raise 3,000*l.* Signed. Seal. [N. V., 14.]

JOHN ASHE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 10. Autree (Ottery).—"Touching elections as yet I have not proceeded far, only at Shafton and Weymouth, where for three vacant places there stood seven men, and so many speeches made against strangers and unknown persons that if three townsmen had stood they had carried it against all that interposed, for they rejected four able men and chose a poor simple townsman. He told them that by the Statute they ought to choose burgesses inhabitants, and I hear that they in Somerset are in like manner provided 3 or 4 for one place, wherefore I shall advise you to write your letters to Sir John Bampfild, Sir Samuel Roll and Mr. Nicoll, for if you send them writs they have more places than men to supply them. . . . Sir Samuel Roll complains that the country is not able to undergo the quarter of the soldiers and he that was so eager to have the army come into Devon is now as willing to be discharged of them—at least of the charge and burden of them. As for the business itself we may hope that the enemy may be vanquished without blows. A few days will show us their resolutions, for they have been kindly saluted by us, and many things offered to their considerations. Postscript.— . . . I find the General exceeding healthy and cheerful, I believe much the better for the company of his good Lady." [N. V., 15.]

SIR MATHEW BOYNTON, FRANCIS PIERREPONT, and others to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1645], November 12. gratuity for their willingness to march. We desire to know the pleasure of the House herein. Signed. Seal. [N. V., 18.]

Colonel MARTIN PYNDAR and HARCOURT LEIGHTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 13. Bristol.—In our last of the 8th of October we presented you with "the supply of the army from the country during the siege with our engagements for theyr payment making up theyr accounts and giving debenters for the same, which money the country are in daily expectation to receive, and not without need, theyr pressures being increased by the quartering of soldiers upon them ever since, and that upon free quarter which Collonell Birch doth require for the Kentish regiment who he sayth are wholly unprovided for otherwise. Some other new raised companies follow the same example which giveth opportunity to Major-Generall Skippon's regiment and Collonell Fleetwood's troope of horse to expect the like, who wee dare and doe check in that perticular, being within the ordinance of our instructions and acknowledge theyr care to observe our order therein, which those other will not looke upon, or be observant of. The like pressure the country complains of by the committees of Gloucester and Somerset, who urge for contribution without any consideration of theyr present and by-past sufferings; which maketh us bound to presse upon the honorable Howse of Communes for some rule for the countrie's satisfaction, the rather because we see the treasure of the army cannot admitt of such large allowance for arrears as these adjacent parts have justly due unto them. And the garrison of this city cannot subsist unless it be bounded with contribution from the Hundreds round about it: the welfare of which garrison is of noe small concernment and the reducing of it to a cheerefull obedience must be a worke of greate judgment, the people in our appearance expressing strange discontentes at the present; the qualifying whereof is one majore cause of our stay hoping to se Major-Generall Skippon soe settled that all things may be ordered to the rule of warr and it become to them a city of peace. We shall now make bold to present yow with an accompt of the being and walbeing of such wounded men as were left here, after the taking of the city and Barclay Castle, for whome according to the Generall's order, and our best judgment, we appointed an hospitall and placed therein soe many as the house could containe, with nurses and chirurgiens fitting for them, and as our number increased we added house-rooms and attendants to them: which though a house of great receipt yet not sufficient to hold all our foote soldiers, we caused the horse to be quartered in the country which hath byn one addition to theyr burthen, though not in giving free-quarter—which we have paid in money for the most part—yet in disquiet of theyr houses, distruction of theyr beddinge, linnen, and consumption of theyr firing, which hath byn the more enforced, the generallity of theyr wounds being fractures of bones and dismemberinges by plugg-shott from the enemy, expressing height of malice, rather than martiall prowesse. Sir, we bless God the greater number are returned to the army, well recovered. Such as have dyed of theyr woundes, we have seen decently interred, amongst whom were two gentlemen of worth for theyr valour in health, and Christian conversation in sickness, Majour Beibell of horse, Majour Cromwell of foote, both which had such honorable buriall as the place and theyr rank did require; for whose attendance in theyr sickness and buriall as for all other charges about the care, attendance, and diet, of the rest that were wounded, we have taken speciall care, and all that have gone to the Army wee have supplied with monyes and other accommodations to carry them to theyr conlers. What we now humbly crave of the honorable Howse is that as your bounty extended itself to those that were wounded at Naseby and left at Northampton; soe you will please to reach forth your arme of comfort to these poore men whose pay will be farr short to defray theyr charge and expenses in this theyr extremitie, whom we affirme—as eye-wittneses—to have been noe lesse patient in theyr sufferings and constant in theyr resolutions, then they were courageous in theyr undertakings. Sir, we have kept constant musters of them, and did constantly visit them, though to the hazard of our lives, in this place and time of visitation, and can thereby the better judg of theyr wants and deserts, for whome we pray there may be some such course taken, as may encourage them and all others that willingly offer us theyr lives in your service, and we shall assure you to see all theyr scores cleared and every of them paid whatever you shall thus order to the utmost penny. Hitherto we have issued monies to and for them out of the money collecting in this city towards the gratuity promised by the Generall which we finde a worke of difficultie to obtaine, and the more obstructed by a suddaine damp of money and in our judgments not unworthy your honorable consideration, which is the crying downe the ryalls of eight, which wee found plentifull and currant at 4s. 6d. a peece, when we first began this worke of collecting. But since the officers of the custome-house and excise refusing to take them at any rate, it not only daunteth the merchant who allirmes the passing of them to be much consistent with the being of trade, the meanes to bring money into the kingdome, which is now carried all into France, and will be more and more unless it be permitted to pass at 4s. 6d., but alsoe is a great prejudice to the publike and peticularly to our proceedings that whereas we did in eight dayes receive 300l. towards the gratuity, we have since spent twice soe much time and not received half soe much more and what we doe receive is in royalls of eight at 4s. 6d. which should to which we shall humbly adde that a report from London concerning the alteration of the present government of this citty and the passing an ordinance to fine and sequester them hath put a period to our hopes of making any considerable progress in the collection; some questioning our authority to collect, others threatening the present mayour, to bring him to a councell of warr for asseasing, and all neglecting the Generall's warrant for our proceedings herein. We have engaged ourselves to the citty, to give the parliament an account concerning the ryalls of eight and humbly crave it may admitt a debate and resolution, whether they shall pass currant at all and at what rates. For a result whereof, the citty much depend on us. How necessary it is that this gratuity be made good to the soldyer we refer to your wisdoms, and for effecting whereof we crave some additionall assistance; the goodes falling short of the Generall's expectation, even much of that which hath been apparent, and on which we did much depend being claimed by other powers, and intended to other purposes, such as the corral, which the committee of the Admiralty ord[er]ed us to secure for the East-India Companie's use. Soe are the ships, which we found here at the key when wee took the citty and accompted them ours. These are demanded by Captain Moulton and intended to be disposed by him for the use of the Admiralty which doth soe lessen our hopes to give any reasonable satisfaction to the army, that we cannot but present them to your honorable consideration. Many other hinderances there are to this worke which hapning [through] that libertie the officers take to themselves, who denying that assistance to us which your ordinance apoints doe dispose to their owne private use, whatever they lay hands on, which we are not able to prevent, being soe far distant from the Generall. Wee heartily wish to see Major-Generall Skippon settled here, of whom there is great need, both for our furtherance in this work, and reall preservation of the place which hitherto hath been—especially since Collonel Fleetwood went hence—much neglected. We shall only adde that for want of able ministers, Directories and orders for the use of the same, the people here sitt in darkness and the collegiate men still chaunt out the Common-Prayer booke to the wonted height and in private pariches they thinke of noe other discipline, here being hardly three sermons in the whole citty, on the Lords-day, and but one upon the last fast, the late holly-dayes being more solemnly observed then the Sabath." Signed. Seal.

THOMAS DUCKETT, THOMAS PARKER, and others to WILLIAM
LENTHALL.

1645, November 13. Cambridge.—“We have sent out our proportion of Horse and Dragoons for the straitening of Newark under the command of Major Gibbs, Major Haines, and Major Le Hunt," and borrowed great sums on the credit of the Ordinance of Excise to equip and pay them. The officers now require more pay, but we cannot raise more money out of our county without an ordinance. We "beseech you to consider the extraordinary charges this county has been put unto by alarms. It was agreed by the Committee of the whole Association at Bury that those frontiers to which alarms first come should make all possible defence . . . without regard of proportions, and that the whole charge should afterwards be borne by the whole Association. Upon hope of having this Ordinance long since . . . we got credit to borrow divers great sums" now long since due. "We had yesterday an alarm, and we wish the Houses would take notice how unable we are for want of moneys to make any considerable defence." Signed. Seal. [N. V., 22.]

[The EARL OF LOUDOUN and others] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 13. Worcester House.—The bearer Andrew Love and Donald Campbell about 18 months since delivered to the garrison of Londonderry 600 barrels of barley amounting to 600*l.* for satisfaction whereof these poor men have been petitioners to Parliament above a year. We therefore earnestly desire you to procure an order from the House referring these moneys to be paid by the Committee of Goldsmiths' Hall out of the fines of Delinquents' estates or otherwise. *Signature torn off. SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 16. Nantwich.—(Most of the letter, describing the taking of Beeston Castle, is identical with that to the Committee of Both Kingdoms, which is printed in Lords' Journals, vii. 719. It contains in addition the following. "The day before the Castle was yielded, great preparation was made and many carriages in readiness at Holt to relieve the same. It is humbly desired that the money and ammunition may be speeded down, and that there may be a supply of provisions more large and constant for the Liguor before Chester from the neighbouring counties and especially from Wales, whereby we shall be better enabled to carry on the work . . . Shropshire and Staffordshire have sent in some provisions already.") Signed. Seal. [N. V., 25.]

The Style, Audience, and Substance of the Oration of the POPE'S NUNCIO at Kilkenny.

1645, November 19. — "Dominus Johannes Baptista Renuccini, Dominus Archiepiscopus et princeps Farmanus, Apostolic Nuncio Extraordinary to the Confederate Catholics, had audience at the Castle of Kilkenny . . . where he showed his credentials and declared the reasons of his coming, which was only to establish according to his power the Roman Catholic Religion, to preserve their liberties, and lastly to serve their Prince and Sovereign, which he did express with a great deal of sense and feeling in these words viz. 'Et serenissimo vestro Principi meipsum devoceo' clapping his hand upon his breast, but yet that for their religion they should fight and maintain it against all the world. He said High Mass in the Church of Kilkenny upon St. Andrew's Day." [N. XV., 179.]

BARTHOLOMEW NICOLL, Mayor, and others to LORD ROBERTES.

1645, November 19. Plymouth.—"We did conceive great hopes of our relief ere this by the near approach of his Excellency's army, but it is now despaired of until the spring . . . for that we hear they are drawn into their winter quarters, so that our straits are the greater, and our siege the closer by apprehension of the frustrated expectation of our enlargement." We are in great want of money, the pay of the garrison being at least 1,000*l.* a week, and having no means to make up the payment for this week. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 355.) Signed. [N. V., 30.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 20. Chester Suburbs at my quarters in the Mayor's house.—Enclosing another copy of his summons to the besieged and their reply. "You may thereby guess that they either expect relief or suspect our weakness—unless stupid ignorance or stubborn infidelity possess them—or else trust in the strength of the city . . . Our siege is close, our soldiers resolved, our want is provision—one of the sinews of war—yet not so great, but it will endure a seasonable supply. . . I humbly recommend that the counties formerly allotted to contribute for our relief of victual may again be put in mind of former orders . . . The Counties of Stafford and Salop have contributed; from Derby and Lancashire—as yet—nothing, and very little from North Wales, from which we might expect a large supply, maintaining no soldiers but what horse are quartered amongst them." Signed. Seal.
Enclosed:

- i. A Copy of SIR WILLIAM BRERETON'S SUMMONS.
- ii. A copy of the reply thereto of LORD BYRON and CHARLES WALLEY, the Mayor, for himself and brethren.

"When we call to mind those antient and honourable privileges and immunities granted heretofore to the citizens and freemen of Chester for their loyalty to the Crown we cannot but wonder at your impertineney in urging that as an argument to withdraw us from our allegiance whereby . . . we are most obliged unto it, even in point of gratitude as well as conscience. The care you profess to preserve the City, and to avoid the effusion of blood is so much contradicted by your acts that you must excuse us, if we give credit rather to your deeds than words. As for the fire and sword and famine you threaten us with upon refusal of your unjust demands we must tell you that—blessed be God—we have less cause to fear them now than when you first sat down before this City and doubt not of the continuance of Divine Protection in the defence of this just cause, wherein our liberty, religion and allegiance to our Sovereign—whose service is unseparable from that of the kingdom—are so deeply engaged.” . .

iii. SIR WILLIAM BRERETON'S reply to the last.

“Your rebellion and obstinacy is not the way to preserve the antient privileges granted unto that city. I know not what action of ours contradict my willingness to save the effusion of blood and preservation of that city. But it matters not what those people—given over to destruction and make lies their refuge—write or pretend. By the tender of honourable conditions I have discharged my duty and conscience. Your blood be upon your head and not on your servant Will: Brereton.” [N. V., 31.]

1645, November 20. Colonel JOHN BARKSTEAD, Governor of Reading, to WILLIAM BALL.

1645, November 20. Reading.—“My scouts inform me that the King hath designed a plundering voyage into Middlesex, that he will march through Uxbridge, that he hath appointed a set number of horse out of all his garrisons in these parts commanding them to send off the best horse they have.” Postscript.—Desiring his commission from the Committee of both Kingdoms. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 350.) [N. V., 33.]

Captain ROBERT MOULTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 20. Bristol.—I should not “now have been molestious unto you, but that the exigencie of distressed bleeding Ireland—to whose relief that great senate hath never been wanting—doth now again implore by me their charitable assistance and helping hands, and if it cannot be from the general stock, yet from particular contributions of that mother city which hath already done so much by some recommendation from your Honourable House.” Am encouraged to do this “in regard that having but made a private motion to the same effect here in this city it hath taken so well that both magistrates and the private inhabitants have put to their helping hands for the relief of Youghal especially; and albeit the collection consisting from some in money, others in food or apparel . . . be not yet all come in, I have yet cause to hope . . . that it will not be altogether inconsiderable especially to such as who wanting all things a little of each will be some refreshment.” Am not without hope of the like from the city and county of Gloucester and sundry of the shires in Wales. Seal. [N. V., 34.]

Colonel CHRISTOPHER WHICHCOTE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 22. Windsor Castle.—Stating the steps he had taken to defend the Castle, and the miserable condition of his soldiers who were in arrears of pay above 80 weeks, and had only a month's pay these 16 weeks, and asking a supply for their wants. [N. V., 37.]

Major-General ROWLAND LAUGHARNE to [WILLIAM LENTHALL].

1645, November 24. Brecknock.—The gentlemen of Brecknock and Radnorshires make as full declaration for King and Parliament as the Counties of Carmarthen and Cardigan have. The enemy's horse are quartered about Pembridge in Herefordshire. I send a party this night to fall upon their quarters. I dare trust those two counties beyond Carmarthenshire, and they are exceedingly importunate I should remain a while among them, but my occasions require I first look upon Aberystwith and secure that country. Some hopes are given me that the Castle will be yielded if the Governor may have away his money. I have given passes to Gerard's sisters and Whitley's to depart the castle. I heard from Anglesey that Captain Clarke has taken a Fleming worth 3,000*l.* and Captain Barkley's ship with 18 guns, some brass culverins. (See Dalbie's letter, ante, p. 350.) The lady of Ruffarname was robbed of all her cattle lately by the Rebels. There is small hope of peace thence or that any Irish can come over. The Earl of Glamorgan is gone for Limerick to take shipping for France.

Postscript.—I desire Captain Pen may be ordered to keep the guns in Milford till I send for them. The party I sent fell into Colonel Gradie's quarters about midnight and slew six or seven, took prisoners near 20 and odds of 50 horse with their saddles and bridles. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 365.) [N. XII., 163.]

The PARLIAMENT OF ENGLAND to the PARLIAMENT OF SCOTLAND.

1645, November 24.—Demanding the surrender of Belfast. (Printed in Lords' Journals, viii. 14.) Two drafts, the first apparently the form ultimately adopted, the second that sent to the Lords. [N. XXI., 21, 22.]

Order of the HOUSE OF LORDS on MR. WATERS' PETITION, Report of the COMMITTEE OF SEQUESTRATIONS thereon, and Order of the HOUSE OF COMMONS on that Report.

1645, November 25, November 27, December 9.—(The orders are printed in Lords' Journals, viii. 11, and Commons' Journals, iv. 370, and all are printed in Grey, iii., Appendix, Nos. 35 and 37, pages 61 and 62.) [N. XIV., 89, 87, 88.]

Colonel NICHOLAS DEVEREUX to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1645, November 25.]—"The County of Wilts being late freed of the enemies' garrisons, I conceived it most advantageous to the State's service to place such forces as I have under command in the securest holds next adjacent unto the enemy who are powerful at Farrington and Radcourt, to prevent their incursions on these parts of Wilts. On Thursday last I sent a party of foot to Lechlade, which is near both their garrisons, whereunto were near quartered some Gloucester horse by agreement between Colonel Morgan and myself. Yesterday morning there came out a party of 30 horse from Radcourt to Lechlade to prevent us from fortifying there. Captain William Moore, whom I sent thither to command that party and some horse of Gloucester received them, and in the dispute which was but short, only Captain Aytwood on the enemies' side was shot through the thigh, whereupon they retreated calling our party damned rogues, &c., promising also to return soon with a greater party. The same night at 7 of the clock Major Duett with 120 horse and 100 foot went thither from Farrington to surprise—if he could—our party of foot; but our sentries firing at them gave the alarm to our foot. Whereupon Captain Moore drew out to a wall 60 musqueteers, who flanked the enemy as they came into Lechlade and after an hour and a half's hot dispute betwixt them and the enemy, they repelled them out of the town killing on the place six of them. Within half an hour after the Gloucester horse taking the alarm came into Lechlade, whence both horse and foot pursued the enemy, and close under Radcourt wall they encountered each other, where our forces killed of the enemy Major Duett . . . and twenty more upon the place, took 30 prisoners, whereof five of the King's life guard, one cornet, 26 horse, and about 60 fire arms. In this accident we lost not one man, only two hurt, not mortally, I hope." Shall send up by Wednesday "a most malevolent man, one Lieutenant-Colonel Nott, who hath been as mischievous in his actions as Duett. . . . He, as I am persuaded, drew the King's forces into our quarters at Cricklade, where we lately lost 40 horse. . . . We have concluded to place another garrison betwixt Farrington and Marlborough where most of the remainder of the horse and foot of Wilts shall quarter this winter to wait on the Farrington forces, as they come abroad." Signed. Seal. [N. V., 40, should be 38, and so entered in Index.]

SIR THOMAS JERVOISE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 26. Winchester.—Presenting "a true character of Sir Humphrey Bennett late pretended Sheriff of Hampshire, in which office he was both very active and very cruel, and also as he was a commander in the King's army even to the undoing of many a godly and honest man," submitting "whether so dangerous a person be fit to be suffered to go out of the kingdom, or to live at liberty in it," and desiring that "Nicholas Mason whom he now employs as his solicitor in London, an active and dangerous Malignant might be secured and examined." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 367.) Signed. [N. V., 39.]

SIR THOMAS JERVOISE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 27. Winchester.—Enclosing :

- i. Pass dated November 12th from Sir Thomas Fairfax to Sir Humphrey Bennett. Signed. Seal.
- ii. Pass of same date from the same to Nicholas Mason. Copy. [N. V., 40.]

SIR THOMAS JERVOISE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 27. Winchester.—Enclosing a report of two of the Committee sent to Dunnington showing how slowly the work goes on, and that Colonel Dalbier himself says that there is no possibility of reducing it this winter, and asking that, if Dalbier will not, some of the forces that took Winchester and Basing, which they hear are now advancing out of the West, may undertake it, and also desiring that the moiety of the Earl of Devonshire's composition, which had been bestowed on them, might be sent. Signed. [N. V., 41.]

SIR JOHN STRANGWAYS to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 28.—Enclosing his petition to the House, declaring he had relinquished all employment or service for the king since the 18th of October 1644, and asking that on account of his age and infirmities he might be allowed to be at large on his parole or on security. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 357.) Seal. [N. V., 42.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 28.—The besieged in Chester "remain still very obstinate, and do not seem inclinable to embrace any overtures made for their own preservation. They have not made many sallies on Cheshire side the water. But the most adventurous and gallant attempt that they ever made was upon Tuesday last. . . . We cannot imagine upon what confidence they are induced to persevere in this stubbornness, unless it be so that Sir Francis Gamull and Sir Richard Grosvenor . . . do enslave and inaw them hereunto, for, if it be true which I have heard, Sir Francis hath wounded one or two with his own hands that were suspected to desire the delivering up of the city, out of which we have heard very little. . . . They are very curious and scrupulous to admit our trumpets, or our drums into the city wherein it seems those that command do most cruelly tyrannize over the poor inhabitants, as they dare not attempt anything They are the rather encouraged by the Commanding Castle and by the Royal Mount which they have lately made which commands much on the Welsh side, and is very strong and almost impregnable." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 364.) Signed. Seal. Enclosed :

———— to [SIR WILLIAM BRERETON].

[1645, November 26.]—"Yesternight the enemy had a design to have burnt our bridge over Dee, and at the same time to have fallen upon our guards both of horse and beyond the water, and we verily believe, when we had been in that distraction to have sallied out upon all our quarters They about 12 of the clock in the night issued out on the other side with a strong party of horse and foot, forced in our sentinels to the higher Mount, and came and charged our men within less than carbine shot of the Mount, which our men maintained valiantly, and our horse guard kept their ground, our foot gave them good store of shot, and after some of the enemy were fallen and others shot, they caused [them] to retreat before their relief came up to them, beat them into their Mount. All this being in doing, at the same time two boats came up the river with the tide, filled with gorse, tallow, pitch, powder, and other combustible matter, and underneath them, and upon the sides of the boat in a frame of wood about twenty pieces of carbine barrels scarce full length and others pocket pistol length charged with powder and carbine bullets. The one of these came within six yards of the bridge and there fired, which gave a report like a peal of muskets, so that we upon the higher ground did verily believe they had been a company of musketeers. A soldier stept in, cast off the gorse and took the frame and brought [it] up with some six or seven of the pieces not discharged. The other boat gave fire over against my Lord's bowling alley, and fired all the gorse and boat itself. We have found one of their men slain within 40 yards of the Mount, and believe more are slain and wounded. We have found four or five of their hand grenadoes . . ." Copy. [N. V., 43.]

FRANCIS PIERREPONT and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, November 28. York. — Recommending Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Curren as governor of Skipton Castle, which they hope will be shortly reduced. Signed. Seal. [N. V., 45.]

FRANCIS PIERREPONT and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 2. York.—Stating that the Committee for War and the Committees for the several Ridings had been necessitated to engage themselves to the value of 4,000*l.* or more for clothing for the soldiers, and asking that some course might be taken for repaying them the same, stating that the revenues assigned for the forces allotted to that county were far too short to do the work, and were much weakened by compositions and many other defalcations by orders from the House, and that the necessity of keeping multitudes of supernumeraries, and the extreme pressures by the stay and frequent marches to and fro of the Scotch army have and will disable them to satisfy even those of the last model, and asking for further supplies, and that some special course be taken for the maintenance of the garrisons of Scarborough and Pontefract Castles, which are particularly appointed by the House and are above the number of those appointed by the Ordinance for the County. Signed. Seal. [N. V., 46.]

The KING to the MARQUESS OF ORMONDE.

1645, December 2. Oxford.—(Printed in Carte, Life of Ormonde, iii. 433.) Copy. [N. XII., 167.]

Colonel EDWARD POPHAM and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 2. Ilchester.—The Gentlemen and Freeholders being summoned here on the 1st to elect Knights of the Shire on the morning of the appointed day the High Sheriff "came not, nor sent the writ, but his County Clerk, who declared that the High Sherrive had commanded him to adjourn the County Court to a small village called Queen Camell four miles distant, because of the sickness at Ilchester. Against which the gentlemen and freeholders present did all unanimously—except one—protest, whereupon the County Clerk did forbear to adjourn until George Horner, Esq., eldest son to the Shreive who had declared himself to stand for to be one of the Knights, did after eleven of the Clock, come into the Court and required the County Clerk to adjourn the Court, who thereupon pronounced the adjournment without mention of any time or place whereunto it was adjourned, and the freeholders being to a very great number present in Court did generally protest against it and declared their resentment thereof, as a breach of the freedom of their election, and an occasion if not design to hinder their free choice of Colonel Stanley and Mr. Harrington, for whom the greater number by far did publicly profess themselves, and many of them did not stick to say that upon the same reason the Shreive might adjourn this day to another place he might the next day change that place, and so tire them out of their attendance, and therefore refused to wait further upon the service. Some of the gentlemen and freeholders present . . . did despatch two several messengers to the Shreive to have altered his intention and to have drawn him to Ilchester, assuring him there was no danger . . . But the Shreive's first answer was that he had freeholders enough at Queen Camell to proceed to an election, if those here did not attend, and towards the afternoon sent another message that he did give us notice that he had adjourned the County Court at Queen Camell until eight of the clock the next morning, but before this message came many of the freeholders were returned homeward, and those that remained refused then to attend. These carriages seem to us to have no legal warrant and to entrench upon the freedom of elections and the due execution of the writ is hereby frustrate, as we humbly conceive, besides the great scandal and discouragement given to the well-affected party." We therefore humbly pray that a new writ may be speedily sent down with directions for a lawful summons and fair election at a certain time and place, and not to be interrupted by any adjournment, and that all further proceedings upon the present writ be vacated. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 369, 565.) Signed. [N. V., 47.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 3. Chester Leaguer.—“The increase of the enemy's wants is the greatest ground of our hopes, they beginning now to be more pinched than formerly and therefore are less active. However they have not as yet admitted of any parley.” . . . Signed. Seal. [N. V., 48.]

SIR THOMAS JERVOISE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 5. Winchester.—Representing “the sad condition of our country, still groaning under the oppressions of those of our own forces designed for Ireland, whose outrages, pressures, and plunders are numberless, of which we might suspect the common soldier only culpable had we not read these informations here enclosed." (Printed in Grey, iii. Appendix No. 38, p. 64.) Signed. [N. V., 49.]

Enclosed:

i. Information by WILLIAM KING and his wife of Up Clatford.

1645, December 2.—That some of Colonel Jephson's soldiers said first that if they could meet any of the Committee anywhere out of Winchester they would take from them their clothes, horses, and moneys and laid many vile curses upon them, secondly that the Parliament was at great charge to send them to Ireland, but they intended no such matter, for many of them that are there already are gone to the Irish, and if they should go some of them should do the like, thirdly they hoped the King's party would not be long absent from those parts and then they should have employment here, and that they robbed several persons coming from Collingborne fair. [N. XIV., 106.]

ii. Deposition of JOHN MARKS, one of the Collectors of Sequestrations in Andover division.

1645, December 5.—Stating that his servant Floyd having been taken prisoner by Major Gifford in Colonel Jephson's regiment, he went to ask his release, but was himself searched, his linen and money taken, and himself detained prisoner half an hour, that the Major said he was a rogue and so were all the Committee, and that the regiment so oppresses the county that the people think themselves in a far worse condition than in the time of the king's garrisons there. [N. XIV., 105.]

THOMAS CLARKE to Colonel TERRILL.

1645, December 6. Aylesbury.—Concerning a letter directed to Major Shilburne in Aylesbury found on the Bicester carrier and brought to Captain Phipps, who opened it, and found it desired "the Major to send the enclosed to Borstall, . . . which likewise . . . they read. The contents were to a gentlewoman in the said garrison, of the same name as the Major there is of and therefore supposed to be his wife to advise her . . . to come away from thence for that the town would shortly be besieged, and that if she did come he would serve her in what he might &c., which Captain Phipps and his officers reading and finding both the letters subscribed by Colonel Fleetwood yet because directed to his Major thought good to deliver to him . . . concealing from him that he knew anything of the contents." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 370.) Seal. [N. V., 50.]

Colonel THOMAS HERBERT to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 6. Chepstow.—"I was desired by the General to assist Sir William Fenton—the Lord Inchiquin's agent into England—to procure money and provisions for the reliefe of Youghall . . . According to which order . . . from Lyme I despatched 45 tun of beef, bisquit, and cheese, and from Bristoll a like quantity with above 1,000*l.* in money which Colonel Pindar and Mr. Leighton upon the Gen[eral's] letter furnished. In pursuit wherof I rode into Monmouthshire hoping to fynd the affections of that county forward in a work so charitable and necessitous, but am exceeding short of my hopes, for the Gloucester party that came this last week to Monmoth and marcht hence to Abergavenny, to Usk, to Chepstow and so to Monmoth without stay anywher save to a fruitless summons of the well-affected about Abergavenny—which has cost them deere synce by the enemyes falling into that towne from Ragland with four hundred horse and foot where they kild three and have carryed away divers well affected gentlemen and others—the design being to garrison a house three miles from Ragland, but not suting for that purpose, Collonel Morgan returned with all his horse and foot to Gloucester. Synce which tyme the enemy has raged more than ever, and so overpowre the country with their horse that they awe the whole shire and raise their contribucion at leasure, infinitely to the terrour of our freinds and the daily hazard of Monmoth and Chepstow—the two keys and most considerable garrisons of South Wales—which are likely to fall suddenly into the enemyes' power if such a number of false hearted cavaliers be contynued there under the governors who are sensible I suppose of the danger but know not well how to remedy it of themselves without some advice from the governors of Bristoll and Gloucester; which my cosen Herbert the knight of the shire is sufficiently convict of and will represent, I doubt not, and that in season. Being of the comitte for this county I was obligd to this march of thers and have upon all occasions communicated the distresse of Yonghall to many of them here who have subscribed largely towards their releife for to have given three hogsheds of beefe, 120 bushells of wheat and forty cheeses, which they are thrashing and will with all possible speed send to Cardiff, whither I am gone to raise all there I can, and hope with much more, advantage, being that I may ride there safely and the gentlemen send in their provisions, which in Monmothshire could not be effected. . . .

Postscript.—Yesterday upon the enemyes' beating up our quarters at Abergany and Rosse—wher we lost some horse--the rumor was all over this county that Monmoth was surprized by the Ragland foot. Upon which the Governor of Chepstow drew all his men—scarce 100—into the Castle leaving the towne desolate, so that had the enemy come they might have entred without resistance. You see therefore in what too poore condition that place is in and so full of Malignants that Ragland has intelligence thence daily. The Earle of Worcester has a new commission to be General for the King. Abernswith Castle is taken we heare, and puld down." Signed. Seal. [N. V., 51.]

JOHN BLAKISTON, Mayor, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 10. Newcastle.—Enclosing a particular of the Hopewell and her goods, with the examinations of some of the crew. Seal. Enclosed:

- i. The particular referred to, which adds nothing to Richard Etherin's deposition of the 18th, post, p. 329, except the names of some of the Scotchmen on board, viz. Bishop Sandscarff's son, Captain Blackehall, Lord Maxwell's brother, one Henderson, Colonel Cockburne's servant, and Captain Meldron.
- ii. Depositions by three of the crew. That of NICHOLAS MURSETT, gunner, contains all the facts additional to those stated in Richard Etherin's deposition. He sailed in May year from London in the Hopewell of London, Captain William Ayre, Master, and Captain George Martin, owner, as a man-of-war for the Parliament, and went first to Falmouth, where the Captain took a Letter of Marque from the King in June. They cruised till Michaelmas, when they put into Luckestadt and took divers vessels, of which the particulars are given. The rest of the deposition is to the same effect as that of Richard Etherin. [N. V., 66.]

Captain ROBERT MOULTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 12. King's Road, from aboard the Lyon Regis.—Being yesterday at Cardiff, the Governor gave me leave to take the copies of some intercepted letters, which are here enclosed. "There are many men which I pray heartily that they might be removed . . . There is Shreene Thomas and his father and parson Edwards at Swansea, and there is Major-General Stradling and the Bishop of Armagh at St. Dannett's (Donat's), a place of great consequence, a strong castle and comes to the waterside, and there is the Bishop Pearce seized on but set at liberty upon bail, and, if I be not mistaken, Bishop Manwaring. In the sircuit (circuit) they are all very violent, which doth discourage the well affected, and being all knit in sanguinity no course is taken with them. Colpeper, whom you were pleased to send for is now not to be found, it's said is gone for London." . . . (See Commons' Journals, iv. 378.) Signed. [N. V., 52.] Enclosed :

i. RALPH [LORD] HOPTON to SIR B. THROCKMORTON.

1645, November 27. Truro.—"His Highness and all your friends about him are well at their winter quarters at Truro. The enemy has pretended to make some quarters the East side of Exeter and now Fairfax and Cromwell are drawing back towards the East, their army being much wasted with the sickness. I long much to hear of the state of my friends in Wales. Lord Garrard, I hear, has left the King, and now if friends in those parts would address themselves in some considerable number to the Prince I am confident he would dispose his counsels by all possible means to assist them. Let me hear from you what may be probably expected from them."

ii. The SAME to HUMPHREY MATHEWS, his cousin.

ROBERT WRIGHT to OLIVER ST. JOHN.

1645, December 12-22. Paris.—“The Queene of England is with all diligence preparing for recruits of 8,000 foote to be sent from hence in the spring as vollonteers under the command of the Marshall of Gramond—who was with her on Munday last—and to bee payed from hence 5,000 pistoles a moneth, 3,000 by the eccleasiqtiques assembled and 2,000 by the queene of France and Cardinall underhand, and for their setting foreth 30,000 pistoles are to be rayseed upon the farmers of the gabels for salt. They are to be transported by shippes from Holland by favoure of the Prince of Oring who hath faithfully promised all other assistance. The Queene had assurance of all this given her four dayes since by the commander Soueray—one of the Cardinall's great confidants—being sent to her from him and the Queene of France. The Cardinall indeavours by all meanes to oblige the Queene of England. He is now ill at Rome, and not well assured in France where the distempers are likely to increase. Perhaps he intends England for his retreat. He is not to be trusted by you. The life of this busines consists—so they say here—in the speedy dyspatch, and that they may be carely sturring is laboured by all industrie. The King is resolved to give the Scots or Independents or boath their condicions, if by that meanes he can ingage them against the Presbeterians. The desires of the first are daily solicited at St. Germaines by Mr. William Murray of the King's bedchamber now their agent. It behoves to have a vigilant eye to them and to Holland from whence Doctor Goffe—now agent there deputed by the Lord Jermyn, extraordinarie ambassadour as well for these countrys as France—gives great hopes of assistance. For remedy of all and for youre owne security, you are to divulge your resolucions for the setting forth of forty saile of men of warres, to cause all your colliers shippes to be doubled maned, halfe deckes to be fitted in them, that each ship may carry ten or twelve gunns, but above all to use all possible meanes to gaine the Prince of Wales unto you for which purpose 100 thousand pounds will be well employed with condicions to the content of Culpeper and those others that have power to serve you therein. Generall Goring may be wrought upon. Both he and his father are much unsatisfied with the Queene and she with them. The Lord Percy and Lord Willmot are practising against you. Call them home. The first indeavours to compound the governer of Garneesy Castell, which you may prevent by geveing the governer his condicions. The peece is worth getting. Mrs. Nevile, the Queen's convert—to be published at her retourne—is now in London, where Mrs. Jermyn, the wife of Mr. Thomas Jermyn, will also sudenly bee. Sir William Davenant, the poet—now the great pirott—and he that was the agent in projecting and bring[ing] up the northerne army three yeares since, would be putt into the exceptions for life. No one man hath don you more hurt, and hath been a greater enemy to the parliament. Mr. Walter Steward gives weekly intelligence from London and 'tis very straing you prevent not this weekly intercourse of letters from the King to the Queene and from her to him by the way of London and under the covert of Sabran and the like." Remains of Scal. [N. NATHANIEL BURNAND concerning the scarcity of godly and able ministers, the need for speedily sending the Directory to the several ministers that so "the Common Prayer Book may be called in, seeing it is and hath been the nurse of an idle and non-preaching ministry, &c." [N. V., 57.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 13. Chester Suburbs.—"We have had several strong alarms of the enemy's great preparations for their relief, in the belief whereof we have been the more confirmed by letters intercepted, one whereof is under Sir W. Vaughan's own hand . . . which was an answer of a letter sent to him from the Governor of Dudley Castle, desiring some assistance to take in Rotchlie (Rugeley) Garrison lately erected in Staffordshire. Their extremities in the City are very great and their expectations of relief are no less, whereby they are encouraged in their obstinacy. We have made use of some mortar pieces, which we lately borrowed from Shrewsbury whereby great execution is done, and on the 10th . . . in the night fired in three several places in the city and killed and wounded divers in their beds, yet this nothing at all works upon them, but they seem still to remain as stubborn as formerly, so as we judge it more easy as yet to fire and destroy then to reduce and subdue this strong city. The enemy hath prepared another fire-boat to set on fire our bridge over the river, for prevention whereof we have chained over the river, and keep an extraordinary strong guard." Signed. Seal. Enclosed:

SIR WILLIAM VAUGHAN to the GOVERNOR OF DUDLEY CASTLE.

1645, December 8.—“Having received his Majesty’s commands for to attempt the relief of Chester, desiring to know of you what horse and foot can be conveniently spared for this present expedition, I being here now waiting for further orders from his Majesty, being willing to do you any lawful favours but for the present cannot spare any.” Copy. [N. SIR HENRY VANE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 13. Durham.—Enclosing a schedule certifying the division of the county into six distinct classical presbyteries and the persons nominated for each, and further certifying that of the many other churches in the county divers are destitute of any ministers, while the ministers in others are some so weak, and others so scandalous or malignant or both that they cannot as yet recommend any more to be added to the several classis. Signed. Seal. [N. V., 59.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 15. Chester Suburbs.—“Though you may from other hands have received advertisement of the enemy’s drawing together from Oxford and divers others of the King’s garrisons, yet . . . we have thought meet to send you the enclosed . . . true copies of letters received from Coventry and Evesham, and of an intercepted letter of Sir Wm. Vaughan’s intended for the Governor of Dudley Castle. All these hint the enemy’s intentions to attempt the relief of Chester for their better encouragement wherein they have—as we are informed—lately received letters from the Earl of Glamorgan assuring them that he hath 10,000 men ready to transport, and hath sent 200 barrels of powder. But we hear not as yet of the landing of the powder. Nothing seems to be more probable than that the enemy will engage deeply for the relief of this city, which hath held out so long and so resolutely . . . —this being of greater concernment to them than all the rest of the holds they possess in these parts of the kingdom—. Whereof we doubt not but that you will be so sensible as that you will endeavour to expedite to us such timely and considerable assistance as our condition requires . . . Postscript.—We have advised the Lord Leven and General Poynts thereof.” Signed. Seal. Enclosed:

THOMAS ROUS and others to SIR WILLIAM BRERETON.

1645, December 12. Evesham.—“A body of horse and foot, they say themselves 2,000, but others which viewed them 1,000 or 1,500 came in yesterday at 11 o’clock to Stow-on-the-Wold some ten miles from this garrison. There and thereabouts they quartered last night. They talk of marching for Worcester which is not improbable, and the rather because Sir William Vaughan and those horse which stay formerly about Worcester are not yet advanced. It may be they intend to join and so pass on towards the relief of Chester. We have sent to Colonel Morgan—with whom most of our horse are at present—to advertise him of this body . . . Postscript.—“The Lord Northampton commands the party from Oxford.” Copy. [N. V., 60.]

Colonel CHRISTOPHER WHICHCOTE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 16. Windsor Castle.—Enclosing examinations concerning the insolency of the enemy from Wallingford plundering your friends and fetcheng them away prisoners within two miles or less of Windsor, which he is not only unable to prevent, but is almost incapable of subsistence himself. Signed. Enclosed :

Deposition of ADREY LYDGALL, of Sippinham, in Burnham Hundred, in Buckinghamshire, two miles from Windsor.

At about 7 p.m. on the 11th nine or ten soldiers from Wallingford came to her house and after remaining an hour seized her husband William Lydgall, and five horses and three more from John Foord a neighbour of hers with pistols swords and a fowling piece,—three of which horses and the pistols belonged to troopers of Colonel Martin's Regiment quartered in their houses—all which with two of the troopers they carried away to Wallingford, where her husband remains a prisoner till the arrears of all such taxes they pretend to be due from that parish be paid and 10*l.* more to the party that fetched him away. Mrs. Foord sent her servant to Burnham to acquaint Lieutenant Ryder quartered there with a party of horse that some Wallingford soldiers were at Sippinham, and had carried away divers horses, and though a cornet and other troopers of Colonel Martyn's gave him information of the enemy's being in those parts and offered to join him in pursuit he refused to go pretending that he had a charge of money to look after, and would keep the house where "he and divers others of his troopers were found typling in a very deboyce manner." She desires that some way may be found by the Parliament for her husband's relief and liberty and for reparation for her horses and damages. Copy. Two other depositions follow deposing to various of the facts above stated. [At the end of N. V. Not numbered.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 17. Chester Suburbs.—Acknowledging with thankfulness the care of the House in expediting the last 10,000*l.* assigned for the payment of such forces as should be necessarily employed in reducing Chester, and stating that though that sum when first granted seemed competent yet the great endeavours to raise the siege have occasioned such accession of forces and the continuance of it has been so much beyond expectation that without further supplies they were in no way able to carry out the work, and giving particulars of their expenses and of the exhausted condition of the county. Enclosed is a detailed account of how so much of the 10,000*l.* as came to the county was employed. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 384.) Signed. Seal. [N. V., 62.]

ROBERT WRIGHT to OLIVER ST. JOHN.

1645, December 18–28. Paris.—“The accorde so much desired betwixt the King and Scots is with all dilligence persued by Mr. Wm. Murray and the Queene is very confident it will succede. The party of Montrose in Scotland will not hinder it, for if he be not sucesfull and of better consideration he may be offered uppe there to strengthen the party. The King is resolved alsoe to give the Independentes their conditions alsoe, besides the Lord Goring is now at St. Germaines and gives good hopes of a succesfull army out of the west in the spring which with the recrutes promised out of France may give you great diversions. He is now preparing for his cure—which is no other then for the pox—and promises to be backe in the west within two monethes. The queene is much pleased at the answer the prince gave to the answer of his letter by Sir Thomas Ferfax inviting him to his army: ‘Rogues: Rebelles; are not they content to be rebels themselves, but would have me in their number.’ You see how he is instructed, and his councill having voted that in case he should be prest to goe out of England, that he come not to France, but to Holland or rather to Denmarke, you must by all meanes keepe him in the kingdome, and if possible—by giving any conditions to those about him—to gaine him unto you for nothing can give you more security then his person. The treaty for the generall truce at Mounster goes on and in the opinion of wise men may succede for indoutedly the queene of France desires nothing more—what mine soever she makes—and that wilbe the master peece of the cardinall, wherein he laboures hartely, and if it should so fall out, you having the warre on foote, be confident to make England the seate of warr for all Christendome. You know how doutfull the chanch of warr is, and the security of religion, lawes, liberties, your lives and those of your wives and childrens must be in a settlement which must be don either by acorde with the king—for suffer not the Scots to make their peace and then be the mediatours for you as they pretend to be—who if once gained may prove as much for you as now against you, or by gayning the prince, one of which must not be neeleeted. Yet for your more security, the armyes must be very early in the feild this spring, and the fleet likewise at sea for ’tis that only that can keepe the French in any reasonable neutrality. If the comisioners be come from the king, make use of them, for here is much industry to keepe the warre on foote, which is most desired by the French and Catholiques who will underhand speedily give supplies both of men and munies; and you know reveng is sweet, which is only laboured and desired by those at Saint Germain’s, and there’s a starre that hath to great influence upon the king.” [N. V., 62, should be 63.]

Colonel THOMAS MORGAN to THOMAS PURY.

1645, December 18, at 12 at night. Hereford.—Narrating “the taking in of this garrison though with great difficulty in regard of the season of the year and the deepness of the snow which was above a foot thick. My forces consisted of 1,100 horse and foot, and Colonel Birehe’s forces of 900 foot, which being joined upon Monday we marched from Gloucester, and thought to have reached Hereford that night, but our foot soldiers were so much spent by the time we came within six miles of Hereford that they were able to march no further, so was constrained to draw back towards Gloucester that the enemy here should take the less notice of any design. Upon Wednesday night we marched toward it again, and drew up our forces within musket shot of the town under a hill about an hour before day, and before sun rising made our attempt, which God did effect for us with very small loss. Divers of the enemy was slain in the streets and the rest taken prisoners. We have already in custody 120 lords, knights and gentlemen officers in commission which are to be sent to Gloucester.

The most of them are Papists. For common prisoners I am not able as yet to give a true list, nor of the arms, only 11 piece of ordnance, and a reasonable quantity of all sorts of ammunition. By this the Pope's nest in Hereford is spoiled. . . . Postscript.—Captain Temple had the honour to command the forlorn hope of horse and behaved himself very gallantly." [N. V., 64.]

JOHN BLAKISTON, Mayor, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 18. Newcastle.—Enclosing the examinations of six seamen taken in the ship Hopewell that was driven ashore at Cammes, near Blith, and stating that the Earl of Leven came thither on the 16th, and that it was likely he would stay there that winter. Seal. Enclosed:

Five depositions by six seamen of the Hopewell. The fullest is that of Richard Etherin, to which the others add nothing. He, being shipwrecked on the coast of Jutland, begged his way to Luckstatt (? Gluckstadt) where he joined the Hopewell, Captain Ayre, Master, and shipped on board her September 30th, 1644. They stayed there till March 31st, when the ship went to Hamburgh, and stayed there till the end of May rigging and revictualling the ship, which then went to sea as a man of war with a commission from the King. They took two prizes, a Dover and a Sandwich man, and returned to Luckstatt the end of June, and stayed there till November 24th, when they set sail laden with 30 single and 15 double barrels of powder, two dry fats of pistols and belts, three baskets with rapiers and swords, and some carbines, and a great quantity of match. He conceives they were laden by the Lord Ethen and Sir John Cockram, and the Master told him they were to carry the said goods to Aberdeen in Scotland. There were eleven passengers in the ship, all Scotchmen, and including the Captain the crew were seventeen. Being caught in a storm, and the ship being very leaky, they were found to run ashore at Cammes in Northumberland, where the Governor of Tynemouth Castle seized on the ship and ammunition and nine pieces of ordnance, the armament of the ship, which was one of 80 or 100 tons burden, and sent the crew and passengers as prisoners to the Governor of Newcastle. JOHN WADDON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645, December 30. Plymouth.—"On Saturday last a party of 500 commanded musketeers and 120 horse—most of them of the old Train Band men of the country—fell on Kinterbury work, four miles from the town, which they as soon took as attempted, it being a very strong work, but neither armed nor manned, 17 being only in it, who had quarter given them. From thence they marched to St. Budox's Church, when the enemy being near 100 horse and foot fought valiantly and stoutly for an hour's space, in which encounter we lost worthy Major Haines—a great loss—, and four or five more, and 16 hurt or thereabouts, but in conclusion Lieutenant Vaghan, Captain-Lieutenant to Sir Edmund Powell, forced them horse and man into the church, and though shot through the thigh entered with them, to whom with much ado and great pains of the commanders the common soldier gave quarter for their lives, but plundered them to their shirts. Lieutenant-Colonel Crocker commanded the party." . . . Enclosed is a list of the prisoners, 105 in all, and 45 horses. [N. V., 70.]

JO[HN] R[USHWORTH] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 4. Tiverton.—“A party was sent from Chidley house to Southams, took four constables, with the Prince's proclamation, a copy whereof I send you enclosed. . . . Some that come from Plymouth side say the Plymouth men have taken a church and 150 men of the enemy in it. . . . The country rises but slowly for the enemy, and I believe will vanish as fast as they appear. The weather now breaks, so we shall have opportunity to do something upon them. The General hath written to the Committee of the army about recruits, &c. The sooner that is settled, the sooner shall we march east.” . . . [N. V., 73.]

J[OHN] R[USHWORTH] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 5. Tiverton.—Enclosing a letter from Plymouth. “We are preparing to meet the enemy and doubt not to prevent their design. The clothes are come to Weymouth. I hope they will come seasonably to comfort the poor foot in their march.” Enclosed:

Colonel JAMES KERR and others to SIR THOMAS FAIRFAX.

[1645-6], January 1. Plymouth.—After describing the taking of Kentarbury work and St. Bodeaux church (see above). “We hear certainly the enemy is advanced with 4,000 horse and 1,500 foot to Ashburton and their design is within 6 days to beat off your forces on this side the river Ex, and the enemy is to sally out according to order with 2,000 horse and foot at the same time. The enemy hath provided 2,000 bushels of wheat and other provision to carry into Exeter.” (See Commons' Journals, iv. 401.) Copy. [N. V., 74.]

— to —.

1645[-6], January 5.—“For Mr. — it's acknowledged he was an extreme man for the King's party. But now he confesseth himself thoroughly convinced and will regain all by-past errors to do the Parliament service. To this purpose he informeth, that the King's intentions and councils move him to subscribe to all the Parliament's desires to come up to the Parliament, to put all things seemingly into an orderly and peaceable way till an opportunity be offered by our divisions and discontents to overturn all, and that he will recompense that losing party, which now suffer by compounding with the Parliaments. I shall send him up to the Committee of both Kingdoms to reveal some secret plottings and contrivances in Kent, which ought to be privately handled. It were not amiss for the City to take notice what Kentish gentlemen resort there.” Extract. [N. XII., 170.]

[LORD CULPEPER] to [JOHN ASHBURNHAM].

[1645-6], January 6, 6 at night [so at foot, at head January 12. probably the date it was intercepted or deciphered].—“By the Lords' (of the Council) to his Majesty you will see the condition of his affairs at the date thereof, and by the postscript what accidents have intervened. Pray take special care that due secrecy be observed in these particulars, which you will find ought not to be divulged. I fear we must now be compelled—though as unwillingly as ever we did anything—to retreat to the other side of the Tamar. If the enemy be full of gallantry and follow us into Cornwall we shall then have a hopeful day with him—better than we could have expected in Devon.—but if he will be wise and stay in Devon, neither Exeter nor Dartmouth will be long secure, the first being in danger of famine and the other of force, the works being very imperfect, and we shall be so burdensome upon the Cornish, and General Goring's horse so disorderly, that I fear Cornwall will quickly be weary of us. Therefore we will do all we possibly can to continue in Devon.

Touching the Prince's going out of England be confident we will make good our words as is at large expressed in the shorter letter, but his Majesty must presently send his commands in a letter to all the Lords of the Council, to lie by us, and to be produced when it shall be seasonable. In that letter his Majesty must likewise give them the like authority as 313 to his Highness when he shall be beyond the seas as they now have, with directions to the Prince to be advised by them and only by them—to exclude Long, Berekly &c.—in all his affairs as well household of importance as others. It is further desired that his Majesty's commands to the Prince to go beyond the seas and to the Council to be assisting therein may be privately sealed with the Great Seal and remain with the greatest secrecy somewhere in very safe custody. When you consider the vast importance of this business you will conclude with all us four that such cautions are most necessary. Let me speedily hear from you touching all these particulars, for it may fall out that we shall be suddenly pressed to put his Majesty's commands into execution. Your Scotch Treaty joys my heart. D[uke] Hamilton may—probably—be made useful in it. He has lately sent me word by Doctor Freaper that he will do anything his Majesty will have him to do. You shall hear more from me upon this subject very speedily.

[What followeth was written in Culpeper's own hand and in cipher too.]

January 8. Tavistock.—Your severe postscript cannot long stifle the extremity of joy which your most kind letter gave me. Touching that harsh Catechism I acknowledge it so surprised me, that it was some time before I could believe it signified anything but some piece of raillery. But when upon the third and fourth reading of what I found open, the continuation of that unusual stile had sufficiently convinced me that you were in sober earnest, I entered into the strictest examination of myself what I had done or said capable to render me thus unhappy and I could not guess at the matter. Then I fell to work with your cipher, which quickly unriddled the business, and I assure you—whatever your relish was when you wrote it—I was a glad man when I read it. My reply is only a request to you to afford me a new hearing and again seriously and unconcernedly consider the words you mention, and compare them with the scope and context of the whole letters, and then to ask yourself whether that unhappy 'you' ought to be applied to 573 or to his Majesty's Counsellors. If you then find it doubtful I a thousand times ask your pardon for any ambiguity in such a tender point. But if upon second thoughts you clearly conclude that I could mean nothing but to express my apprehensions of the like mischievous designs to overrule the King and his Counsellors of his 220 ill fortune; you will then pronounce 576 no ill friend though you find him no good penman. My categorical answer is I no more intended or suspected you than myself. Nay, if I were your enemy I must profess it to all the world that I have received more solid confirmation of constancy in this good cause from your conversation and practice than from any other man living, and I should as soon be jealous of myself to become anything that I most abhor as that you could warp or cool in that well grounded resolution. I certainly know you can have no reserve not warranted by the strictest rules of duty honesty and 251.

At the Rendezvous this afternoon, the Cornish were very cheerful and expressed much forwardness to fight. We have 1,000 horse full of the guard, very well armed and mounted, which I am confident will do well when they come to service. The Lord Wentworth—besides 300 horse now [at] Bovy Tracey and Colonel Pr a turn tail regiment now beaten up—hath with those before Plymouth now drawn off 2,500 horse, which I would call very good ones, if they would fight more and plunder less. The enemy's quick soldier-like motion has hindered us from joining with 1,500 good foot in Exeter and 1,000 as good now sent to Dartmouth. Yet we have in a body full 4,000 good men. 576 remembers his service to you with many kind expressions of friendship. Your brother is well in Exeter recovered of a late mischance, a fall, which put his arm out of joint. We hear hopefully of the treaty at London.

Postscript.—When I sent you the letter I had not heard one word of the treaty." Copy. [N. XII., 171.]

Colonel J. DALBIER to the COMMITTEE of the three Counties of BERKS, BUCKS, and OXON.

1645[-6], January 7. Newbury.—"I see that none of my letters can prevail, which makes me think you do not believe that I am in a most sad condition. Three Companies of Farnham went away last week with their arms as far as Basingstoke, where the officers overtook them and persuaded them to come back again, but I wish they had let them go for their return has proved prejudicial, because they refuse to do duty and to their example the rest that are unpaid do the like. The men that are well paid are not above 400. You may judge in what case I am, the enemy have very good intelligence of all, so that I must fear every day to be overfallen. I beseech you not to lose the poor town, which by our coming is already ruined, our men being indebted to them 1,200*l.* Perhaps you think it impossible for the enemy to have such a resolution, for I know their forces are described to you [as] inconsiderable. I answer there is 300 horse in Faringdon, 200 horse in Wallingford, 50 horse in Denington who all can appoint a rendezvous at any time without our knowledge, and if they take but 200 musketeers behind their horse they are able to master this place, having no men to defend it. I may preach my heart out to the soldiers of the danger they are and put us all in with their proceedings, they cry Money, money, money, that is all the answer I get." ROBERT WRIGHT to [OLIVER ST. JOHN].

164[5-]6, January 9-19. Paris.—“The treaty betwixt the King and Scots is with all industry prosecuted by Mr. William Murray with the Queene. She to gaine time entertaynes it with great hopes of a faire and desired conclusion and is resouled, if other expectacions faile, to gaine them there desires. The obstuckle at present is the difficulty of reconciling the party of Montrose with that of Hamilton and Arguile, yet in case the parliament should—upon the King's refusall of the proposicons now desired—proceede to the deposing of him, the Scots' comissioners in England doe assure that those two parties shall reconcile and declare with one consent for the King, which is the only thing by her desired for having alsoe assurance—in that case—of a party now with the parliament, she is confident that that is the only way to re-establish the King to her content. The French to entertayre the warre—untell they have don their buisnes in Flaunders—gives leave to rayse six thousand volentires two mile in Normandy, three mile in Bretaine and one mile in Poitou for the seting foreth of all which Q[ueene] of France and Cardinall have this last weeke given thirty mile pistoles. The chergie gives the lik sum and both asurance of 5 mile pistoles monethly. 600 of the former number and (?are) within sixteen dayes to be shipt at Newhaven and conducted to Dar[t]mouth by Sir William Davenant, the grose in March, all to be commanded by Generall Goring, who having now past his cure will make his flourish for twenty or thirty dayes in Paris, and so retourne for the West. The Pope hath very lately not withstanding the warres of Itelay faithfull[y] promise[d] to assiste the Irish, that they shall submit to the King's condicions and furnish him with one thousand men, all defryed. The jarr now betwixt him and the French not not (sic) hinder so pious a worke—these are his wordes—. The Prince of Oring gives assurance of shipping and all other in his powre—and assuredly he is and shall bee very cordialle and usefull to the king—. Docter Goff is now with him for that purpose. That that keeps in this fire is the hopes of the Prince of Walles being sudenly with him, which must by all meanes be prevented and you cannot buy him and his party at to great a rate. Yet must ye not proceed so farr as to depose the King but draw on the warr with all industry—in case the accomodacion cannot now be hadde it wil be the most assured way for saieftey—so to lessen his party, to which purpose you must be very early in the feild this spring with your armys, and likewise with your fleet at sea; for 'tis that that gives the reputacion abroad. The King was resolved to slig[h]t Hereford, draw those forces to Woster and so to indeavour with his strength to releife Chestor which is not only to be prevented but the taking thereof by all possible meanes to bee prosecuted, as likewise that of Newarke where the Scots will doe you no service so that ye may have two armys, the one to attende the west, which must be very considerable, the other, Oxford. You may bravely (?) treat with the King or offer him his desire for coming to London, for 'tis conceived by the Queene—and she hath assurance thereof—that he will not conclude anything till he shall see the effectes of one bataille more this springe. Your assurance of religion, lawes, libertyes persons and those of your deere wives and childrens must be in accomodacion—for the chance of warr is doutfull, and ife you should loose one bataille, the people would all forsaeke you being now most verry of the ware besides it would give the King that reputation as his allies abroad would serve him faithfully, and belcave it, the cardinall of France is not really yours—which must by all modest and gentle wayes be by you sought. If the present oportunity faile, the Kingdome of England wilbe the feild of blood and all nations will pour their wurst of men into that now most miserable kingdome. The Queene of England comes on Munday next to Paris, there to solithit (sollicit) in her person. Ye must not dout of what is now sent you for I have it from a friend that cannot erre and one that is a faithfull lover of his religion, contry, lawes and libertyes." Colonel JAMES KERR and others to [JOHN RUSHWORTH].

1645[-6], January 12. Plymouth.—"This day the enemy hath quitted all their strongholds before us, in much fear, but they were too strong in horse for us to deal with. The enemy left at Plimstock two great guns, at Newbridge two, at Fort Arundel 33 muskets and four barrels of powder, and we conceive if the enemy be pursued [they] will continue in their flying posture. They are gone as we believe towards Tavistock." Copy. [N. V., 83.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON o WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 14. Chester Suburbs.—Enclosing a summons to the besieged and the correspondence that followed. "It seems many of the citizens remain still so enthralled and enawed as that they dare not oppose nor resist; many more so deeply engaged to hold out the city, as that they can expect no less than inevitable ruin, were there no more guilt and charge upon them, but to make reparation and satisfaction to those honest men, whose estates they have seized and possessed after they had turned them out of town. Hence . . . all former fair tenders have been rejected, and such is the strength of the city, being a very compact piece, and the walls so high and strong, as that upon the Cheshire side our cannoniers could not find any convenient place to fix a battery to do execution either upon the walls or over the walls upon the houses in the city, though there hath been near forty barrels of powder spent in one day. And when a small breach hath been made and our men entered by storm, they have been beaten back with loss, whence the enemy also is encouraged to hold out. Nothing hath been so formidable to the enemy nor done so great execution as a mortar piece which we borrowed from Shrewsbury, for which if we had been furnished with shells, we should have been able to have given you a better account. . . . Postscript.—We have sent a strong party consisting of three Cheshire foot companies under the command of Colonel Massie, and one of Colonel Mitton's under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Twisleden, who have blocked up Hawarden, and secured those passages, and they are likewise seconded by the regiments of Cheshire and Derbyshire horse. We have sent another party this day to block up Holt by means whereof Chester will be deprived of all intelligence." Signed. Seal. Enclosed are several communications between Sir W. Major-General ROWLAND LAUGHARNE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 16. Haverfordwest.—“Aberystwith Castle opposeth as yet. My men by the vehemency of the weather and poverty of the place have very ill lying before it. The enemy, I suppose, are in no good condition within; their fuel is well nigh spent, and provision not very plentiful, and their water cut off. I have not yet drawn my guns before it, and the ground is not in this extreme weather pliable for raising of batteries. . . . The supply in money and clothes the House ordered for my soldiers if received might much have furthered the service. . . . Mr. Lorte and Mr. Elliott the Committee's Agent are so wholly taken with prosecution of private malice they can spare no thoughts for the public good. I desire Mr. Arthur Owens . . . be entrusted with the dispose and conveyance of that and what other relief may be designed for us. THE COMMITTEE AT YORK to the ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS WITH THE SCOTCH ARMY.

1645[-6], January 16.—Having formerly had no redress for our complaints of the great pressures on this county from the Scotch army, it has occasioned a much more exorbitant carriage not only in some of the Scotch, but—as under their command—even of our English with a mixture of Irish, and those all disaffected to the Parliament, to press upon the country with intolerable burdens and insolencies. Besides the two regiments of Horse lately come from Scotland about Thirsk and Northallerton, there is a regiment of 20 troops quartered about Rotherham and Tickhill, whose outrages and the grieved countrymen's occasions—in part to stay their violences—we desire you to take notice of by the enclosed Petition and Articles of charges, and by the enclosed copy of a letter. We request you to treat with the Scotch general that not only justice be done upon the offenders, but that their forces be removed out of this county. Copy. [N. XII., 173.]

J. HATFIELD to [JOHN] LAUGHTON.

1645[-6], January 17.—Giving an account of Captain Carse's journey with Richard Lane to the General of the Scotch army. He having read our petition and seen our grievances replied, “those your grievances have been insufferable and your petition is fair, but the action is such that I will revenge it upon your town, while I have a drop of warm blood in my body,” and ordered Captain Carse to bring three regiments of Horse to quarter in our town, and they are expected every day. I therefore desire that a Petition be drawn to the Committees to acquaint them with our danger, that Colonel Bethell's men be directed to secure our persons and estates, or if not, some other of our Yorkshire horse, and that speedily, for danger is at the door. The General of the Scotch forces urged that we should have brought them to him which was impossible for us considering their army lay in the way. I have sent you Mr. Rolston's letter with an account of his and John Flee-man's journey to the Lords and Commons. Divers of the town will not come in to give evidence without warrants from the Committee or the Governor of Pontefract, so if you conceive them useful send warrants with speed. Copy. [N. 1645[-6], January 17. Derby.—“I ventured the other night with such forces as I have to fall upon Tutbury. We entered the town took seven score horses and eleven men; the rest retreated to the Castle. We found but two dead men, the rest of the wounded were carried to the Castle. Since this Lieutenant Moore is come to me from the enemy with 22 men, he was the man that did us the most hurt when the King was last in our country. There is 20 more of the same troop gone to Sir William Brereton. Staffordsire forces made the like attempt against Tutbury lately, but was forced to retreat. Vice-Admiral WILLIAM BATTEN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 17. On board the Leopard in Torbay.—“Having spent some time before Falmouth, and understanding that the Prince was gone Eastward for Dartmouth, which he endeavoured to do, but our forces lying in the way made him retreat for Cornwall again, where he now is, and for ought I hear hath no intention to go from thence, five sail I have left off Falmouth to attend his motion, and to secure our merchant ships out and home. On Tuesday last being in Plymouth Sound I received a letter from Sir Thomas Fairfax from Totnes, which signified his intent to fall on Dartmouth and desired my assistance. Whereupon I presently set sail, and came before Dartmouth the next day with eleven sail of ships and pinnaces, part whereof I left before the town, and went into Torbay with the rest, the siege from Plymouth being raised the day before came from thence.

On the 15th . . . 1645[-6], January 19. Abingdon.—“Colonel Rainsborough’s regiment is come to us and consists of near 500 men. I have proposed conditions for Captain Williams with his brother and Mr. Jones the Minister, . . . which I believe will be accepted . . . This day I sent 40 horse under Captain Roe to alarm Wallingford, and so retreat. The enemy pursued as far as Clifton, and—overpowering us with fresh and able horses—took 30 prisoners. But Major Blundell, whom I ordered with 100 men, to march over Chisleton Bridge, according as the design was contrived, surprised them in their return, relieved all our own, took 50 of the Wallingford horses, and near as many prisoners, of whom some escaped,—the night overtaking us—; 29 we have in custody, among whom one Lieutenant-Colonel, one Major, five Captains, lieutenants, cornets, ensigns, 14, most of them reformadoes. Lieutenant-Colonel Wilford that commanded their party is slain, with three more of their soldiers, but one of ours. charge and pressure to that particular place by any of your army be prevented, which will very much savour of revenge, the consequence whereof may extend to endanger the breach of that happy union of the two nations. Copy. [N. XII., 175.]

WILLIAM ASHBOURNE to [LORD GREY OF WARKE.]

1645[-6], January 20. Chill[ingham].—Concerning the barbarous carriage of a regiment of Scotch horse under Colonel Frisell, and the storm, the like of which had not been known by any now living, (Printed in Grey, iii., Appendix, No. 22, p. 35.) [N. V., 93.]

The ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS WITH THE SCOTCH ARMY to Lieutenant-General LESLIE.

1645[-6], January 22. Grantham.—We have received very sad complaints of horse lately quartered at Stayncross and those parts in Yorkshire under Major Blair, how they took clothes and free quarter, and assessed great sums of money, take horses and when the owners redeem them for money take both horses and money, and that one of them committed a rape; some said the Reformadoes of your army, committing many oppressions at Tickhill, were taken by the inhabitants to Pontefract Castle, of whom those of the Scotch nation the Committee have written to you shall be sent to receive justice at your hands, and the English Irish and French shall receive the punishment appointed by Parliament. This we perceive by the dates was before we were with you at the mustering of your army, of which you were pleased to say nothing to us. Tickhill and the Yorkshire Committees are informed that some regiments of your Horse are to come to Tickhill and that words were given out by some of ruin threatened to that town and to others for taking those soldiers. These things so much concern the public service against Newark and the good correspondency of both kingdoms, that we desire a speedy redress, and by this messenger to receive your answer, that we may send it into Yorkshire. Copy. [N. XII., 177.]

Lieutenant-General LESLIE to the ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS.

1645[-6], January 23. East Bridgeford.—In reply to the last. As for Major Blair's soldiers, the charges seem very strange to me, never having received any complaint of that regiment. I promise that if any such thing had come to my knowledge or shall be proved, I shall see them punished. As for the Reformadoes "I cannot but resent the affront done to me in taking of them, seeing they were under my command . . . and therefore I doubt not but that your Lordships will send them all to me to be punished if they be found guilty . . . according to the law of arms, and that you will punish those men of Tickhill for the wrong they have done to me. As to the information . . . of my purpose to quarter on that town and that out of revenge, the Lord knows I abhor revenge, and will your Lordships be pleased to quarter those regiments that are in Yorkshire in any other adjacent county, they shall go when you appoint them, so that if they lie any longer in that county it shall not be my fault but your Lordships."

I entreat your Lordships to give orders to the country people to bring their complaints first to me, when if they shall not be remedied, the fault to be imputed to me." Copy. [N. XII., 178.]

The ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS to Lieutenant-General LESLIE.

Same date. Grantham.—We have sent a copy of your letter to the Committee of Yorkshire and the Governor of Pontefract Castle that in all cases of complaint against any under your command our desires are and ever have been that the first address for remedy be made to yourself, and that such as were taken by the inhabitants of Tickhill and are of your army shall be transmitted for their trial to you, but for such as are not of your army we know it is your mind they should receive their punishment in such manner as by the Parliament is appointed, and we shall at every opportunity show how kindly we take your respect in leaving the business of the inhabitants of Tickhill to us. Our letter and instructions were far from imputing revenge to you, but that words of revenge have been uttered by some under you, which, as also the complaints made, will in due time be proved, or else let them suffer that have falsely accused. We have no authority to quarter your horse in other counties. Copy. [N. XII., 179.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 23. Chester Suburbs.—“The last night we took four of their spies, and by them and by letters intercepted from Sir Richard Lloyd to Watts the Governor of Chirk Castle we discover their designs and strong hopes of present relief, which, I believe did encourage them by Sir Edmond Varney and Major Thropp their Commissioners put out this day to make such high demands in their 36 propositions, whereof there cannot be six assented unto, and the rest some of them most high and unparalleled which were returned with as much scorn and disdain, as they were sent out with confidence. I tendered unto them my answer to Byron's letter, and such conditions enclosed as I thought fit to propose, neither whereof would they receive. Our bridge over Dee was—by breach of the weather—disordered and made unserviceable two days, after which time it was repaired. The enemy is possessed of strong hopes of relief by sea, and to that end have at Ruthland and Conway prepared several vessels laden with corn, bacon, and other provisions. For prevention whereof we have provided several small barques, which are manned with musketeers and furnished with ordnance, wherewith we doubt not—by God's blessing—to secure that passage, and to seize or repel those that come to their relief, whereof I have received strong assurance from Captain Rich. . . We are now again furnished with some grenades for our mortar piece . . . We are making a battery in the steeple of St. John's Church whence only—upon the Cheshire side—we can command and shoot into the city. But we are so unprovided of tackles and other necessaries for the firing and conveying up the great guns that we cannot yet perfect that work, which we hope a few days will finish. . . Postscript.—Whatsoever you have heard, I do assure you no relief—except a small proportion when our bridge was unserviceable—hath come into the city since I came down.” Signed. Seal. [N. V., 97.] Enclosed :

i. Propositions sent out of Chester by Sir Edmund Verney and Serjeant-Major Thropp from LORD BYRON.

1645[-6], January 22.—(These, 36 in number, are the “very high conditions” mentioned by Rushworth, iv. l. 137, and are much more favourable to the besieged, than those eventually agreed upon.) [N. XIV., 98.]

ii. [SIR WILLIAM BRERETON] to [LORD BYRON].

1645[-6], January 22.—“I should not have expected propositions of so high demands as those you have sent. . . . We know your wants are great, your hopes of relief desperate. . . . I will not trouble myself with answering the particulars of your unparalleled demands . . . yet to witness my desire for the preservation of the city I have . . . thought fit to tender these enclosed conditions for the performance whereof . . . commissioners may meet and treat. Enclosed :

The said CONDITIONS.

- 1 equals No. 13 of the articles printed in Rushworth iv. l. 139, with the addition that the County Palatine Seal and Swords are to be delivered as well as the Records.
- 2, 3, and 4 equal Nos. 3, 5, and 15 of the said articles.
5. That such a sum as may be concluded upon by the Commissioners be raised and paid for satisfaction of the soldiery to prevent the plunder of the city.
- 6 equals No. 4 of the said articles from the beginning down to “violence of the soldiers.”
7. That the Governor, noblemen, gentlemen, and soldiers, both English, Welsh, and Irish born of English parents, who did not take part with the rebels of Ireland, and such noblemen, gentlemen and citizens as are so minded and are now in the city—except those that have been members of this present Parliament and have deserted the same, and the Commissioners of Array for this county and city, and such as were of the Grand Jury and indicted many of the county for high treason against the King for their fidelity to the Kingdom—shall reserve free liberty to march away to the garrison of _____ in manner following. . . . The Governor with four horses and his arms and not above 50*l.* in money, any field officer two horses, captains of horse and foot and lieutenants of horse one horse apiece and none of them to exceed 5*l.* a piece in money, the lieutenants of foot, ensigns and other inferior officers with a sword only and no horse and 10*s.* in money, the common soldiers without arms and not above 5*s.* a piece in money.
- 8 and 9 relate to convoy and hostages. Copies. [N. XII., 176.]

OLIVER EMRY, Mayor, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 23. Stafford.—“Yesterday Captayne Stone, our Governour. had intelligence that the force from Litchfield intended to come to Canock towne four myles distant from this garrison . . . and that they would come stronge . . . Whereupon hee presently sent messengers to Rushall and Wrotesley two garysons in this countye to send what horse they could possibly spare to meeete his owne troope at a place appointed, his troope coming to the place before them, and the enemye beeinge in Canock towne and havinge each discovered other, knowinge yf they stayed, the enemye havinge notice by their scoutes of their number would charge them, thought better to march to them, knowinge that the Lord doth not alwayes worke by probable, but often by small and unlikely meanes—as hee did in this—. The enemye had divided themselves into three bodyes, the one in the way our men were to march, and the other two on each side, every of the three bodyes beeing far bigger than Captayne Stone's troope—that charged them—. They charged through the fyrst body, and then seeminge to fly before the enemye to recover some ground to set themselves in a fytt posture againe—which they did—faced about on those which pursued them, and charged them agayne, and ronted them, and followed them soe close to their other two bodyes that they were all disperst. They pursued them some fyve miles. At the charge and in the pursuite there were slayne tenne at least, there was taken two captaynes, two lyftenauntes, three coronetes, two trumpeters, twelve gentlemen reformadoes of the Lord Mulinax his troope, and about fyfye common troopers, one hundred horse, with the horse, cloake and hatt of Sir Thomas Tylsley and many armes, some souldyers bringing three horses and six swordes a peece. Sir Thomas himself who commaunded the party escaped—beeinge unhorst as is conceyved—gott into some house and could not bee found. Wee lost not one man, onely six were wounded, but none mortally. There was betwixt two and three hundred of the enemye and not above eighty of oures. And as wee are informed by the prysoners, Sir Thomas havinge beene longe a prysoner in this garyson, and lately escaped, beeinge now by the Kinge made comaunder in cheif over the horse in this countye, knowinge the readynes of this troope to goe forth upon any notice of the enemyes motion, made a pretence of fetchng hay onely to drawe them forth to ensnare them. But the Lord was pleased to take them in their owne net, Sir Thomas himself narrowly escapeinge.”

We request that Captain Stone may have some competent satisfaction towards his charges in raising his troops. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 419.) Signed. Scal. [N. V., 95.]

ROBERT DODSWORTH TO [LORD GREY OF WARKE.]

1645[-6], January 25. Chill[ingham] Castle.—I am much afraid you Lordship will find a good part of your Candlemas rents taken up. Colonel Welden's regiment has had 1,000*l.*, I am confident, out of your lends, himself and his men. I was sent to the General to get them put away, and he gave order accordingly, but Colonel Welden told him that he, being Sheriff, could not do any service without having two troops of horse to wait on him to curb the high lands men, so that as long as he continues Sheriff we cannot expect the charge to be lessened. Unless another be put in you nor any man need not expect any rents at all. It will be more by much than the land will bear. They have betwixt 700*l.* and 800*l.* per month out of this corner of the country, most whereof goes into their own purses. I have both spoken and wrote to him of several abuses, but nothing the better. Mr. Ashborne sent him your Lordship's letter. All that he had from him was that it needed no answer at all. The storm continues still so extreme that a great part of the sheep are likely to be lost ; they did already abundance of them. Corn gives small rates, rye 12s., beare 8s., oats 6s., and wheat 14s. They used to give double that rate not many years ago. We hear that in Scotland things are not likely to go well for reason of differences among the nobility. Montrose, it is said, draws to a great head again about the hills, in Murrowe Land. We are offered for Chivington 120*l.* per annum, little more than half the former rate, but the reason is that as yet men dare not venture upon stock, besides the easy rate of Delinquents' lands. [N. XII., 180.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 26.—“ The citizens discourse very familiarly and friendly, and say they will be no longer deluded. But their grandees, who have enriched themselves by those honest men's estates which they have seized and banished out of town, do know themselves in such a desperate condition that I cannot hope for the surrender of the town until they can hold out no longer, and the rather because they have an expectation of relief by Ashley and these forces that are preparing to join with him. To prevent the conjunction of the Welsh forces with them is that which is most necessary. To this end I have sent three regiments of horse, the Reformadoes, the Warwickshire, the Staffordshire, and my dragoons, which party I believe will make near 900 or 1,000, whereof Colonel Mytton takes the charge and command, who marched yesterday towards Ruthin to find out the Lord St. Paul, who hath gathered about 700 or 800 horse and foot, many of them forced men, whom if we could disperse might much advantage us, and disappoint and discourage the enemy . . . Postscript.—Yesterday the Mayor . . . sent out to desire my propositions might be sent unto the town, whereunto I replied, if the Lord Byron sent out a pass this day by noon for two gentlemen they should be sent in, for whom I have now received a pass to meet in the mid-way, but they will not admit them to come into town. The short note that I caused to be thrown over the walls expressing the conditions I offered . . . did produce very good effect.” Signed. Seal. [N. V., 98.]

BUSSY MANSELL, EDWARD CARNE, and others to Major-General LAUGHARNE.

1645[-6], January 26. Cardiff.—“ About the time of the receipt of yours of the 22nd of January . . . we received intelligence of an increase of misery happened to ” Monmouthshire by the sudden surprise of their forces by the enemy from Ragland at Carline (Caerleon) which without some speedy assistance hath laid that country open to the violence and rapine of that barbarous and bloody crew, now much animated by that advantage. The gentry of that county therefore and ourselves have instructed the gentlemen, bearers hereof, “ to crave your best aid, and to let you know the condition of our both counties and the sad consequences of the prevalency of the enemy, not only to rush as a torrent on that and the adjacent counties to their ruin, but likewise the danger of their moulding a new considerable power to the disturbance of the kingdom for the prevention whereof we desire as many forces as you can spare.” Signed. Seal. [N. V., 99.]

Major-General ROWLAND LAUGHARNE TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 29. Carmarthen.—“ Wind and weather proving unfavourable for conveyance of my guns much delayed my designs upon Aberys[t]with Castle, and the enemy's advantage of sending out some small boats in the long and dark nights from under the Castle prolonged their opposition . . . Ragland and Ludlow horse prove very active and much infest our friends within their reach. To guard Brecknockshire from the one I have settled my Lieutenant-Colonel with 300 foot and 100 horse to garrison the town of Brecknock, the other—I receive credible intelligence—purpose so sudden relief of Aberys[t]with, I march this day with all the horse I have unengaged to assist the siege and preserve my guns. The Governor of Hereford soliciteth me that some horse of mine may be in Radnorshire to prevent incursions upon the borders of that county and into Herefordshire. In all that I am able without hazard of loss at Aberys[t]with I promised, and resolve to answer his expectation. Glamorganshire forces,—though Captain Moulton hath so fully armed them partly out of my store by the spoil of the enemy at Colby Moor—will not be wrought upon [by any] extremity of mine or Brecknockshire gentry to stir a foot abroad or apprehend any sense of the danger of their neighbours, so that I am necessitated to have my hands more than full of action or expose some friends to the enemy's mercy. I have delivered propositions—and they are not disliked—to the gentry of Carmarthen and Cardiganshire for the speedy raising of 1,000 foot and horse with means to pay them to fit me for the field. I hope at two months' end to be in condition to receive and obey the commands of the House for more remote service." I ask for a renewal and enlargement of my powers and the hastening down of the money formerly ordered. Signed. Seal. [N. V., 110.]

The COMMITTEE AT GOLDSMITHS' HALL.

1645[-6], January 29.—Report concerning Lady Style and William Hill. (The purport appears from the order thereon, which is printed in Commons' Journals, iv. 573.) [N. XIV., 99.]

Colonel THOMAS MYTTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 29. Ruthin.—(Partly printed and misdated in Mercurius Civicus, 2042, King's Pamphlets, E. 322, Nos. 32 and 39, where "Fanrust" is a misprint for "Llanrwst." It concludes thus):—"This place is of extraordinary great consequence being one of the most fruitful places in all Wales, as also a place if obtained that no intelligence can come from Ireland toward the King, but it must come through the Parliament quarters, therefore to enable us to go on with this service . . . it is humbly desired that the House will . . . consider of the sad condition my forces are in, the leaguer before Chester having eaten up all the country from this place thither, insomuch that we cannot raise one penny towards the payment of my soldiers," who have received but 500*l.* from Sir William Brereton of all the money given by Parliament. My forces were the fifth part of those before Chester, and have received pay not according to the 20th part. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 429.) Seal. [N. V., 111.]

Colonel MARTIN PYNDAR to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 29. Bristol.—I am appointed by the General to present the House with his endeavours upon Lord Inchiquin's letters from Youghal to supply that place with such speedy relief of provisions and money as this city or our employment here could afford namely with such victuals as the Garrison could spare and with 1,000*l.* lent by us your Commissioners out of a gratuity given by the city to the army in lieu of plunder, which Lord Inchiquin promised to repay out of the first moneys collected by the Ordinances of Parliament for that part of Ireland. I therefore beseech the House to order the Committee for Irish affairs speedily to return the said 1,000*l.* to the army, as the soldier bethinking the time misdoubts the purpose of the General, and also divers precious things such as the ships in the harbour belonging to strangers, and the things in the King's storehouse, especially the coral entered by the East India Company, are withheld from the soldier whereunto they plead right. The wounded men are miraculously recovered and returned to their colours, four only remaining out of near 400. The accounts of the free quarter during the siege have been taken which amounts to so great a sum that without your honourable encouragement of the poor country they will be undone and disabled to give assistance to this garrison or support themselves for whose satisfaction by the General's order we engaged ourselves. Seal. [N. V., 112.]

Colonel ANTHONY STAPLEY and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 29. Lewes.—Enclosing a petition from a considerable part of the county, asking repayment of part of the money lent by them towards the 200,000*l.* for the Scots' advance out of the sequestrations of the county, and for that purpose desiring that the garrison of Chichester, which is maintained out of the sequestrations may be dissolved as now useless, and supporting the request of the petition. Signed. [N. V., 113.]

SIR WILLIAM ARMYNE and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], January 31. Grantham.—(The first part of the letter is identical with that from the Earl of Rutland to the Speaker of the House of Peers, which is printed in Lords' Journals, viii. 141. It continues thus):—"We find so much difficulty in procuring the mortar piece from Reading, and—now the weather is broken—the ways so impassable that your service may suffer much before that come unto us. Wherefore we have sent for the casting two at Nottingham, and if you please to order the 350*l.* to us, and add somewhat more to it, we shall be able to pay for them and provide shells and other necessaries, and we hope to have no need of a Master of Fireworks to be sent, having with us one very expert, and others who have done very good service against Belvoir. We shall now apply our whole endeavours for the reducing of Newark." Signed. Seal. Enclosed are copies of the summons to the Governor of Belvoir and his reply, both printed in Lords' Journals, viii. 141. [N. V., 114.]

A BILL for ENACTING THE PROPOSITIONS and turning them into an Act of Parliament.

1645[-6], January 31.—Read a first and second time on that date. (See Commons' Journals, iv. 424.) Draft, with alterations. Annexed are the Propositions themselves, with Mr. Whiteloek's addition to the preamble of the first in a different hand. (They substantially agree with those sent to the King at Newcastle, which are printed in Rushworth, iv. 1. 309, except that the order of some is different, the period that the Parliament is to have the command of the Militia is unlimited instead of 20 years; some additional Acts, including one for abolishing the Court of Wards, and another for suppressing interludes and stage plays, are mentioned in proposition 12; there are some variations in the names of the persons in the first qualification, qualifications 9 and 10 are omitted, the parts of proposition 13 that relate to the Militia and Tower of London are omitted, and also proposition 14, concerning Grants under the Great Seal. On the other hand, there are some additional propositions concerning the Education and Marriage of the King's children, the uniting of the Protestant princes, and the restoration of the Elector Palatine, an Act of Oblivion, indemnity to Members of Parliament for losses sustained in adhering to the Parliament, and the disbanding of the Armies. [Major-General ROWLAND LAUGHARNE] to [BUSSY MANSELL and others].

1645[-6], February 5. Aberystwith.—Since the receipt of yours of January 26th, I received information from the Brecon gentlemen of the enemy's late incursions into some part of your county, intimating their desire of my appearance amongst them. So far as it may suit with my other engagements I have promised the assistance of most of my horse to perfect that service. Draft, written within fold of Mansell's letter of January 26th, to which it is a reply. Colonel EDWARD PRITCHARD and others to Major-General LAUGHARNE.

1645[-6], February 6. Cardiff.—“This day the country here, being countenanced by many Malignants come unto them, being met at their rendezvous fell into mutinous expressions, and that party of them which were better affected being sent to quarters those under the command of Colonel Carne began to quarrel, and at length fell to declare for the king, and a troop of horse under the command of Captain Edward Gwin seized on the Colonel-General, your brother, Colonel Button . . . and many of the best affected gentlemen, and Colonel Herbert of Sir Thomas Fairfax's army, who was there by chance. . . . They do now besiege this town; of them we have not the least fear nor consideration, but Ragland forces hearing of it may probably come down to them. Our desire is that you would dispose of your forces so as to hinder their joining.” Signed. [N. V., 101.]

The Propositions and Demands of the County of GLAMORGAN to the GOVERNOR OF CARDIFF and his associates.

[1645-6, February 6.]—Contrary to our first agreement at our first rising for peace to keep both sides out of our country you have sent several messengers to bring a force into our country.

Contrary to our intents and wills the contribution of this country has been raised by Ordinance of Parliament from 67*l.* to 162*l.* per week, and some of quality have had their liberties restrained and their goods forcibly detained.

We require the town and castle of Cardiff with all the arms and ammunition therein to be suddenly and peaceably delivered to us, on which we shall to the utmost of our power, secure the governor in his estate and person, with his officers and soldiers, and keep the town free from plundering.

Men of mean quality and of little or no repute, fortune, worth or reputation, have been nominated and made Committees for this county, whereas baronets, knights, esquires, and gentry have been left out, and thereby slighted and vilified.

And

Colonel EDWARD PRITCHARD and others' reply to the last.

[1645-6, February 6.]—We never intended to desire any forces from abroad, but only to repel the attempts of the enemy at Raglan. If the county be grieved at the contribution we will join with them for redressing it. The Committee is appointed by Parliament, and why should they name those that never intended to act for them? if they promise now to do so, no doubt they will be added. For the rest the sum is that this county should be independent from all England, both King and Parliament, which if your army be such as you are able to do, send us word by what authority higher than that either King or Parliament by which you demand this town. 'Till then we will live and die in this town, and though you join Raglan forces with you we shall carry ourselves like soldiers and maintain it to the utmost. We wonder that Colonel Carne should revolt from that trust and those protestations to which he is as deeply engaged as any of us. As for detaining the gentry, send ours you shall have yours, or they may be exchanged at the bridge. . . . [N. V., 102.] N. XV., 170, is another copy.

The Declaration of the Gentlemen, Freeholders, and others, the inhabitants of the County of GLAMORGAN.

[1645-6, February 6.]—Whereas insupportable grievances and pressures by some officers and ministers were the cause wholly of our first rising in arms for our necessary preservation and defence, since the business hath been carried out by the practices and artifice of some few, who wrought their own ends under colour of public pretences, and instead of easing our sufferings have much increased them, as will clearly appear by these ensuing particulars :—

That the county's troop by strict summons attending upon the garrison at Cardiff were employed in no other service than seizing on divers of our persons, plundering our houses, and sundry other ways unnecessarily molesting us and our neighbouring counties.

That very mean men have been intruded into the Government of the county, passing by men of quality and worth.

That these men have put a character of malignancy and delinquency upon the better part of this county, nor could we conceive any of us secure, being equally obnoxious whilst they intend to the same power over us, as is evident they do, for, being pressed that they would declare not to look back, it was peremptorily denied.

That the weekly contribution of 67*l.* has been raised to 162*l.*

That the Common Prayer-Book hath been commonly traduced, and several Sundays omitted in Cardiff, which we apprehend as a fore-runner of its final rejection, had some their desires, and were we not resolved by the help of God to continue it.

That divers of quality and known affections have without legal process or cause shown been restrained, most of whom we have been forced to enlarge by courses not sorting with our resolution.

That we are advertized of a resolution to bring an excise upon us, which we did ever most desire to avoid as the greatest pressure.

That their tyranny might not only extend to our bodies and goods, order was taken that our very souls should not be free, the Covenant already tendered in Carmarthenshire being to be shortly tendered unto us, the very taking whereof would render us guilty of perjury.

That schismatics of several kinds are of greatest trust with some in chiefest place of government in this county whereby our souls and lives, our liberties and estates must be at their desire.

Wherefore we appeal both to God and man, whether we have not just cause to take and persevere in these ways and courses, the laws at this time affording no redress, in regard whereof and of the premises we are confident no true lover of his God, his king and his country, but will cheerfully join with and assist us, and so persuaded are we of the justness of our proceedings as to desire all and singular parsons vicars and curates to read and publish this our declaration within their respective parishes and where need require to render the sense of it in Welsh and to pray that God would so bless us in our endeavours as they are intended for His glory, the King's honour, the peace and happiness of the kingdom and more particularly of this county.

And because some have a jealousy of receiving the King's forces in Monmouthshire to our assistance because they of the other side in Cardiff did and do still labour to bring in strange forces, we certify and declare that none are received or to be received but what mere necessity shall enforce us, and such as shall be necessary for reducing Cardiff, upon condition likewise that the said forces shall not offer to plunder or prejudice any man in the least degree, and likewise the said forces have bound themselves to depart, as soon as the reducing of the town and garrison of Cardiff shall be finished, and do promise to bring their own provision from Monmouthshire to avoid all trouble and charge to this land and also to receive orders from and be under the command of Colonel Carne. [N. V., 104.]

Amendments of the LORDS to the Propositions.

[1645-6, February 6.]—(See Lords' Journals, viii. 144.) (The effect of most of the amendments appears from the Report of the Conference printed in Lords' Journals, viii. 215.) [N. XV., 174.]

LORD CHARLES SOMERSET to the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF and the rest of his Majesty's loyal subjects in GLAMORGANSHIRE.

1645[-6], February 13. Raglan Castle.—“Having received certain intelligence from Sir Charles Kemeys that your County of Glamorgan is unanimously by your means risen up in a body to the defence of his Majesty's rights and privileges against the insulting enemy . . . I acknowledge with admiration those large testimonies of your loyalty and encourage you . . . to persevere therein. . . . I shall not be wanting upon any just occasion as well to engage my person as to venture my uttermost credit to serve you.” As a proof of which “I have earnestly solicited my Lord Ashley for his speedy assistance being now at Bromyard with a body of 3,000 men, conceiving it very probable that the enemy will be industrious to draw together all the force they can to come in our rear and thereby to hazard to distract, if not to destroy the forward way we are in, by God's assistance, to reduce all South Wales to their former obedience to his Majesty. I am confident that in a few days you will see the effects of these my labours to secure you, Lord Ashley being not only in honour but by a special command from his Majesty obliged to afford us assistance in this good occasion.

. . . Rather than you should want I have sent you a greater quantity" of ammunition "than I can well spare." [N. V., 103.]

SIR THOMAS FAIRFAX to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1645[-6], February 13. Crediton.—Recommending Sir Hugh Pollard to their favourable consideration both on account of the promise made by himself to him on the surrender of the Castle at Dartmouth, and also of the good report of his just moderate and fair carriage in his government both to the country in general and to the Parliament's friends thereabouts. The ELECTOR PALATINE to the COMMITTEE OF BOTH KINGDOMS.

1645[-6], February 17. Whitehall.—“By this inclosed paper you will find my present condition to be such that I want means for my own subsistence and for the maintenance of my public Ministers in such negotiations as the urgent necessity of my affairs require. At this time it is the greater in respect that the Crowns of France, Sweden, and their confederates having seriously taken into their consideration the important interests I have in the present great affairs now in agitation at the general treaty of peace at Münster and Osnabrück, as also that no firm nor constant peace can be agreed upon—especially in the Empire—without the determining and settling of my affairs have earnestly and severally invited and desired me to send my public Ministers to the said places to manage my interests in all negotiations and stipulations which I cannot omit without a very great prejudice to the true Reformed Religion and cause in general as well as to my affairs and interests concerning my restitution in dignity and dominions, the advancement whereof since both kingdoms have ever embraced with so much affection, I doubt not but their sense will still be to provide for my present subsistence in a way most conducive thereunto in expectation of their more effectual advancement thereof. Therefore I thought fit to address my desires to be represented to the Parliament by you, who are best able to time the said business and to advance it by your serious recommendation.” Signed “Charles Lodovic.” Seal. [N. I., 51.]

Articles of Agreement between us and the GENTLEMEN and OFFICERS in the town of CARDIFF.

[1645-6, February 19.]—“The countrymen who march to their houses shall keep their own arms—we mean such only as they brought with them from their own houses—upon the engagement of all the gentlemen in the town of Cardiff that they shall not draw to any rendezvous without order or warrant from Colonel-General Bushy Mansell, and for all the Gentlemen and officers they shall march away with their horses swords pistols and cloakbags to any of the King's garrisons within 50 miles . . . with such a convoy as shall guard them . . . and such as shall stay at home shall have free protection from the violence of the soldier and, as far as it lies in us, for your persons and estates. We shall never urge any oath or covenant unto tender consciences.

We shall not only secure but honour and encourage the religious learned Clergy, they intermeddling only with the business of their function, and for the Common Prayer-Book we shall not disturb any in the use of it.

The exchange of prisoners we wholly leave to Major-General Laugharne.

We . . . yielding unto these particulars do require that the town of Cardiff with all the arms artillery and ammunition not before excepted be delivered into the Governor's hands for the use of King and Parliament by 10 of the clock tomorrow morning, being the 20th of February 1645.

We expect your answer within this hour or two at furthest and engage ourselves that Major-General Laugharne shall subscribe this before your surrender tomorrow morning and upon your return of a counterpart of this subscribed by all you gentlemen and officers we agree to a cessation of arms.

I subscribe to as much as concerns myself and my soldiers.

Rowland Laugharne."

[N. V., 105.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1615-6, February. Chester.]—"The city itself is generally disaffected towards us, so that without a strong force we shall be unable to secure the city or ourselves, no less than 1,500 foot and 200 horse being sufficient for that work. It will also require a large sum of money to lay in a magazine of ammunition, to have a store well furnished with provisions and also to alter and strengthen the fortifications," which cannot be done without assistance from neighbouring parts, none, as we conceive, being more obliged hereunto than the nearer parts of North Wales which, "we must expect and shall desire to reduce by our own forces, Holt, Hawarden, and Flint being three castles that in a manner block up this city on the Welsh side for present, and the Parliament's forces in North Wales being so inconsiderable that of themselves they are not able to reduce these holds. Also these parts having constantly had their livelihood by their trade and commerce with this city will be most awed to the Parliament and secured in their estates by the forces maintained in this place." We therefore crave that we may have the command of at least twelve miles in North Wales to assist for the maintenance of this garrison. The poverty of this place is such on account of their want of trade and the exactions, and the county so exhausted by being for three years a seat of war, and finally by the burden of this long siege that they cannot without assistance bear the burden necessary to be imposed. Signed. Seal. [N. V., 109, should be 108.]

CHRISTINA, Queen of Sweden, to CHARLES LOUIS, COUNT PALATINE, Arch-Steward and Elector of the Roman Empire.

1646, April 18. Stockholm.—We are gratified by the intelligence transmitted to us some months since by your Dilection through our Aulic Councillor, Paul Strasburg. We doubt not that your Dilection remembers our former answers concerning the weighty matter of the freedom of Germany and especially that of your Dilection and the whole Palatine House in reply to various letters of yours. When by God's blessing negotiations for peace commenced we straitly charged our plenipotentiaries to champion the cause of your Dilection, and to urge your restitution both to your provinces and dominions, and to your Electoral Dignity. The course of events shows that notwithstanding the greatest difficulties they have hitherto done their best to execute these commands. We are persuaded that from our example the Protestant Princes and States of the Empire will be more earnest for the restoration of the Electoral College, and the equality of the votes. We wish your Dilection to be assured that we feel deeply the afflicted condition of the Palatine House, so that we are resolved with God's help to promote your Dilection's honour and advantage both by arms and negotiations. For which purpose we shall again charge our plenipotentiaries to adhere firmly to our former commands, and to assist your envoys both those at Osnabrück and those at Münster on every occasion. And since it is known that the Duke of Bavaria uses his utmost endeavours with the Most Christian King, in order that by the opening of negotiations he may be relieved from the arms of the French and may with their assent transmit the Electoral dignity to his heirs and descendants, your Dilection being deprived of your ancestral rights and dignity, We therefore desire and endeavour to oppose in time, as far as we can, attempts of this nature as we have declared to the ambassador of the Most Christian King, M. de la Thuillerie, when he was here lately. But besides we think it advantageous as a friend to advise your Dilection that you should cause diligent application to be made to the Most Christian King for his co-operation in the general negotiations, that from his affection to the common cause he may by his plenipotentiaries at Münster so direct the proceedings that proper regard may be paid to your Dilection and the Palatine House and your Dilection's expectations and desires be satisfied in a fitting manner by the opposite party. We have impressed the same on our Ministers and Residents both in Germany and France. In Latin. Copy. [N. XVIII., 25.]

Proceedings of a Council of War of Colonel FRAZER's regiment.

1646, April 21. Laughton.—On several soldiers accused of rapes, robberies, and assaults. (It quite bears out the account of the proceedings in the letter of the English Commissioners of May 5th, printed in Lords' Journals, viii. 349, as to the evidence in many cases being the answers of the accused only. One who had formerly been sentenced to death for former misbehaviour was sentenced to be executed, another, Andrew Fraser, was acquitted on the charge of rape on the ground that the woman consented, being commanded by her father, who was threatened by the said Andrew, for which threatening the said Andrew is to hang by the hands two hours every day, and nothing of his body coming to the ground scarcely his toes in some convenient place, near the town of Tickhill, and this to continue during their abode there—except on the Sabbath day—upon which his ecclesiastical censure is to go on also.) Examination of Captain ADAM SHIPPERSON.

[1646, May 14.]—At Durham the day the Scotch army brought the king thither I met one David Bahannon, pretending to be Scout Master General to the Scots. I desired to know why they brought the king in such haste with their whole army northward. He replied that he could certify me in that particular as well as most men in their army could, and said that the Parliament had abused the king in denying him liberty to come safe to London and in voting him not fit to come to the Parliament, but to be sent to Warwick Castle to be kept in safe custody, and that he thought that rather than their army would suffer the king to take such dishonourable conditions of the Parliament as they had proposed, the Scotch army would protect the king against the Parliament and stand upon a defensive war against them.

And

Examination of Captain THOMAS LILBURNE and Lieutenant EDWARD SHIPPERSON.

1646, May 14.—Captain David Bahanon on the 12th instant said that the Parliament endeavoured to alter the form of government of this kingdom of England and to bring the kingdom under the government of petty kings and sought by all means to overthrow the power of King Charles, and that they endeavoured also to break the peace between the kingdoms of England and Scotland.

And

Examination of Cornet JOHN CARRUTH.

[1646, May.]—At Sherbourne I met with Sir Frederick Hambleton's son, a captain of horse in the Scotch army, and asked him why they marched so fast away with the king, and why they did not send him to the Parliament. He replied because the Parliament would send him prisoner to Warwick Castle, and before he should be a prisoner, and not placed in all his former power, throne, and dignities they would lose all their lives in establishing him therein. I replied they would have a shrewd party to fight against. He answered he knew that, for they had the Parliament of England to fight against.

And

Second Examination of the SAME.

1646, June 5.—At Monk Seton, in Northumberland, I met with a party coming from Scotland to recruit the garrison of Tynemouth Castle. I asked the officers what news in Scotland, who answered that in Scotland they were levying the 6th man. I replied, I hope we shall have peace, and then what will be done with those men? They answered they were to be for his Majesty's service and at his command whenever he would command them. Copies. [N. XIX., 159.]

The KING to the COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND.

1646, May 19. Newcastle.—“After so long and sad an interruption of the happy understanding betwixt us and our good subjects of our kingdome of Scotland—which hath exceedingly afflicted us—and least the sad effects thereof may have alienated the affections of many of that kingdome from us, and preferring nothing to the love of our subjects on which our safety and greatnes most depends, and without which wee propose not to ourselves any happines; wee have thought fitt to labour to dispossesse them of all prejudices rather by shewing them our present resolutions, then remembering them of our former differences; having come hither with a full and absolute intention to give all just satisfaction to the joynt desires of both kingdomes, and with no thought either to continue this unnaturall warre any longer, or to make a division betwixt the kingdomes, but to comply with our parliaments and those entrusted by them in everything for settling of truth and peace. Your commissioners have offred to us diverse papers in your name expressing your loyall intentions towards us, for which wee cannot but returne you hartly thanks, and shall study to apply ourselves totally to the counceils and advices of our parliaments. Wee have already sent a message to the two houses of our parliament of England, and your commissioners at London, which wee hope will give satisfaction. Wee have likewise written to all such within our kingdome of Scotland as have any commission from us to lay doune armes, disband their forces, and render their garrisons, and have written to our agents and ministers abroad for recalling all commissions issued forth by our authority to any at sea, against any of our subjects of either kingdomes; and have sent letters to the governour of our city of Oxford to quitt that garrison upon honourable conditions, and disband our forces there, which being granted to him, wee have resolved presently to give the like order to all our other garrisons and forces within this kingdome. And that the truth of these our royall intentions may be made knowne to all our good subjects in Scotland, wee desire a proclamation may be printed and published together with this letter at all convenient places, hoping none will beleve but that this is our voluntary and cordiall resolution, and proceeds from no other ground than our deip sense of the bleeding condition of our kingdomes, and that our reall intentions are—with the blessing of God and his favourable assistance—to joyne with our parliaments in setleing religion here in purity—after the advice of the divines of both kingdomes assembled at Westminster—and our subjects of both kingdomes in freedome and safety. So expecting your counceles and advices in everything wherein wee shalbe concerned, wee bid you hartily farewell." Copy in Sir John Chieslie's hand. [N. XIX., 173.]

HENRY HERBERT to ROBERT SCOWEN and THOMAS PURY.

The Examination of WILLIAM BARRY of Tregiett, in the parish of Lanrothell, in the County of Hereford.

1646, May 16. Chepstow.—“In the beginning of August 1645, when the Scots army laye at Mitcheldeane in Gloucestershire about 1,000 horse . . . came on the Saturday before the siedge of Hereford to his house and carried him away prisoner . . . He . . . was brought to Rosse to Liftenant-Generall Callender, and thence to Deane to Generall Leven where he was asked concerning the King's strength wherein hee gave them his best information. The Lord Leven then tould him hee must go back with the Lord Callender to Rosse. That night hee was committed, next day beeing Sunday, the Lord of Mountgomerie tould this examinant hee would gett him released and hee or the Lord Leveston gave him twenty shillings, and accordingly about six a clock that afternoone hee had his libertye, the Lord of Mountgomerie commanding him to come to his quarters which this examinant did. The Lord Mountgomerie then asked him whether hee would goe with a message to the King's Court to Sir William Flemin which—thong verie unwilling—hee undertooke and carried a letter subscribed by the Lord Mountgomerie, the Lord Cinckelare, and the Lord Leveston to Sir William Flemin with direction in case hee were not at court to deliver the letter to the King's owne hande. This examinant, repairing on Munday to Rewperre in Glamorganshire, where the King then was, delivered the letter to Sir William Flemin who shewed the same to the King in the garden in the sight of this examinant. Upon reading whereof the King came to him and sayde, 'you are come owt of the Scott's armye. How strong are they?' This examinant replied they were a greate armye, hee beelieved twenty thousand men, but thought they were his Majestie's faithfull subjects, some of them declaring themselves his Majestie's sworne servants. The King asked who were they; this examinant replied that the Lord Levestone sayde hee had byn so this five yeeres. The King sayde it was true, so they parted. That night Sir William Flemin came along with him to Carlyeon, and next day beeing Tuesday to Monmoth and about fowre of the clock that daye neere this examinant's howse in a woode mett with the Lorde Mountgomerie, where after two howres' privat discourse they parted. Then Sir William Flemin came with this examinant to his howse, and the Lord of Mountgomerie with the Lord Sinckclare and the Lord Levoston came thither in the night to Sir William Flemin, where after long discourse, sitting up all night, at breake of day on Wednesday morning, that day they marched to Hereford to beesiedg it. The three foresaid lords repaired to theyr quarters and Sir William Flemin to the King. Abowt two dayes after, Sir William Flemin sent his man to this examinant to meete him at Monmoth, which hee did. Sir William Flemin then tould him hee must goe with a letter and deliver it to eyther of the three lords that mett at his howse. Hee accordingly went and delivered the letter to the Lord Mountgomerie at Dydley in Herefordshire, on Friday night as hee thinks, but the contents hee knowes not. The Lord Mountgomerie called for a mapp and after perusall towld this examinant hee wOULD meete Sir William Flemin at Henllan, a place seaven miles from Hereforde. This examinant acquainted Sir William Flemin therewith, and brought him on Satyrday to the said place, where the Lord Mountgomerie was, and after an howre or two in discourse parted, the Lord Mountgomerie commanding this examinant to bee at a place called New Inne next morning, beeing Sunday, that hee might consider of another meeting with Sir William Flemin. The Lord came not that daye, but Munday morning the Lord Mountgomerie sent his man Richard Storye to this examinant, who towld him hee had a message from his lord to Sir William Flemin, and desired him to go for him, which hee did upon the said Storye's horse, and Sir William Flemin beeing then at Gudderidg Castle, came along with this examinant neere New Inne, where Richard Story spoke with him, and after some discourse, they parted, from which tyme this examinant never heard any more.

And this examinant farther saith that what hee did was only as hee thought for the goode of the Kingdome, the Lord Mountgomerie declaring that the busines they were now abowt with the King was to settle a happy peace." (See Commons' Journals, iv. 569.) Signed. [N. XIX., 187.]

HENRY OGLE TO SIR J[OHN] F[ENWICKE].

1646, May 20. . . .—"We have a regiment lately come in from Scotland, under the command of one Colonel Maull. . . . They are very oppressing to our country, going up and down, burning towns, as the soldiers phrase it, receiving 3*l.*, 4*l.*, 5*l.*, and more according to the bigness and littleness of the towns, and where they quarter at night they demand, as I am told by a preacher their own countryman, who is sorrowful for their demeanour, for a captain 12*s.*, for a lieutenant 6*s.*, ensign 4*s.*, and for common soldiers 2*d.* a man, which they levy before their departure from their quarters. Their usual march is 5 or 6 miles a day, and not directly forwards neither. They have been some ten days in the country and are not above some 14 miles yet from the borders. The Committee is about to write to the General to certify him of their insufferable oppressing courses and hopes from him to get relief, else our country will be undone. There is not almost a week passes but forces are passing back and forth, so that our country is most pitifully harrowed. This hath been so often remonstrated and so little remedy that most despair, and so sit down in silence. . . . It would be beneficial to our poor country that a motion were made no more forces might come in amongst us, there being now a great levy of men which fears the country, these already come are so oppressing in their levies of moneys, much more if so many thousands follow as is here reported are coming amongst us. The letters and other carriages of our brethren, commissioners for that kingdom, gives all good satisfaction of their well intentions, but the oppressions and carriages of the common soldiers are very gross and oppressive, raising up the reproachful names of Roundheads, Parliament rogues, &c." Information of JOHN GOODYEAR and GREGORY WILSON, Sequestrators for Langburgh Wapentake, presented to the Committee for the North Riding.

[1646, May.]—"That many officers and souldiers which were lately in the garrison of Newark and others the King's garrisons lately taken in are now mingled amongst the Scotts in their army and doe insinuate themselves into there companies and thereby draw the rudest sort of the Scottish army to comitt fearfull outrages in our country, which wee humbly certifie by credible informacion from our neighbors, wee not dareing to stay at home ourselves to stand to the mercy of those merciles men.

First it will bee proved that the sequestratours have bin sore threatened to bee bereard of their lives and have had their goodes taken from them, and many of the inhabitantes have had their horses taken from them upon the highway and their purses and clothes, and some sore beaten and wounded.

That as wee are credibly informed they have taken divers horses belonging to Collonel James Mauleverer at Ingleby Arncliff, and allmost undone James Clifton of Westlaythes by plundering, and on John Trewhit of Dounton, and as wee are informed fall cheifly upon them which are best affected.

That a poore woman of Dounton striveing to rescue some goodes of her owne was miserably murderd.

That one Thomas Spence of Gisborough, a man of good estate and credit, was lamentably murdered in his owne howse being run through with a rapier and, as if that had not bin enough, had allso his braines beaten out.

That the Scottish horse lay such excessive taxes on the country, that they are not able possibly to subsist, but are forced to suffer their goodes to bee taken—as it were legally—though noe such oppressive sesses bee imposed by the parliament comissioners or comittees for the country haveing legall power.

That the said sesses are generally layd on after the rate of about 90,000l. per month for Yorkshire, besides plundering, stealing horses, and free billitt.

By these courses our poore country will bee undone which formerly groand under the like—though not soe greate tyranny—and for our parte it shall never greive us though wee bee allmost ruind in our estates, in regard wee are in so good hopes of a happy conclusion.

That none dare passe from towne to towne in regard soe many have had not only their money taken from them but allso their horses and clothes.

That an honest man of Egton striveing to rescue a horse which the souldiers would have taken from him had his hand stroken off." Signed [N. XIV., 229.]

Examination of [JAMES THURBARNE] Town Clerke of Sandwich.

1646, June 8.—“That Pitman came from Rochester with Hudson as he said to Sandwich.”

Examination of Doctor FRANCIS CROSSE.

Same date.—“That Hudson was with him and tolde him he coulde bringe the king to the parliament, and woulde undertake it upon his life. He desired to doe it privatly and have his intentions knowen to Mr. Pierpoynt and Mr. Hollis and to none of the Scotch commissioners. If they knewe it, the king woulde be hurried away to Scotlande. He sayth he procured the passe for Hudson of the Speaker's Secretary. Hearing his good intentions he asked him to doe it without going into France, but he answered he woulde goe and have letters of credence from the Queene to the Scotch army. Then he coulde better effe[c]t it. He said he woulde not stay above three dayes there.

Thursday or Wednesday last was the first time he sawe him and not this twelvemonth before. Then he sente for him to come to the Swan in Fish Streete to dine. Hudson had two men with him there. He knewe not their names. He dined and supped with the said company at both diner and supper.

He knowes not of any company that he wente into or that came to him nor of any message or letter that he sente while he was in towne. He knowes not where he lay on Wednesday and Thursday nighte. He lay at his house one nighte.

Being pressed where he lay or whether at his house, he answered one nighte at his house, but after confessed two nighte, the two firste nighte that he sawe him after he came to towne. He sayth that the first day he dined and supped with him at the Swane. The nexte day they dined and supped together at his house. His men satt with him at meals at the tavern. There was none other but his wife and a gentlewoman and Hudson and the man that was with him. The gentlewoman was Mrs. Mortimer. She lives in the Muse (Mews) is a widowe. He thinks Hudson sente for her, not he. After he wente from his house he wente to a cook's in Toolies Streete, and lay there, a poore house. Mr. Ed. Stevens and he wente to him thither. Hudson sente him for Stevens to come to him and there they spake of the busines of bringing the kinge to the parliament. He sayth his house is righte agaynste the Gate House. They were two or three houres drinking two pints of wine, and that was at the Blewe Anchor. He said Scotts were soe base and did soe abuse the English it was pittie but they shoulde suffer. They will suffer noe Englishman to come to him. He said he conceived the Scotts woulde undoe the King. He said Hudson said the Scotts woulde have thirty-six hundred thousande pounds for their danger by Montros and they have 10,000*l.* per month for customs, and the King as he thinks spends not above 100*l.* a month. He sayth he hath good ground from the King that he will goe alonge with him from the Scotch army. He said he wente to the Queene to make it her busines that the people mighte love him the more. He and Hudson both knewe that the parliament had sente for him to the Scotts army. Hudson toulde him that the mayour had him in his custody and the Kinge sente for him and soe he escaped going upon his worde. He said he spake of these two members of the house, for he said they were rational men, and woulde carry it secretly that the design might not be loste. He did intend at his returne to comunicatt it to the King. He wente for the passe for himselfe the day after he was at the cook's and is dated the day he went for it, yet he had it not til the day after. He wente to him with his passe to the cooke's in St. Toolies, but from his house he wente with him to the White Lion in Tower Streete. Mr. Stevens wente with him when he carried the passe. He sayth at his coming away he desired the King not to ingage himself too far to the Scotts til he hearde further from him. Hudson, he thinks, was unsatisfied with the Scotts, for they woulde not let him stay with the King although they had promised to the King he shoulde stay with the King. He sayth that the maiour of Newcastle and the Aldermen coulde not come to the Kinge, but making use of Hudson, they came to the King and kissed his hande.

He wente twice the first day for the passe and desired it for himself to traueil to improve himself for the languages. He said he tolde them he had taken the Covenant.

He had that letter from Hudson and knowes his hande.

The passe was in the deponent's name and he gave it to Hudson that soe he mighte passe freely.

He wente to Stevens his house to day and did whisper with his wife that he had a letter for Hudson and wished him to come to him.

The serjant came to this deponent's house to search for Hudson but he was gone that morning thence.

He sayth that he hath spoken with none this day since he was taken but his keeper and sente for his wife whoe dined with him."

(The rest of the examination is printed in Peck, Desiderata Curiosa, ix. 16.)

And

Examination of JAMES THURBARNE, Town Clerk of Sandwich.

Same date.—"Laste nighte he was sente for by the Mayor and the jurats of Sandwich. When he came he saide he founde the mayour, Captain Peake and Mr. Foster, two jurats, and Lieutenant-Colonel Pitman and Mr. Hudson. When he came they were discoursing of Hudson's busines. He desired to heare agayne. They tolde this examinante that this man conveyed the King to the Scotch army, and fourteen days agoe he came from Newcastle to London, and Saturday nighte came to Sandwich with Lieutenant-Colonel Pitman, and Pitman left him that nighte and came to him one Sunday morning, and being ready one Sunday evening to take horse for Dover, Pitman sente for the maiour whoe came and apprehended him, asking him his design. He said he was going for France. Presently withal the inkeper where he lay brought in the passe here produced, founde in his servant's boots as the inkeper said. His name is Robert Barham. Upon further discourse he said his man was not in the passe for he was in the pay-sheets (?) and this man traveling by his owne name. Then I desired his design which he said was to goe to France to speake with the Queene, by whom he mighte be received to the Scotch army agayne, that he mighte gayne the King to come to the parliament. He said that his Majestie came from Oxford with Mr. Ashburnham and him. The King gave out that they were for London, and the lords knewe noe other. They came to Brainforde, ten miles from London. I asked if the King was not within the suburbs. He said that was a secret and desired to be excused. He saide he had the watch worde of N[ewcastle] from the captain of the garde at Newcastle, and soe passed through the garde very quietly and came to London yesterday was fourteen dayes. He said he came out of London as he beleives on Saturday and Colonel Pitman and he mette on this side Rochester, and came to Sandwich one Saturday. He said if the maiour and jurates woulde have a letter sente him he woulde sende it to two such gentlemen that shoulde carry the message to such parliament men that shoulde be satisfied. Being asked whoe they were, he said they were men. Asked who they were, he said, Mr. Hollis, Mr. St. John, and Mr. Rouse." Signed "James Thurbarne."

And

Examination of EDWARD STEVENS of Westminster.

Same date.—"He hath knowen Michael Hudson nere twenty yeares. He sawe him in Auguste laste at the White Harte in St. Giles, where he lay above three quarters of a yeare. He wente in the habit of a scoller then in grey suite with a blacke casocke. One Friday laste at nighte, by mere accidente he sawe him in Southwarke, and not before since Auguste. One Friday nighte aboute five a clocke, I was at a tavern under the Exchange in the Strande, and a brother-in-lawe of his came to me and asked me for Mr. Hudson. I asked him what he coulde doe with him if not arreste him. I protested I had not seene him. I desired him to see him. His brother and I wente downe. I wente into Southwarke and founde him and then he was going. We dranke a pinte of wine and then he wente away. I asked if he wente away with the King. He said I (aye). He said he was a prisoner at Newcastle and had got his liberty. He advised him to make his peace with the parliament, els he was undone. He assured me to come agayne within a fortnight. I wente to some friends to advise what to doe. This morning I acquaynted Mr. Rouse with it aboute 7 this morning and at 2 this afternone, and he said he was taken. I wente out today at six of the clocke and was never at home since. He sayth that after he hearde the King was gone he thoughte upon some speach betwixte Hudson and him heretofore aboute a yeare since, that the King was gone to Lynne. I tolde this to Mr. Rouse. He said that they had a design for Lynne and the Ile of Ely. Hudson had many suites. He was his solicitor for twenty. He said the Scotts woulde not suffer him to come to the King agayne; there was a fayr correspondency betwixte the English committe and him as he said. They coulde not goe to the King, but he did often goe and they were loath he shoulde come away. Mr. Samuel Thornley, one of the committees at Westminster, was the man that he employed to Mr. Rouse. He sayth in Auguste laste Hudson's judgment as he thinks was for the parliament. He had two livings but they were to be extended for debt and his rents given up, and was not sequestred though it be said he was sequestred. He is aboute forty yeares of age. I asked why he did not persuade the King to come hither as well as to the Scotts. He refused to ansuere. He said they lefte the King forty-eight houres til they wente to the Scotch army and returned. He did not tel where it was. They sente for a barber to trime them and he said they had almoste been discovered, for their hayre the barber said was cut with knives. He said they came within ten miles of London and dined there. He said the King was not in London. He wished me to be silent and said when he came backe he woulde say more to those he mighte truste. He was not disguised, but in a greene suite." Signed "Edw. Stevens."

And

Examination of Lieutenant-Colonel THOMAS PITMAN, an Officer for the King heretofore.

Same date.—“He was lately in Kente, his wife is there near to Sandwich. On Saturday laste, he wente to Sandwich from London. He knowes Mr. Hudson, but whether a parson (?) or noe he knowes not. He over-tooke one on Saturday laste on Rochester Bridge that called himself Dr. Crosse. He said he was for Flanders and I asked him if his name was not Hudson. He said noe, it was Dr. Crosse. I said I thought he was Hudson and he was with one. He said I (aye), then I was acquainted with him. I supped with him on Saturday nighte. He spake to me both Saturday and Sunday of many particulars of the King's intentions, which were, he intended to sende four propositions. 1. to yelde the Militia for years to the parliament. 2. leave church government to the house. 3. he woulde stande for good tearmes for them that adhered to him. The fourth, I forgett: it was Irelande. His intention in going to France was for the good of the King and . He came by London to acquaynte some parliament men with this as a message from the King. He shoulde have spoken with my Lorde Maiour, but coulde not, but sente a message to him in his time of being there. A friende of his got a passe in the name of Crosse, for him to passe as physiciau. His intention was for a letter from the Queene to give thanks to the Scotts for the receiving the King and desiring that he mighte be agayne readmitted. He said the deputy maiour broughte him out of the towne, and the captaine of the garde gave him the worde before nighte. He tolde him that he had spoken with some parliament men for the King, and the man to whome he writte his letter can tell whoe they were. The firste time he sawe him was in Oxforde, and he undertooke then to goe to Warham and get it given up to the King. His way was he wente as a pursuivant (?) from the parliament to receive the King's rents, and at a weeke end he gott Warham. He let downe the bridge and this examinante then entered with his horse. He woulde ordinarily make the Speaker's passes and they wente . . . I wente to church with him on Sunday, and dined with him, and we were at church twice in Sandwich. After afternone service he desired to be gone to Dover, for a packet boate was to put off that nighte. Aboute five at nighte his horses were ready, and his man Robert Baker, whoe was with him at Warham, and soe called himself there. Then, as he was going to horse, I desired him to drinke a pinte of wine and I sente John Witherborough D[eputy]-Constable (?) of the towne, to the maiour, to desire the maiour to come to me. He came and I layed my hande on his sworde and said he was a prisoner to the State and so was his man. I lefte the horses and armes with the maiour. He sayth he tolde him he lefte his horses there and his sworde and two peeces to come from his sister at whose house he lay and in whose house he was when he was searched for. His sister broughte him away to another place. He much desired to come to London." Signed "Tho. Pittman."

And

Examination of PHILADELPHIA CROSSE, wife of Doctor Crosse.

Same date.—"She sawe her husband this day at Spencer's (?); they dined together. She knowes Mr. Hudson. He was at her house and lay there two nights laste weeke and dined and supped there one day. It was Munday and Tuesday as she thinkes. Hudson's wife is her sister. He spake of bringing the king from the Scotts. Mrs. Mortimer dined with him when he was there. She sayth that he was not in her house that nighte. He said that he woulde acquaynte some members of the house with his purpos and he spake of Mr. Hollis and others whose names she forgetts." Signed "Philadelphia Crosse."

And

Examination of JANE STEVENS, wife of Edward Stevens.

Same date.—"She knowes Mr. Hudson, not Dr. Crosse. One Crosse was at her house today and said he woulde speake with her husbande and nothing els.

Ed. Stevens sayth that he spake not to him of any member of either house. Hudson said that the King would yelde the militia and Irelande, but the Bishops' lands the Bishops had soe satisfied his scruples he woulde not yelde, and Dr. Stewarde (?) had perswaded him to it. He said he desired the King not to ingage himself too far to the King (sic ? for Scotts).

Lieutenant-Colonel Pitman sayth that she wente away with him in a coach. He was seene by one and she put her hands before him that Dr. Dune mighte not see him. She sayth her husbande hired the coach that caryed him away.

Dr. [Crosse] sayth they wente in a coach to the White Lion in Tower Streete where they dined and supped.

Humphrey Crosse, father to the Dr., said nothing." [N. XIV., 127.]

Examination of ANNE MORTIMER.

[1646], June 11.—"She sawe Mr. Hudson twice when he was laste in towne the laste weeke. Once at Mr. Crosse's, the other time at the Blewe Anchor, in St. Tulie's Street. He sente for her to Mr. Crosse's. He alsoe sente for her by a waterman to the Blewe Anchor. He sente for her thither to knowe where he mighte lay. There was none there but a lame man. He desired her to fetch a passe for him from Mr. Crosse's which she did accordingly. Noe body wente with the passe but herselfe. Mr. Crosse delivered the passe to her. She knowes not in whose name the passe was. When she was at Dr. Crosse's she dined with him, and there was then nobody there but the Dr. Crosse and his wife and another man that satt belowe Mr. Hudson; whether he was Hudson's freinde or noe she certainly knowes not. She thinks it was not Hudson's freinde. She dined with him on Tuesday at Dr. Crosse's and on Thursday towards (?) the dining she caryed him the passe. He sente her with noe messages or letters, neither did he aske her.

1646, June 13.—She sayth she tolde me but one untruth laste time for she said Mr. Hudson wished that he coulde have spoken with my Lorde Maiour. She said she coulde not tell. He asked me if my Lorde Salton did not love the King. She said he was his cosen and had noe reason to the contrary. He said my Lorde Salton, it may be, can bringe you to the speach of my Lorde Maiour. Hudson desired to speake with him. I tolde my Lorde that a gentleman, a freinde of the King, did desire to speake with him. He said he woulde doe any service for any of the King's freinds. He desired that Mr. Hudson woulde appoynte a place of meeting. I said your Lordship may appoynte the place, and he appoynted the Hoope tavern on the bridge. My Lorde and he mette there and I was there. They were together not a quarter of an hower. My Lorde lyes at S house in the Strande. My Lord Salton and Hudson mette at the tavern at eight at nighte. Then Hudson wente away. It was Friday nighte."

And

Further Examination of MICHAEL HUDSON.

1646, June 11.—The beginning is printed in Peck, Desiderata Curiosa, ix. 24. The words omitted at the end of clause 2 are "before he heard it from the King. She told me it one Saturday, and the Tuesday after the King told me of it." It proceeds thus:—"I came out upon his parol pretending to go to Gloster for an exchange. The 500 horse to meet at Harborough and the body of the Scots horse should meet the King between Newwarke and Nottingham. This Nicholas tolde him and Ashburnham. He was ordered to goe to Southwell if the horse were not at Harborough.

The King acquaynted the lords at 10 at night of his purposes to leave Oxford and goe to London. Ashburnham and the King tolde Hudson that he tolde the lords that he would come to London. Otherwise if the Scots would not give him assurance he would goe to Paris.

He writte this after the members of the house of commons came to him.

While he was in London Mr. Stevens tolde him that he would acquaynte Mr. Rous, Mr. Densil Hollis and Mr. St. John, Mr. Whitlocke and Sir Gil. Gerarde with his purposes.

He was not with Mr. Stevens above an hower."

The Examination of MICHAEL HUDSON.

"After his letter writte to my Lorde Dunfermelin he was discharged within four dayes. On Wednesday, the 20th of May, he sente this letter by Mr. Archibald Hay to the King to be sente to my Lorde Dunfermling if the King thought fitt, he then being prisoner in the Maiour's house. He sayth the King himself reade it as Mr. Archibald Hay said. The King then delivered it to my Lorde Dunfermling.

Being asked whoe were ingaged in he said it was one of the propositions of the Scots Commissioners to Mountrell at Southwell. Mountrell was for the King. One of the articles were that he and Ashburnham should be secured. The Lords Commissioners at Southwell were the Lorde Dunfermling, Lorde Louthian and Sir Gilbert Carr as he believes. His Christian name he perfectly remembers not. These commissioners he knowes onely from Montrel, not of his owne knowledge. He sayth he came to Montrel on Wednesday, the first day—29 April—. The Scots would not speake til servis were done. After servis, Montrel wente to them and he tolde him they said to him they could make noe conditions that would breake the covenant and treaty, but if the King pleased to come and trust them they would receive him in such an honourable manner as should exceede the King's and Dunfermling's expectations. He said the General said he would creepe upon his knees if he would come to them. I tolde Munstrell if this was all, it was in vayne for me to stay longer. They must not expect the King to come to them; he was resolved not to trust them except they would expresse the conditions and give it under their hande. I was pleased to take horse then. My Lord Dunfermling came to Munstrell. I sawe him come to the house but I spake not to him, neither did I heare him speake to Munstrell. Munstrell said my Lord Dumfermling desired that he would wait ane answer to the King till nexte day six at night for they would sende for some commissioners that were not then at Southwel and advise together at Southwell the nexte day, and sende the King a satisfactory answere. Munstell then sente for me and tolde me what Dunfermling had desired of him. I tolde him I could not stay soe long; the King had commanded me to be with him the nexte day being Friday, at dinner, and he was 80 miles from the place, the King then being at Downham in Norfolke. Munstrel wente backe to them and tolde them they muste resolve sooner for he could not stay the messenger soe long, soe they appoynted one the nexte day and Munstell wente to them at one and at four brought me this answere, that the Scots would agree to perform the four propositions expressed by them in this matter and which were the same that the King and he had agreed at Oxforde. I tolde him these woulde not satisfie except they woulde give them under their hand for that was my instructions to see them under their hand. He wente backe to them, and they refused it. He said he desired the King to believe them, and I said he would not. Then he desired me to wrighte under my hande whatever I would want. He feared he said I would not make it fayrly for the Scots. When I was beginning to wrighte, he said I neede not, he woulde wrighte to the King himself and he gave me a litle note to this effect, open and written in English: 'the Scots have agreed to all the propositions agreed when I was with you in Oxforde. The particulars the bearer can more fully relate. I have great hopes, and were they any other people I coulde give you an assurance of what they promise. I desire your Majestie soe much to truste me as to beleive them.' Hudson, to avoide mistake, wrote the propositions with his owne hande and sente it to the Scots by Munstrell and Montrel said they and he agreed and protested them. Montrel altered one of them with his hand by the Scots' directions as he said, which was for the King's freinds. The Scots woulde endeavour with the parliament that but four of them shoulde suffer and that shoulde be onely banishment. After he had mended that proposition he said that my Lorde Dunfermling tolde Muntrell as he tolde him that Dunfermling said that if the Scots did not fully performe these propositions according to their indenture, he woulde printe them and publish them to the world for their shame. Then I wente the King and was with the King at Mounforde in Norfolk on Friday nighte. I delivered to him Munstrell's note and tolde him the propositions and all the former passages, and he resolved then to goe to them. He parted with the King at Radaland (? Ridland) woods ende, and the King wente for Norfolk to Downham to the Swan. The King and Ashburnham had like to be discovered by a barber whoe said their hayres were cutt with a knife. He came backe to Downham and mette Skipwith upon the way whoe came from his Majesty and tolde him that if he had any friendes there they were gone to Montforde to the Cherry (?). The King sente me backe to Downham from Monforde to Mr. Skipwith for a coate and sworde, and I had it of him for him. I wente for the linnen but forgott it, and we sente backe for it by a trusty messenger.

When he came to Southwell he asked Montrell what was the reason of his confidence of the horse being at Harborough and they came not. He said he had his assurances from the Scotch commissioners at London. He asked Montrell—but I had noe instructions for it—what woulde become of Montros if a peace was concluded upon these propositions. He said the Scots had agreed that the King shoulde sende Montros into France by way of an ambassador for his When the king was at Newcastle, the king and they did much dispute about Montrosses disbanding. They then pressed that Montros shoulde submit to the justice of parliament in Scotlande, but the king woulde not yelde to it nor agree to his disbanding, til they agreed that he shoulde be sente away. Being asked why the king writte to Montros to disbande absolutely; and as to disbande upon conditions,* he saythe the reason was because the king and Scots had agreed that he and Ogleby and Craforde shoulde goe into France. This was tolde him by Cambel, when he himself was in prison and thé king after tolde this examinante that Montros was to goe into France and to disbande, the king tolde him further what he had sente to the houses and commanded him to tell it the Queene. Being asked whether the king, secretary Nicholas, or Ashburnham did tell him of an agreement betwixte the Scots and the king: the king, and Nicholas and Ashburnham tolde him that the Scots and he were agreed. The agreement was made at London by Montrel and the Scots commissioners, that the king shoulde goe to the Scotch army. All the agreement with the Scots was made by Montrel that ever he hearde of.

Being asked why he wente not himself to the Scotch commissioners he said his instructions were onely to goe to Montrel and to keepe myself from being knowne to any. Never was he toulde by the king, Ashburnham or Nicholas or any other that any did agitate any business from the king either at London with the Scotch commissioners or any in the Scotch army but onely Montrell. I never hearde from any that any agitate[d] any business either here or at Southwell but onely Mountrell.

Being asked how often he wente to the Scotch army he said the firste time was, he wente to Harburgh on Wednesday 8th April, he went to meete the party of horse which were to meete the king, finding them not there upon the day, he wente to Southwell, and there I lay at an inne and there Montrell was quartered in the Scotch General's lodgings whether he wente to him imediately. Then he tolde him he coulde have noe answer til Munday. I wente backe to Harborough and soe to Woodstocke, intending to goe to Oxford, but finding noe convenient passage I returned on Monday towards Southwell and came thither on Wednesday 15 April.

Being asked why he wrights in his paper soe of the Scots he said it was because of their fayling at Harborough which was the moste unworthy (?) thing that ever was done. If the king had been taken he had been in a . He thought the Scotts were (?) very much. 26 April, Ashburnham came from Woodstocke where he was aboute the treaty of surrender of Woodstocke. Ashburnham said he and the two lords moved the parliament forces at Woodstocke to protect the king in that army. They said they woulde not undertake it then. Mr. Ashburnham said to me they muste goe my way for noe wayes was safe. By way he meanes to goe disguised with a party of horse. He, Mic[hael] (?), the king, Mr. Ashburnham were not in London nor ever nearer than Harrowe on the Hill. He said the king gave a warrant to Richmonde and Linsey to goe out of Oxford, and they made use of that warrant, and wente to the Parliament's quarters and tolde them of the king's going to the Scotch Army as we supposed. This the king said when he sawe the bookes, whene we were discovered. He had noe message from the king to any in this towne, neither did he sende any to any but to Mr. Crosse, Mrs. Mortimer and Mr. Stevens. He stayed in London from Munday til Friday nighte. He came out of Newcastle the Sunday sennet (seven night) before. He sayth the captayne of the garde brought the king's groome, and a smith and myselfe out of the garde but the deputy maiour of Newcastle knewe nothing of his coming out.

Sir Henry Gibbs knewe of his coming out of Newcastle, soe he did of Mr. Ashburnham's going away. Sir Henry Gibb woulde have had me goe to Tinemouth, soe to Holland, and I desired to have the king's nagg and I woulde goe to London. He sayth my Lorde Dumfres and Lorde Dunfermling knewe of his coming away, soe did the governour of Newcastle. Sir Henry Gibb and my Lorde Dumfres were against his coming by lande for feare of being taken. My Lord Dumfres tolde me he was with Ashburnham at Tinemouth Castle and stayed with him Munday and Tuesday til nighte. Being asked how he knewe that those two Scotch lords knewe of his coming away, he said Dunfermling was with the king when he tooke leave, and he had of him 20*l.* in golde which my Lorde Dumfres delivered for silver. Dumfres said my Lorde Dunfermling said if I had neede I shoulde have 100*l.* in golde without silver.

My pretence of coming away was that I mighte be free from a messenger of the parliament's. The deputy maiour let me goe to the king upon the king's desire, and there I stayed at the king's desire to the maiour.

The deputy maiour tooke me prisoner upon the bridge as I was going to Mr. Ashburnham to Sir Henry Gibb's howse by the king's commande to deliver a message to him, that the Scots would protect him noe longer; if he shoulde make all speede, he coulde away. The messenger from the maiour came for me and I wente to him and while I was examined the king sente Mr. Savile (?) to desire that I shoulde not be committed prisoner nor sente away. Thereupon the maiour tooke me home to his house where I was prisoner a weeke before I wente to the king, but the king often sente to me. When I was prisoner the king sente to the Scotch commissioners to knowe whoe had moste interest with the maiour and he was tolde that Mr. Savile (?) had, soe he was sente to me. During the time of my imprisonment I was suffered to goe up and downe the towne with Mr. Dunc, a maiour. I did wrighte to the king while I was prisoner. I did visit Mons^{re} Montrell durance my imprisonment, Mr. Dunc going with me, and I delivered a letter to him which I had writt to the king. This I writt by the consent of the maiour and aldermen. I in that letter sente to the king a counterfeit warrante which was broughte to me by a Scotchman for 40*l.* I writt a clause in my letter that I spake with some of the principal committee men in the towne that admired to heare of the vote which was said to be passed by the independents agaynst monarchy. They said it was not soe but it was a devise by some that had a design upon the king. The money that I had was money that we received of the maiour of Doncaster for rente due to the king.

He spake to the king that the maiour and aldermen of Newcastle mighte have access and they would convey a letter to the Prince from him if he pleased. This he did, hearing that Digby had been with him and was gone into France, fearing that he mighte come and gett the Prince thither which mighte prejudice (?) this kingdom both in victualles and armes." Signed "Mich: Hudson."

And

Examination of JOHN [LORD] BELLASSIS.

1646, June 11.—"He knewe that the king intended to come to the Scotch army before he came thither. Being asked how long before he came thither did he knowe of it, he saythe he being beseged could not have often intelligences but aboute the 8th or 10th of April was the firste time that he hearde of it. The garison of Newarke knewe it. My intelligence was from the king. He writte me worde that he thoughte he shoulde be with the Scotts and intended to goe to them. This letter was aboute the 8th or 10th of April. Being asked what directions he had from the king concerning the armies there he said the king left a latitude to him and seeing himself beseged and without hope of relöfe he treated.

Hudson was sente to me from the king the nexte day after the king came hither. I heardo that the king was in the Scotch quarters. I received a letter in which were propositions worse then we had and a commande to deliver it upon these termes believing I coulde not have better. It was my difficulty that the king shoulde prescribe me conditions before I knewe what I shoulde have. I answered to the king, I wondered he shoulde prescribe me conditions which I coulde not accepte of, that I desired him to leave me to the commissioners to treat. The King sente to me to deliver the towne that nighte. I was troubled at it, I believed I shoulde have better. The King sent Hudson to me to hasten the treaty upon the former propositions that the King sente to me. I sawe him not since in Newarke. He sawe him since at his own howse in Lincolnshire at his owne howse. He came to me to my owne howse. I then knewe not the parliament demanded him. He came from the King to me and desired he mighte goe with me as one of my servants. Being asked [he said] he did not acquaynte him with any thing but that he was to goe into France.

He spake with Mr. Ashburnham in the Ilande the day that the King marched away. He came thither and sente to desier to speake with me. He tolde me that the King had endeavoured to have me waighte on him, but coulde not prevayll. I never els spake with Mr. Ashburnham. He knewe not that the King woulde come, onely he writte he intended it.

He knewe of the King's coming to Southwell within an hower after he was there. A captayne came on his parol to me, and tolde it me and wente backe to the King, and broughte me worde backe that he had kissed his hande and he sente me worde that I shoulde heare of him within three or four houres. I verily thinke the King was deceived in his expectations in his going thither. A letter of the King's purpos to goe thither came in a man's belly. He swallowed it in a billet and voided it twice. I hearde out of the Scotch quarters signs of the King being there.

He sayth that he knowes of noe gentleman of quality that wente to the Scotch army from Newarke but some officers and souldiers of fortune.

After he was beseged he often sente to Oxforde but not by the Scotts nor through their quarters, but in the nighte and by olde women he thinks sente before the line was finished.

He had advertisement from Oxforde by a ragged man whome he imployed as his agent, to be civil to the Scotch there, but at the firste I sallyed equally to them and was as willing to beate the Scotch as the English. I did not sally upon either after I was beseged because of the plagne among us. The English had better workes far then the Scotts. The King's letter (?) to me in _____ was that the King intended to goe to the Scotch army and he had assurance for his servants (?).

Further examination of MICHAEL HUDSON.

1646, June 12.—"He hath been knowen to the King, three-quarters of a yeare and noe longer. I mette with one that tolde me that Sir John Digby was to give up Newarke. He wente to the King then at Newarke, and tolde him of it. Then as the King wente out of the towne, Sir John Digby committed me prisoner, where I was nine weekes, and I sente one to the King and he sente for my discharge. Then I wente to the King. I wente into Dorsetshire to Warham. One Colonel Philips spake of taking Warham. He and Dr. Ferrier (?) spake of me. Colonel Philips desired my acquaintance and he moved (?) me to goe into Dorsetshire and see if Warham was to be taken. I wente thither. He sente Pitman with me to Blancforde (Blandford). I wente to Pitman where he had fifty men that would be the King's. I viewed Poole and tolde Secretary Nicholas that two hundred horse woulde take both Poole and Warham. The men that wente with me it. I lefte two within to let downe the bridge when I came. We wente in and seised all. They thought them troope. He said at Warham he came to gather money for the parliament, in that county. An olde maiour came to examine me and I tolde him this. He writte a cobby of a warrant from Haberdashers Hall to gather the Duke of Richmond's rents. They were concealed rents.

The King imployed him about taking Ab[ingdon]. I tolde the King if the parliament had Ox[ford] and he (?) Ab[ingdon], it coulde stande ten dayes. A guide I intertaind (?) came from Ab[ingdon] to me. My man tolde me most of them intended to come to the King. I directed their entry to the towne. My man was the chefe guide. My man's name was Charles. That was the time when they were beaten out. Thirty-one fierlocks entred; all the towne was in sleepe. That party sente backe his amunition. They entred, had noe powder. The King trusted him with the party. He sayth that he did procure the taking of Criclade. He was at Oxforde before, at Michaelmas twelvemonth, but not knowen to the King.

The firste night when they wente from Oxford and lay at Whithamstede the King helde out well. He was at noe gentleman's house but Mr. Cave's in Stamforde in all his journey. Mr. Cave knewe the King and Mr. Ashburnham. He hath been a prisoner most times (?). Furlong (?) was captain of the garde that guarded the King, and he wente with Mr. Dune and the King, Cooke, and Duke his grooms came to only (?) with him. Asking him what was his mayne worke into France over and above what he said yesterday, he said the King bid him tel the Queene that there was a greate party among Scots at Newcastle were more for him then the Cavaliers were. He received good satisfaction from my Lorde of Lanericke of his charge for him in Scotlande, and that since my Lorde Calender came he received more respecte from the Scots then he did before. He sayth that Montrell tolde him at Southwell that the Scots woulde sende imediately into Scotlande for some of the lords to meete the King at Newcastle. I tolde them the King woulde not come. Therefore he sente a man with me to knowe the King's pleasure. The King sente noe answere, for our purpos was to alter our journey. We before proposed to goe by water but altered our minds for feare of being taken. But the Scotch lords were come out of Scotland to Newcastle the day before the King came thither.

The King tolde him that he sente his letter to the parliament by the advice or consent of the Scotch lords, wherin he had given them satisfaction, but not to the Ministers (?) for they woulde have him express to yelde to the Presbyterian government. Some Scots tolde me by discourse among (?) the Army (?) whome I knewe not, that if the King woulde yelde to a Presbyterian government all woulde be well, and if the parliament woulde not give the King satisfaction in other things tending to his honour, then the whole Kingdome of Scotland woulde rise with him as one man. He asked the King whether the Scots did observe the propositions agreed unto at Southwell. He said, noe, they were now upon other grounds. This question he asked the day before he came out of Newcastle. He sayth when the Scots and he came to Kelham the first night, they tolde the King that they must observe their covenant. God must have the first place, the King the nexte. This a tableman spake to the King. The King said he woulde observe his conscience. Lorde Lothian said, you will receive the humble desires of his people, I (aye), but doe nothing agaynst his conscience. The King at that time said he did not come upon these conditions to them or words to that effecte. I and Mr. Ashburnham were by and the Scotch commissioners and General were there. He sayth when he wente from Downham to the Scotch army, he wente to Montrell, being then at an inne in Southwell and he and I lay together. Being asked what discourse he had with Montrell, he being his bedfellowe, he said; the Scots were loste, God had blinded their eyes to their destruction, in that they observed not the propositions that they made to the King from Harborough. He teling them that the King had greate hazards, they answered to him, that the English woulde have given the King and those with him, for Montrell at Newcastle told him that they kepte not terms with the King. Being asked what Montrell tolde him was the cause of his coming to Englande and whoe employed him, he said the State of France, and it was to treat with the Scots for receiving the Kinge. He shewed me his commission from the King of France. It was not written with inke but with some water. He wetted it to reade. The effecte and substance of it was to treat with the Scots for their receiving the King.

Mr. Ashburnham tolde me that he tooke order with Skipwith to sende me to the King when I came, which he did accordingly, meeting me upon the h[igh] way and he lefte worde at the house.

I was prisoner at Rochester from the committee of Kent. I was alone and a lusty fellowe of Oxford followed me and came to me to Rochester and there were two scollers there in the house. They thought of rescueing me from the soldiers (?).

The King, Ashburnham and Nicholas tolde him that Montrel was here to treat with the Scots for him.

Pitman overtooke him on Rochester bridge. They ridd together to Citingbourne (Sittingbourne). He knewe me when he sawe me and asked me if that man before me was Mr. Robbin. I said noe, his name was Harry. He knewe me well, caryed me in all places to the King's freinds as he said, and where any were Roundheads he bad me take beede. He asked if I knewe not that he gave up Corffe Castle. I said noe. He said he woulde recompense the King if he coulde obtayne a pardon (?) from him for the King. And if the King woulde make him governour of Dover Castle he woulde get and keepe it for him. He said he woulde get the C for the King. He woulde never fighte agaynst the King, but woulde have a commande in Irelande. Citingburne was Jennings', at Canterbury, Terry, and General. At the King's coming to Southwell, Montrel came to meete us fifteen miles, but missed us. We came to Southwell to his chamber. The King lay downe to sleepe, and aboute two houres after Montrel came home, and then my Lorde Dunfermling came. Then came Sir Henry Gibb. We sente worde to Montrel the nighte before that we coulde come the nexte day. He sente worde to us that halfe a dosen of the Scotch commissioners woulde meete at the Trente side but they came not." Signed "Mich. Hudson."

FURTHER EXAMINATIONS.

1646, June 13.—“ Pitman he lefte Hudson at 11 at nighte and wente home and came agaync. He confesseth he spake to him for a friend (?) that was to get what he coulde out of him.

Mr. Hudson sayth that these four propositions Mr. Stevens tolde him the parliament woulde sende to the King, denying anything that he saide of the King sending propositions. Hudson denied all that Pitman said.

Hudson sayth that Pitman tolde him he was to have a regiment of foote and 100 (?) horse for Irelande and with them he woulde take Dover Castle.

Mr. Hudson sayth that nothing that he hath written or answered but he will speake it upon his oath. He may mistake a worde one the matter.

Hudson sayth that for propositions here at London the King lefte it to me to doe as I woulde. Asking him what propositions the King sente to the Queene, he was not to propounde anything to the Queene concerning her coming over or for his yelding. The King gave me a general power to doe as was beste for his advantage when you (he) was gone from London and at Grenwich I writt a litle note to the King that 'I had employed an attorney to his city chapman and that I thoughte he woulde deale better with him then his chapman at Harborough. I was now going to my mistress to acquainte her what I had proposed and to prepare my way for my returne, and I intended to waighte on him withiu three weekes.' This letter he directed to Mr. Tod of Newcastle to deliver to Mr. Watson whoe was by agreement betwixte him and me to deliver it to the French agent to deliver to the King. The man he sente with it was Waterforde. He caryed it to the poste. By chapman he mente the parliament. The attorney he mente was Stevens. Chapman at Harborough were the Scots.

How can he tell the city chapman's minde. He said Stevens tolde him the four propositions agreed upon by the parliament were the Militia, Delinquents, Church, and Irelande. I desired that something mighte be proposed for the Queene and the mitigation of the proposition concerning Delinquents.

He hath not spoken to Crosse nor his wife, neither written or received any essage from them or sent any to them. Being asked the gronde of his confidence for bringing the King, he said the King woulde truste himself with him, and he was not pleased with his being there. During his imprisonment he was twice with a keeper with Montrell and once came over to deliver a letter to him which the maiour sawe. The other was when he wente to the King. He sayth Mr. Durante the preacher there wente with him to the King and twice to Montrell and into the Ilande to a supper. To the Sheilds I wente with the maiour and aldermen to see Sir Henry Vayne's workes. We supped in the Ilande upon the grasse; they caryed colde meate with them."

And

Further examination of Doctor FRANCIS CROSSE.

Same date.—"The service he mente was to bringe the King from the Scots to the Parliament. By olde enemys he said not the now enemys but the ch declare that they had been enemys. He sayth his brother Hudson tolde him that he made my Lorde Bellasis acquainted with his intentions which were these that I declare here.

Upon his last examination, Hudson sayth that he hearde at Blanforde that Pitman was a carpenter. Pitman sayth that he did worke for his owne pleasure, but never wente abroade. He was never questioned for his life before any magistrate but a brother was, and he is deade but not hanged. He was killed at Bridgewater being on the King's side." [N. XIV., 128.]

Further examination of EDWARD STEVENS.

1646, June 15.—“He hath neither seene nor hearde from Hudson since he came laste to towne, nor sente to him nor he to me, nor with Dr. Crosse, nor from him.

I asked him why he did not bringe the King to the parliament. Crosse said he may die that he adhered to it (?), yet I wished him to apply himself to the parliament in bringing him hither to discovering their counsels or perswading the King to yelde. He promised me to returne within a fortnighte then if I woulde persuade (?) him to goe to some parliament men that he mighte truste to communicate his mind to. I asked how he coulde doe any [of] this if he coulde not come to courte. He woulde satisfy their expectation. He said he had busnes into Fraunce and together with it he woulde procure a letter from the Queene to the Scots to suffer him to come agayne to the King, and withall he woulde come backe agayne from France to speake with these parliament men before he wente to the King, and he doubted not but he shoulde satisfy their desires. I did beleive what he said was true for he said he desired the King not to ingage too far to the Scots, for he said they woulde deceive him or els they woulde make him to yelde soe far that both he and this kingdom mighte be at their desires (?) or words to that effecte. Signed “Edw. Stevens.”

Asking him his offer to the parliament, he sayth that to the utmost of his power he hath served them. He said that aboute two yeares since he saved the Ile of Ely by intelligence that he had from him and he communicated it to Lieutenant-General Cromwell. Signed “Edw. Stevens.”

Mr. Stevens sayth that he communicated all the news to him but Mr. Hudson lefte all to him to doe as he wil. He inclined to one noe more then other.”

And

Examination of MICHAEL HUDSON.

Same date.—“The King did not knowe that he intended to apply himself to any parliament men (?) neither did he directe him soe but the Kinge lefte him to use his discretion for his service. He still sayth that he tolde his designe to Mr. Belassis to bringe the King to the parliament from the Scots. He said nothing then but nexte morning asked me if he mighte speake it. He said he had one freinde that he mighte imparte it to if the motion was accepted he woulde come into France to him. He remembers not that he named any freinde by name.

He sayth that the King tolde his intention to the Duke and Prince Rupert on Saturday the day after that Montrell wente from Oxford. He hearde of it himself on Saturday at 2 by Mrs. Prior.

He wente from Kelham to Newarke by the leave of the General and the Scotch commissioners. I had my passe from Major-General Holberne. Our commissioners were not there. My pretence was to fetch the King's horse, but my errand was to speake to Bellasis about the rendering of the towne. My message was that he shoulde presently surrender the towne and get as good conditions as he coulde. I wente another time and the Majour-General gave way to it.

I passed with the King by a passe that I had from a captain whose name I knowe not. The passe was under the hands of Whaly and Norris.” Signed “Mich. Hudson.” [N. XIV., 128.]

Report concerning the PROPOSITIONS touching the MILITIA.

1646, June 16.—(This agrees with the resolutions printed in Commons' Journals, iv. 578, 579, with some variations, of which the most important are the omission of a clause restoring to the King after the expiration of 20 years the power over the Militia and of a clause making it high treason to levy forces without the authority of Parliament.) [N. XIV., 131.]

Further examination of MICHAEL HUDSON.

[1646], June 17.—“ Mr. Hudson for his voiage into France sayth that it was for his owne security and to acquaynte the Queen with what he had acquaynted us in his examination, concerning the King cominge to Newcastle and concerning the Scots and their usinge of him. When he came away the King intended to wrighte by the mariners of Jersey to the Prince that he shoulde not convey himself away out of Englande. He knowes the King intended it and I moved (?) it to him. The maiour and committee of Newcastle undertooke to sende this letter. I gott the King to sende for them and they kissed his hands.

When I came out of the Scotch army to goe to the King in Norfolke, at Stanforde he writte to Secretary Nicholas and sente it by a woman to Oxford—an olde woman. I gave her 50s. The letter was to Secretary Nicholas. ‘Honest Ned, After my hartly commendations rendered unto thee this is to let thee understande that I am in good

The King. While he changed his habit they called him Master Watson (?). Ashburnham (?). Master, the King.

Alley, Muntrell; Chapman, the Scots; lande, the busnes conditions, the four propositions in my note.

Parliament.

He tolde the King of this letter when he came backe and the King approved it.

health at the wrighting hereof and soe is my master Watson, and my brother Jack. This is to let thee understande that since we came to London—this I writt for the King tolde them he woulde goe to London—my master sente me to his ally at Harborough to knowe what he had done with his chapman aboute his lande there. His ally tells me that they have agreed upon the same conditions that my master and he had agreed upon at the last parting, but whether my master will accepte of these conditions or agree with his city chapman I can not as yet tell, but the chapman at Harborough promises very fayre but, Ned, I neede not tell thee what a knave he is. I pray thee, Ned, doe not inclyne (?) yourself to any other master before, you heare agayne from me and I have sente thee the litel (?) six pence to drinke for a token.’ This directed to my very loving frende Ed. Scrivenir. The woman was to deliver it to Secretary Nicholas with her owne hande. I sente by her a note to my brother Pollarde. I tolde him before I came out the meaning of these terms. We lay at Coppingforde in Huntingdonshire one Sunday, 3 May. Wente not to church, but I reade prayers to the King and at six at nighte we wente to Stamforde.

I writte from Coppingforde to Mr. Skipwith for a horse and he sente me one which was broughte to me at Stamforde. We wente out of Oxforde on Munday the 27 April, and came to the Scotch army, Tuesday morning the 5 of May. He did thinke the King woulde yelde the militia, but after we hearde that you had voted agaynst monarchy we thought this speich of propositions was but to fule the people, and that you never meante to sende any. He is considered he coulde have brought the King away. He was often private for an hower or two with the King and nobody was by. Secretary Nicholas woulde never heare of a treaty with the Scots till he hearde of the vote agaynst monarchy. He never hearde the King or Nicholas or any other speake of any of either house or in the city that gave intelligence to Ox[ford].

At Doncaster the Scots broughte the printed order that it shoulde be treason for any to conceale the King and shewed it to the King.

At Copingforde the King and we with my hoste and hostis and two children were by the fire in the hall; there was noe other chimney in the house. The King lay in a grande chamber, and Mr. Ashburnham and I lay together at Whithaunstede.

He sayth Pitman was for the parliament at Bridgewater, and turned to the King at Bristowe. He betrayed Corfe Castle to the parliament and now proposed Dover Castle to doe the like for the King.

That what he tolde Mr. Bellasis and Dr. Crosse and Stevens was not to save himselfe in case he shoulde be taken, but it was reall and that he will swears, and had not mine intentions been reall I could have taken ship at Newcastle and not to have come thither. I made all the haste I could, leaste you should fall fowle before I wente to the Queene. Then I could doe noe good.

He offers to take his oath that all these answers are true, both these and those before." Signed "Mich. Hudson." [N. XIV., 128.]

1646, August 7. Dublin.—“I have not any newes to write unto you, only this, which greeveth the harts of all the poore distressed Protestants of this kingdome. The first day of this present August there was a generall peace proclaimed betweene the Lord of Ormond in the behalfe of his Majestie and Donough MacCarthe, Lord of Musbry (Muskerry) and the Lord Mongarett and other commissioners of the Irish parte. The artickles I could not gett att any rate but I am suer you will have them within this sixe dayes att furthest. There is not anythinge that tends to any good of the English Prodestants but all to there utter ruen. There was a treatie between the Lord of Folleatt and the Lord of Ormond about the begininge of July last and it was thought that it would have produced to good effect had not the Lord Digbie come out of France. For as sone as Digbie came the Lord of Ormond doth nothinge without the aprobaton of Digbie. His Majestie sent a letter about that tyme stricktly comuanding the Lord of Ormond to make nce peace with those unhuman rebells of Ireland, which he would have obayed had not the Lord Digbie perswaded him that his Majestie was prisoner and whatsoever he ritt now he was compeled to rite. Digbie cominge out of France brought with him 12,000 p. $\frac{1}{2}$ pistolls which goeth in France for 10,000*l.*, and is reported that there followeth 150,000*l.* more in mony to mantane the warr against the parliament and that 10,000 men is expected spedelely to be sent out of Ireland into Scotland and 10,000 men more out of France and 10,000 men more out of Denmarke; and that the Lord of Ormond shall sett from Dubline apone the 20th or 24th of this instant August towards the Lord of Insoquine (Inchiquin) and if he will not come in to his peace, I am afraid he will take such an army with him that without God's almitigie providence he canot resist him, and Owin Roe O'Neall is to fall apone the Scottes whom he hath brought soe lowe alreadie that it is to be feared he will overcome them without spetal and spedie ade from out of England.” [N. Further Inducements to move a speedy answer to the [CHESHIRE] petition.

[1646, August.]—1. That the small County of Chester, since the beginning of the war, was necessitated to raise treble the number of forces it was able to pay or the neighbouring counties proportionately raised, whereby the County is in great arrears to the soldiers.

2. That the charge of the leaguer before Chester, being 19 weeks, was near 80,000*l.*, so that Sir William Brereton and the Deputy Lieutenants engaged themselves for great sums for provisions, which are yet unpaid.

3. That upon the reducing of Chester they were also forced to engage themselves in 18,000*l.* to satisfy the soldiers a month's pay, otherwise they would not have been restrained from plundering the City and County, of which there is near 80,000*l.* yet unpaid.

4. That then the reducing of the forces had been attempted but that many of the horse were ordered by the Committee of both Kingdoms into Wales and of the foot to the leaguer of Lichfield Close, whence they are all now returned and lie on free quarter expecting arrears and pay till they be reduced.

5. That some of the auxiliary forces yet unpaid of their month's pay promised at the reducing of Chester threaten to come and plunder the County for the same.

6. That the Excise is hitherto wholly obstructed and the people in a tumultuous manner have risen against the Commissioners and the soldiers express themselves against the Excise, so that there is little hope it can be set up till they are paid and reduced.

Subjoined are Extracts from several letters dated from July 23rd to August 1st showing the demands of the soldiers for their arrears, their mutinous behaviour and the miserable state of the county. [N. XII., 195.]

LORD BROGHILL to [the COMMITTEE FOR IRELAND] on behalf of the army in Munster.

[1646, August.]—The Lord President arrived about the 10th of July last with five thousand hundred pounds part of the 6,000*l.* which by the order of this honourable Committee was to be disposed of to the officers and soldiers equally, but the said money will only be sufficient for about five weeks, 1,000*l.* having been spent on biscuit and salt to enable the army to march. Therefore the Committee will be pleased to ordain some constant supply of money and victual, a part to be sent without delay proportionable to the army you shall design for that service, otherwise that province is in great danger to be reduced to the power of the Rebels, since, First there is a peace concluded of late by the Earl of Ormonde, whereunto some of our party in that province and in other parts may adhere if some settled course be not taken for their livelihood, Secondly, the year being thus far spent, if supplies arrive not whilst the corn is in stack, which now begins to be reaped daily, the corn will not be gained from the Rebels without first gaining the Castles, under the shelter whereof they usually bring their corn, which will be hazardous tedious and chargeable, Thirdly, if there be not an army to keep the field and to leave the garrisons strongly defended the Rebels will deprive us of our markets and keep us within our towns, by which means they will be able to live on the corn within our quarters and to preserve their harvest, which otherwise we might destroy and thereby we shall be forced to expect every morsel of bread and other supplies out of England which otherwise we might in some reasonable proportion, if we had strength, gain from the Rebels, and if any accident happen by contrary winds or otherwise, whereby such supplies fail, the whole interest of the state there must fall into the hands of the Rebels unavoidably, Fourthly, The officers and soldiers there have endured such hardship and yet served valiantly and faithfully, expecting liberal supplies from hence, when this kingdom should be reduced, and now—they finding but little work remaining here to be done—it would be as well matter of great discouragement unto them as of joy to the Rebels, if we should not then find the fruit of such blessed effects here, and it is more than probable that the Rebels—who are exceeding heightened by their late successes—will apprehend their own danger, if they shall not suddenly bend all their power to destroy us before the forces and supplies which are designed shall arrive, and will propound to themselves the more strongly to set upon the work, which will be also the more facile, if forces speedily arrive not then, in respect that many of the Gentry and others who have during the Cessation stood at gaze, now the peace is there concluded will join with them heart and hand, whilst their armies are strong and ours weak, and if the footing we have there should be lost it would cost this kingdom more treasure and blood to regain the same than by the help of the footing we have already to subdue the Rebels; It is therefore humbly propounded that you will take into consideration the sad and dangerous condition of that part of the kingdom and hasten the supplies intended, which we humbly desire may be at least 5,000 foot and 1,500 horse for the present service, which is as little as may be for the preservation of the Parliament's interest there and preventing the annoyance which the Rebels might do to these kingdoms, considering the great numbers which the Rebels are able to bring into the field, they being at this time preparing an army of 20,000 for the subduing of the Parliament's forces in Munster—as appears by the depositions of divers who lately came out of Ireland—and considering also that many men are necessarily required to keep the towns and forts we hold,—and herein I desire that it may be understood that when the Parliament shall resolve of a thorough prosecution of that war there must of necessity be a far greater force of horse and foot and other warlike provisions transported there—and further that the Regiments already there may be speedily recruited, that there may an addition to the train of artillery and fitting carriages with ball, shells, and other necessaries, that a good proportion of powder be forthwith sent, the stores being already so exhausted by the field service and by the defence of Bunnratty at the late siege—which was very strongly maintained—that very little remained in the Province at my coming away, that in respect of the great scarcity of iron there 20 tons may be presently sent thither, and that the former letters and propositions of Lord Inchiquin may be reviewed and such an answer given to what remains unanswered as to your Honours shall be thought fit. Signed. [N. XXI., 123.]

[The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS] to [the HOUSE OF COMMONS].

1646, September 1.—Paper. (This is made up of two parts, the first is answers to the four exceptions and the substance appears from the paper in Rushworth, iv. 1. 325, headed, "To these particulars the Scotch replied," where it is so put as to make it appear it was delivered before August 21st; the substance of the rest of the paper, with the exception herein-after mentioned, appears from the Scotch exceptions to the Parliament's estimate printed in Rushworth, iv. 1. 323, 324, 325.

The said exception is the following passage:—

"To the articles set donne in the debtor's side it is ansered that there is no such clause in the treaty as that the Scottish army should continue in England the numbers of 18,000 foote, 2,000 horse and 1,000 dragoones, but on the contrair the kingdome of England by the expresse words of the treaty is obliged to pay towards their maintenance 30,000*l.* monethly, so long as it doth not amount to the full month's pay.

There is omitted here about ten hundred thousand pounds which the committee residing with the Scottish army is able to make sufficiently appeare to be due by the kingdome of England.") In Sir John Cheislie's hand and signed by him. [N. XIV., 173.]

SIR GEORGE AYSCUE to the COMMITTEE.

1646, September 12. Aboard the Expedition in Carlisle Road.—
"In compliance to the Vice-Admiral's summons, the Governor of Sylly sent Commissioners to Falmouth to treat with such whom he and Colonel Fortescue should appoint for the surrender of the place. Our first treaty proved not effectual in respect of the granting of their instructions, and therefore they desired to return to have them more enlarged. I consorted with the Warwick—who carried them to Syilly—and anchored in Crow Sound from the 30th of August till the Wednesday after, during which time I did employ my endeavours to ingratiate myself with the islanders which came aboard of me, by informing them of the Parliament's favourable intentions towards them who had been before deluded with reports that we intended to put [out] the old inhabitants, and to make a new plantation, but they were quickly undeceived and did afterwards believe so well of us that it proved much for our advantage. We are now agreed for the surrender of it, and this day the articles were signed by us. I have sent the Constant Warwick and the Heart to Syilly with one of their Commissioners to see the Governor sign. On Monday I intend to take Colonel Fortescue's soldiers aboard to transport them to Syilly and to take the surrender of it. I shall most humbly beseech your Honours to be mindful of the great advantage this place may be of, not only in securing merchant men but if you shall please to command serviceable frigates thither, there will not an Irishman be able to trade with France, besides the cleansing the Mouth of the Channel from the King's men of war, who, if they had well understood their advantage might have made that place a second Arger (Algiers), which the Lord Digby knew well, though too late" Signed. 1646, November 19.—“Upon the engagement and protestation of the General, nobility and officers of the Confederate Catholic forces hereunto annexed I . . . bind and engage myself unto them by the reputation and hope of a peace and by the sacred protestation upon the faith of a Catholic in the presence of Almighty God that I will procure the ensuing undertakings to be made good unto them within such convenient time as securities of that nature which are to be fetched from beyond the seas can be well procured and at the furthest by the first of September next . . . or failing therein to unite myself to their party and never to sever from them and those therein interested till I have secured them unto you.

1. That there shall be a revocation by Act of Parliament of all the laws in force in this kingdom in as much as shall concern any penalty . . . or restraint upon the Catholics for the free exercise of their religion.

2. That they shall not be disturbed in free enjoyment of their churches or any other ecclesiastical possessions which are in their hands at the publication of the late peace, until that matter . . . receive a settlement upon a declaration of his Majesty's gracious intentions in a free Parliament held in this kingdom, his Majesty being in a free condition himself.

3. I further engage myself never to consent to anything that may bring them in hazard of being dispossessed and never to sever from them till I free [sic] them so secured therein either by concessions or by their trust and honour from his Majesty in the armies and garrisons of this kingdom, or to put them out of all danger of being dispossessed of them.

4. And further, that forthwith there shall be a Catholic Lieutenant-General of all the forces of the kingdom invested by his Majesty's authority, that the Generals or either of them signing to the said engagement shall be forthwith invested by his Majesty's authority with principal commands worthy of them in the standing armies of this kingdom and likewise in some important garrisons now under his Majesty's obedience, and that a considerable number of the Confederate Catholic army shall immediately be drawn into all the chief garrisons under his Majesty's obedience, and I further assure proportionable advantages to such of any other armies in this kingdom as shall in like manner submit unto the peace and his Majesty's authority.

5. That for the security of so many of these particulars as shall not be performed . . . by the Marquess of Ormonde . . . I will procure them the King's hand, the Queen and Prince of Wales' engagement and an engagement of the Crown of France to see the same performed.

6. And further . . . that the Lord Lieutenant shall engage himself punctually to observe such free commands as he shall receive from his Majesty to the advantage of the Catholics of this kingdom, or during the King's want of freedom from the Queen and Prince of Wales or such as shall be signified unto him to the same effect to be the King's pleasure by the Lord Digby as principal Secretary of State, and further that while the King shall be in an unfreed condition he will not obey any orders that shall be procured from his Majesty by advantage of his . . . want of freedom to the prejudice of what is undertaken.

7. . . . I shall never esteem myself discharged from this engagement by any power or authority whatsoever, provided that "it "be not understood . . . to debar . . . his Majesty's Catholic subjects of this kingdom from the benefit of any other . . . favours his Majesty may be . . . induced to concede to them upon the Queen's mediation . . . or any other treaty abroad with his Holiness. And I further engage myself to employ my utmost endeavours . . . to his Majesty to afford all the subjects of this kingdom that shall appear to have been injured in their estates redress in the next free Parliament.

8. I further undertake that all persons joining . . . in the present engagement shall be included in the Act of Oblivion promised in the peace of every act done by them since the publication of the said peace unto the date of this engagement." Copy. [N. XXI., 42.]

- i. LORD ABERGAVENNY, LORD STOURTON, EDMOND THOROLD, WILLIAM THOROLD, and JOHN PASTON on behalf of themselves and other Catholics residing in Oxford at its surrender to the COMMITTEE FOR BREACH OF ARTICLES.

Petition, stating, that they, conceiving themselves to be within the 11th Article, applied to the Commissioners at Goldsmiths' Hall for leave to compound, which they refused, because the House of Commons had given them no direction to compound with persons under the notion of Recusants, that they have since represented their condition to the House of Commons but as yet without success, and that taking notice of the late order to imprison persons that have been in any of the King's garrisons and have not prosecuted their Compositions with effect, and the late ordinance commanding all such persons to depart the Lines of Communication before the 18th of December they are likely to be imprisoned and suffer other inconveniences, and praying that some speedy course might be taken for admitting them to compound, and granting them protection in the mean time. Signed.

XXII., 93, 94.]

Report of ARTHUR ANNESLEY, SIR ADAM LOFTUS, SIR WILLIAM PARSONS, SIR JOHN TEMPLE, and SIR HARDRESS WALLER.

1646, December 10.—“First as to the general, the Province of Leinster . . . is totally in the hands of the Irish and such as stand in opposition to the Parliament.

The Province of Connaught . . . is all in the power of the Irish except the town and fort of Sligo with 5 or 6 other Castles . . . in the North. . . That county guarded with about 600 horse and 1,400 foot. . . .

For the Province of Munster the Parliament hath only therein the City of Cork and the towns of Kinsale Youghal and Bandon and a part of the County of Cork limited and in a manner guarded with these four strengths, the extent whereof is not above 30 miles in length and 20 . . . in breadth, and much wasted and impoverished with the rebellion. All the rest of that large province . . . is all under the power of the Irish. . . .

For the Province of Ulster the Parliament yet hath the command of all the maritime parts round about it, which is of great circuit. They have therein the City of Derry, the towns of Knockfergus, Belfast and Coleraine, the forts of Inskillen and Culmore and several other small strengths on the seaside. This province consisteth of nine large counties in part of five whereof do inhabit such British as yet adhere to the Parliament. All the rest are utterly wasted, or in part, wherein viz. in part of Cavan and Monaghan many of the Irish do yet rest. The Irish have the Castles of Charlemount Dunganon and Montjoy, and those others now in opposition to the Parliament have the Newry and Greencastle, so as the most part of this Province may be said to be under the command of the Parliament, but of no benefit or advantage to them except the residence and some poor relief for their forces there, and the bare habitation of the few British above mentioned.

Touching the state of the Irish in general they have now under their power in a manner all the artillery of the kingdom except what is in Ulster and some in Munster. They have their men in a better order of war and better commanded by captains of experience and practice of war, than ever they were since the Conquest and these much emboldened by late successes, as well in the field as against fortresses. They are abundantly stored with arms and munition and have many good ports and harbours ready to import more and have all the horses in the kingdom both for service and carriage except what the Parliament have in Ulster, Connaught, and Munster.

Many of their bodies for service are well trained and manned and those well armed; the relations of the numbers of their armed men much vary, but the best estimate . . . makes 20,000 foot and horse, though certainly they have besides great numbers of horse and foot appointed to their ill ends. . . The others now in opposition to the Parliament have about 2,000 foot and 500 horse. The Parliament have yet in Ulster 17 regiments of foot containing about 8,000 men, whereof of the Scotch army intermixt with the inhabitants 3,500, and of the old British 5,000 or thereabouts, and 17 troops of horse about 50 in a troop, and in Munster about 4,000 and 300 marching horse.

. . . For the preservation of such parties and places as are yet in the power of the Parliament . . . and to make further progress . . . it is humbly offered as follows:—

First . . . that the safety of their parties and places in Munster be first taken into care; and to that end that the Lord Lieutenant now residing here be with all convenient speed despatched thither . . . and carry with him the 3 regiments of horse and 4 regiments of foot already designed and may be made ready to be with him transported.

Secondly, whereas there is 30,000*l.* in pieces of eight at 5*s.* a piece in readiness to be sent with his Lordship, and some quantities of . . . victuals arms and munition to be taken up upon the late ordinance of Excise; . . . that those provisions are so far short of what may be requisite to maintain the forces already there . . . and those now to be transported, as it is not be expected that they can subsist thereby but a very small time, specially the small territory about them being very much impoverished, and subject to daily inroads.

Thirdly . . . that the Parliament will . . . ordain a present monthly provision for support of those forces, and that some designment of money may be made for fortifying towns and places and for intelligence and extraordinaries.

And lastly . . . that competent numbers of ships of force, whereof the most part to be of lesser burthens, may be designed to attend their ports there, as well for countenance and to beat off enemies' attempts as to be employed upon occasions and emergencies.

These things being thus provided . . . it is probably hoped that the parties and places in Munster yet under the command of the Parliament will be secured against the imminent danger which may happen through the discontent of our own soldiers and the now insolent forces of the Irish.

In the last place to provide for carrying on a war vigorously . . . against the bloody Rebels there and for regaining that whole kingdom into a just subjection to the Crown of England, in respect no part of Leinster at present stands for the Parliament, It is conceived . . . absolutely necessary to reflect also upon the present condition of . . . Ulster and Connaught and therein so to dispose (?) the said forces yet there as may preserve them from further distempers, and as far as may be . . . advance the service, which may be by furnishing some quantities of . . . victual and a proportion of money to be sent to them in Ulster and Connaught . . . and specially for Ulster, in regard the forces in Ulster seem now distracted under different commands, and so not so apt to be put into service nor to join to the requisite advantage thereof. . . it will be fit a course be forthwith taken that they may be reduced into one command subject to the Lord Lieutenant; and in order towards a full reducement it must further be considered what additional forces are fit to be sent in due times into the several Provinces of Munster Ulster and Connaught for enabling the armies to march altogether at a due season, that so distracting and disabling the Irish they may be distressed from several parts at one time, in which . . . principal care must be taken to impoverish and destroy the several countries out of which they gather their subsistence, and so frustrate them of maintaining considerable bodies to give encounters." *Copy by Nalson. ORDER.

1646, December 10.—Concerning Lord Grey of Warke. (Printed in Lords' Journals, viii. 600.) [N. XIV., 198.]

ROBERT HUNT to the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1646, December 11.—Petition. (The purport sufficiently appears from the order thereon, printed in Commons' Journals, v. 10.) [N. XXII., 90.]

The SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

[1646, December 12.]—Paper. We have considered the reasons for the Houses adhering to their former vote touching the public faith to be given for security of the last 200,000*l.* to be paid to the Kingdom of Scotland, and must still insist that we may have the security agreed upon by the treaty between the Kingdoms or some other particular security. It is well known to the Houses how many and great the troubles and sufferings of Scotland have been for these seven or eight years past, and that within these two years by a cruel and barbarous war divers counties have been wholly wasted and the rest of that kingdom extremely exhausted and impoverished by the maintenance of armies against the Irish Rebels and their Associates in Scotland. We likewise desire the Houses to consider how great a proportion of the Brotherly Assistance remains unpaid for those four or five years past whereby the credit of some private persons of Scotland who were assigned to that money, after long attendance here for satisfaction is almost ruined and wholly extinguished.

There are other persons who out of their zeal for the cause adventured their whole estates, and furnished arms ammunition and provisions upon the coming of the Scotch Army into this Kingdom, and afterwards for six or seven months towards their entertainment, the country being then in the enemies' power.

We have been often advertised from Scotland that the burdens of those persons are still so great, as, if they be not supplied out of the moneys due by this kingdom they will be suddenly ruined. And we have received frequent directions to provide carefully for their relief out of those moneys in such a certain way as they may depend upon and may prevent their ruin. And seeing we know by experience both in Scotland and here that none of their creditors will trust them upon a general security, unless they be ascertained in a particular way, we most earnestly entreat that since we have made so good a progress in other things, we may also herein receive such satisfaction, as we may be enabled to give an account thereof to the Parliament of Scotland.

And whereas, whilst all garrisons here are reduced, and the forces of the enemy subdued, Scotland is invaded and infested for their engagement with this kingdom by forces from Ireland, which with the assistance of their Malignant associates in Scotland keep the hills, possess garrisons, and abide in the fields expecting also further assistance from Ireland, and seeing England is bound by the Large Treaty to prevent and by force to suppress all invasion of Scotland by the subjects of England or Ireland, it is earnestly desired and expected that the Houses will either according to the said Treaty pursue take and punish the offenders with all rigour, or give such a constant monthly supply and assistance for the forces that shall be continued on foot in Scotland upon return of our army, as may speedily reduce those rebels to obedience or drive them out of that kingdom without which it is to be feared they may grow to such a strength as to invade this kingdom. Wherein we are very confident England will out of their brotherly affection and sympathy of the troubles of their brethren of Scotland, and in order to the security and peace of this kingdom return so satisfactory an answer as may further witness their real intentions to preserve a happy union and firm correspondence betwixt the kingdoms.

Concerning your Lordships' desire that the Scotch army after receipt of their money may pay their quarters upon their removes and marches we have no power in that particular from the Army, and can say nothing therein, until they be acquainted. But as to your Lordships' desire touching the preservation and ease of the country in the passage of our army we are warranted to declare in the name of the general officers of the army that they shall have a very special care of the preservation of the country from any abuses or disorders of the soldiers in their passage and march out of the kingdom. (See Commons' Journals, v. 12, 18.) [N. XIX., 133.]

[1646 end or beginning of 1647 (?).] (See Lords' Journals, viii. 571, ix. 111; Commons' Journals, v. 18.)—"My father[-in-law]'s importunity and my wife's sickness makes me write . . . to you, before I can end the whole narration I intend. The sum is I had no plot, I know no plot, save that, because I was oppressed and hopeless of relief by the Parliament for my father[-in-law], [and] have spent so much in following the Parliament that we had neither means, meat, nor money left us, I petitioned to the King, and that it might take effect I mentioned that I would publish a declaration of the injustice [that] had been done me this Parliament by some men in action against the King, and come to Oxford to serve his Majesty with my life and estate bringing as many with me as I could, if his Majesty would do justice to us, and punish our oppressors and send me under his hand these . . . propositions following:

1. That he would maintain the Protestant religion, and never grant toleration of Popery, or dispense with the laws against Papists but by advice of Parliament.
2. That he would grant either an Act of Oblivion for what was past, or suffer the parties accused on both sides to be tried legally, as stood with privileges of Parliament.
3. That he would release all who have been oppressed, and particularly my father[-in-law] Smart, and punish our oppressors.
4. That he would never break the Acts of this Parliament, but govern by the laws, and not suffer the Queen to have any more priests or papists about her than the Articles of marriage allow.

This being given me for my satisfaction and relieved by his Majesty's justice, I hold myself and all others bound in conscience to serve him.

This is all the plot I know. For the money I was to have for my land, I would have paid my debts with [some], left some with my wife and children, and with the rest furnished myself and that company I could get to have gone with me to the King in as good equipage as I could . . . For any design upon the Parliament, City, or any particular member thereof, I protest I know of none.

So as, if it be treason to petition the King when the Parliament fails us, and to serve him upon his doing justice and to sell land to enable me the better to serve him I am a traitor. My former course of life, my service this Parliament may evidence sufficiently my love and constant zeal to religion and laws. This is all, and, when the larger is done, you shall have it. In the meantime, if that will procure me my liberty for the comfort of my father[-in-law] wife and children I have the less cause to complain; if not I am confident my usage will do my enemies more harm in the conclusion than me." *Signed. HUGH MORRELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1646[-7], January 11. Dover.—After a reference to a former letter concerning “a double malladie to this Commonweale, the one by the unjust exportation of our woolls, and the other by a late most dangerous creeping-in corruption by forraine coyne”—“Who is ignorant of the greate decayes to our Marchants in their trading, of their many stopps—yeares together—through the false deceitpt of the manufactures in our kingdome. What is that Crowne Seale—though well intended—but become a meere approveinge of the shameles thefts of our nation. How comes it to passe that the Hollander and the French have soe exceedingly increased in their clothing of late yeares but through the deceitfullnes of ours—and partly through our exchange going so heigh: but of that more heereafter—, I doubt but this will bee confest to bee a desperate malladie and a cure for the same would bee very acceptable, which without presumption I doubt not but to present unto your Honnours' hands though for doeing thereof I shalbee inforced to an unwilling length.

Itt is now neere eight yeares past, that I presented an instrument to his Majestie under the Broad Seale of England in which much labour, care and paines was taken to settle a government in our manufactures. His highnes approved of the overtures I made then unto him concerning the same, appointed a second commission of thirtie of the most experienced marchants of London to consider thereof. They spent eighteene monthes in a weekly debate, consultacion and examinacion of many principall clotherers of the kingdome, and at length concluded on a report seigned under all our hands to bee presented unto this honourable house of Commons, by the hands of Mr. Cradocke who was then chosen one of the burgesses for the cittie of London. Which instrument with the booke of our weekly transactions and examinations will bee worthie of their vewe and much conduce to the publike good of the kingdome. Whether the honourable house of Commons may not thinke good to reconfirme this commission of marchants or counsell for trade to prepare matters of that nature fitt for them, their experience, knowledge and practice in most Christian kingdomes being capable for the same, to whome overtures will bee more freely presented—tendinge to the publike good—then they dare presume to doe to the parliament, and unto how many queries may bee proposed to consult on for the improveinge of commers, viz. :—

Queries—1. Why may not this kingdome beeing soe well situated, blest with soe many fitt and convenient harbours, bee made the magazine of Christendome, and how.

2. May not the establishing of a banke in the cittie of London—as is at Amsterdam—bee a good meanes to improve trade, and what course to effect the same.

3. What expedient may there bee found out for reducceinge marchants' course of exchange to a more equall ballance, because—as now—it makes the French and Hollander undermine us in clothinge, and undersell us, which in tyme may bee the ruine of this kingdome.

4. May it not greatly quicken our exportacion and importacion to take of the greater part of the burdens on our manufactures, how may it bee done for the kingdome's most good and encouragemēt for trade.

5. Whether to take off customes from woules imported from forraine kingdomes may not bee good for our kingdome, how farre it may and when not.

6. Whether the establishing of a marchants' courte, as in France, Spaine and Holland to deside matters and judge of accountts, bills of exchange, charterparties, contracts, bartars, buyings, selling betwixt them, or any matters of that nature amongst any other of the subjects of the kingdome, may not bee a greate improveinge of trade, preserve our marchants and others from ruine by longe law suites to inlarge ther opinions and reasons on this, in all particulers; as alsoe in case of appeale to any higher court, or on what penalltie or above what some it may bee fitt to appeale.

7. Whether if permission were given to marchants and others for transporting their billes of debt in buying other goods may not greatly improve trade throughout the kingdome, what order and for[m] may bee observed in this.

To the severall commissioners which are at Benboe's office concerninge the true makeinge of the manufac[tures] of our kingdome and trade bee considered by this committee of marchants or councill for trade and their report on a serious consultacion to bee reported to the parliament The premises is most humbly submitted to your grave wisdomes." *Signed. Demands by the SWEDISH AMBASSADORS and those of the ELECTOR PALATINE.

[1646-7, February.]—(The substance appears by the next entry but one.) In Latin. [N. XVIII., 28.]

The Articles presented by the IMPERIAL to the SWEDISH PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

[1646-7, February.]—Though the Palatine question was excluded from the Edict of Amnesty and the treaty of Prague, yet since the peace of the Empire cannot be secure unless this controversy be settled without further delay, it is decided and agreed:

First, that the Electoral Dignity remain with the Duke of Bavaria and all the Guilhelmian line, as he has hitherto enjoyed it.

Second, that the whole of the Upper Palatinate remain and belong to the said Elector and all his descendants of the Guilhelmian line, in full discharge of the debt of 13 millions for which Upper Austria was pledged to the said Elector by the Emperor Ferdinand II. for which the said Elector shall execute a release.

Third, that on Charles Louis, the Count Palatine, rendering due obedience to the Emperor, he be equally admitted to the Electoral Dignity but in the eighth and last place, but without any derogation from the rights of the Elector of Bavaria.

Fourth, that on his rendering due obedience as aforesaid, the Lower Palatinate be restored to him, without prejudice however to the feuds granted by the Emperor or the Elector of Bavaria, and on condition that the exercise of the Catholic religion established there be not interfered with and in particular that certain named monasteries should not be molested: and that the free nobles of the Empire in Franconia, Suabia, and the Rhine circle be left in their present state, and lastly that as the Bergstrasse was not formerly parcel of the Palatinate, but belonged to the Archbishop and Elector of Mainz, and was pawned in 1463 to the Palatines, subject to an express right of redemption, it, as it was restored by Ferdinand II. after the proscription of the Palatine Frederic to the Elector of Mainz, shall remain to his successors and the Archbishop of Mainz, on condition of their repaying the sum for which it was pawned.

Fifth, that Charles Louis and his brothers for himself and his heirs whatsoever who shall succeed him in the Lower Palatinate shall renounce all claims to the Upper Palatinate while there continue legitimate heirs male of the Guilhelman line. But if that line should fail, and there should be legitimate heirs male of the Palatine line surviving, the Electoral dignity held by the Duke of Bavaria shall revert to them, the eighth Electorate being abolished and the number of seven restored, and likewise the Upper Palatinate.

The Counter Proposals of THE SWEDISH PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

[1646-7, February.]—First, that there should be included in the Amnesty contained in this present treaty of peace the whole Palatine House, and all its adherents, who shall all be restored to the position they held before the outbreak of the Bohemian war. That the Palatine Electoral House, and the Elector Charles Louis and his brothers be restored as regards their former dignities, privileges, properties and rights, which belonged to the said House in 1618, and be in the same position and rights as the other Electors and Princes of the Empire both in sacred and profane matters, and enjoy the religious peace and whatsoever rights the other Evangelicals enjoy, Provided that the Electoral Dignity with all its rights shall continue to be held by Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria, for his life as he now holds it. Further as it has seemed good to his Imperial Majesty and the Diet of the Empire that an eighth Elector be added to the Electoral College, this Electorate shall be held by the Successors of Maximilian and his descendants of the Guilhelman line, on whose extinction the eighth Electorate shall be suppressed, and the number of seven Electors, fixed by the Golden Bull, continue.

Secondly, the Elector Charles Louis, restored to his dignities and property, subject as is hereinbefore and hereinafter mentioned, shall bind himself to his Imperial Majesty by the same oath as the other Electors and Princes of the Empire, and on the death of Maximilian shall recover his former place of Electoral Dignity with all its rights and transmit it to his successors, yet so that during the life of Maximilian he shall equally enjoy the rights and prerogatives derived from the Electoral Dignity.

Third, that the whole of the Lower Palatinate be restored to the Elector Charles Louis and the Palatine House with all its appurtenances and the Bergstrasse, as well in Ecclesiastical as secular matters, all dispositions, grants of feuds &c. to the contrary notwithstanding. To this not only is the Emperour to pledge himself, both for himself and the King of Spain, but all others who claim any rights or interests are to declare their consent.

Fourth, that in like manner the Upper Palatinate be restored to the Palatine House except the Lordship of Cham up to the river Regen, which is to be left to the House of Bavaria on condition that it may be redeemed within an unlimited time for a fair sum. As to which the Palatines wish it to be understood, that though they might lawfully demand without exception whatever has been taken away from the Palatine House, and that though they consider that they are not concerned in or bound by the obligations between the Houses of Austria and Bavaria with regard to a certain sum of money yet to show their desire for peace and eagerness to defer to his Imperial Majesty, the Palatine House besides the concession already made about the dignity cedes to the House of Bavaria that district of Cham, and expects in return that his Imperial Majesty be released from his obligations, otherwise it insists on the restoration of the whole of the Upper Palatinate. In Latin. [N. XVIII., 32.]

PAPER.

164[6-]7, February 18-28. Osnabrück.—The Count of Avaux, the French Plenipotentiary, in answer to the question of the Swedish Plenipotentiaries whether he approved of the articles proposed by the Emperor replied that "France greatly wished for peace, and inasmuch as the French had always recognised the Duke of Bavaria as Elector, and given him the Electoral title, and had disapproved of the Palatine's proceedings in Bohemia, and besides as the Duke of Bavaria was in high esteem everywhere, and had rendered good offices to the Crowns, they (the French) had declared both to the Imperialists and Bavarians that the Electoral Dignity ought to remain with the said Duke. As for the Upper Palatinate, as it had been bought for a large sum of money they could not take it from the said Duke; much less could they dispute against the Catholic religion in the Lower Palatinate."

To the deputies of His Serene Highness, the Elector Palatine, the said French Ambassador said "The French Ambassadors had sometimes spoken with those of the Emperor about the Palatine business, who were ready to agree to the French side under a certain condition which the French would not in any way assent to. They had declared their own intention to the Imperialists but had bound themselves to nothing. He promised to communicate further with the Swedes on the subject." When the Deputies of the Elector Palatine enlarged upon the unfairness of the articles, he replied in a chilling manner "He would use his good offices to obtain the Lower Palatinate. But as the Bergstrasse was ecclesiastical property, he could hardly speak for that, but left it to others to do this." As regarded religion he said "His King could not assist in the restitution if the Catholics were to be afterwards expelled (from the lands restored)." In Latin. [N. XVII., 10.]

The Reply of the IMPERIAL PLENIPOTENTIARIES to the SWEDISH proposals.

164[6-]7, [February 22-] March 4. Osnabrück.—To the first accepting as far as "Evangelicals enjoy," but substituting for "Evangelicals," "Protestants or adherents to the Confession of Augsburg;" adding, Nevertheless on the restoration of the Palatinate the exercise of the Catholic religion shall be permitted to the vassals and subjects whether ecclesiastical or lay, nor shall they be compelled to adopt another religion under any pretext whatever; and insisting on their original proposal that the Electoral Dignity should remain with the Duke of Bavaria and all the Guillelmian line for ever, and that the Count Palatine should be admitted to an eighth and last Electorate, and that on the extinction of either line the eighth Electorate be suppressed.

To the second, agreed to subject to the foregoing declaration.

To the third, agreed to, yet saving the rights of the Catholic religion, and the infeudations or grants made during the deprivation of the Palatines by the Emperor or the Duke of Bavaria, and likewise excepting the Bergstrasse, viz. the Castle of Starckemburg with the townlets of Bentzheim and Heppenheim, and the Monastery of Lorsch with the villages and farms appertaining thereto, which belong to the Elector and Archbishopric of Mainz.

As to the fourth, since the Elector of Bavaria cannot be satisfied by the County of Cham for 13 millions spent on the war, and the Emperor is in no wise bound to make good that sum to the Elector in order to favour the Palatines by whose father he was forced into a defensive war, they adhere to their former proposal that Prince Charles Louis should either pay that debt in full or give up the whole of the Upper Palatinate. They accept that his Imperial Majesty be released from his obligation. The rest of this article must be limited in conformity to the foregoing declaration. In Latin. [N. XVIII., 32.] N. Extracts from Mr. BARON'S Report to the GENERAL ASSEMBLY at Kilkenny.

1646[-7], March 19.—“There was a letter from of January last signifying that late peace having both the Courts of France upon the public faith of the kingdom but that when informations were duly given and slight objections delivered by himself and Mr. Baron then the rejectment of that peace was endeavoured by the King and Queen of France and Cardinal Mazarine, yet when the [news] came to France of our forces returning from Dublin the good opinion was altered and an opinion of weakness and division took place, he desires that the said kingdom may join their forces again and set upon that place and make themselves masters of the kingdom and that thereby they will acquire and regain the goodwill of France and of Cardinal Mazarine; he signifies that the Prince and Queen of England are desirous to come unto Ireland. He desires their coming. We do not agree upon slighter terms than such as Mr. Baron will declare unto us, for he assures that when they come we will have our wills, and said that whosoever upon weak conditions will press an agreement before their coming, he will hinder the King's prospects and freedom.

A letter from the King of France of the 26th of September last imports the particular care he hath of what touched our interests, and that still he doth labour to contribute thereunto, to his uttermost endeavours, and by reason he is well informed of our inclinations and hath knowledge of the desire the kingdom hath in effect to show their affections to him he hath committed to the relation of Mr. Baron what he hath in charge to tell us in his name.

A letter from Cardinal Mazarine in September last signified the good intentions of his Majesty of France to give us assistance proportionable to his zeal to the Catholic Religion, had the state of affairs in France given way thereunto, and saith that it were an injury done to Mr. Baron to add anything to what he can lively represent unto us in the behalf of his Majesty.

By another letter from Cardinal Mazarine is signified that we can use no more effectual way to draw France to help us than to contribute our endeavours for the settlement of the affairs of his Majesty of England, and assures that what we do in this particular will work much with the King of France to advance what concerneth the good of our nation.

From Colonel FitzWilliams that the Scots had given up the King to the Parliament, that he is certainly informed, that as soon as the Scots quit England, the Presbyterians and Independents will fall into odds, which will prove advantageous unto us. By another letter from him “is signified that he is informed that our propositions are at full and enjoins us in no way to descend from them, for he is sure we will have all; only he supplicates we may be pleased to leave one church open in Dublin for the King's religion, for he says the Parliament of England would be glad to get the like advantage to incense all those of England against the King, Queen, Prince and this kingdom for shutting up all our doots against them. He assures that the Pope directed 40,000 pistoles to be sent us from Rome and that Cardinal Mazarine promised himself shortly to send over unto us 6,000 pistoles.

This is the substance of the letters Mr. Baron brought with him. In the account of his negotiation, he saith that he presented the Supreme Council's letter to the Queen, and found her very willing to comply with his requests and accordingly promised him a great sum able to bring the service of Ireland to the wished period, and then parted with her well satisfied; but when he came again he found her as far from her former expressions as that she seemed to forget her answer to that the Cardinal had sent them 1,200 livres which was all the supply he received since he went for France."

LORD INCHIQVIN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1647, April 17. Cork.—“The command of the army in this province being—in right of my commission . . . from the Honourable Houses—returned into my hands at the Lord Lieutenant's departure out of this kingdom I esteem it my duty to give . . . some account of the condition wherein the province was left by his Lordship. . . . I can only discover by a conjectural estimate from” the Treasurer's Deputy and from the Commissaries of the provisions and musters “that there was then remaining in the custody of the Treasurer's Deputy about 6,400*l.* in ryalls of eight at 5*s.* the piece, and provisions in the store of corn and victual to the value of 1,900*l.* or thereabouts,—part of which 6,400*l.* was raised upon the excise and customs—All which—with what may be further raised upon the place—will not produce above five weeks' subsistence for the officers and soldiers already here, the constant charge whereof . . . viz. at three days' pay for the officers at 2*s.* 6*d.* the piece for the foot and 5*s.* for the horse being 2,200*l.* per week, besides the great addition of charge which must be expected . . . upon the arrival of those horse and foot now lying at the waterside to be transported.” I therefore make my humble suit that a reasonable supply of treasure be transmitted here, and having reason to apprehend that there may be endeavours to prejudice me in the good opinion of the Honourable Houses I have dispatched my secretary who, I doubt not, will be able to give satisfaction touching my proceedings. I also request that I may have the assistance of a Committee not only for the control of what may be raised or sent here, but for the satisfaction of the House in the conduct of their service. Signed. Seal. [N. VI., 35.]

SIR ADAM LOFTUS and SIR JOHN TEMPLE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1647, April 23. Bristol.—Being safely landed, we inform you of Lord Lisle's arrival here. "About fourteen daies since, Colonell Sidney, the Lieutenant-Generall of the Horse, and Sir Hardress Waller, Serjeant-Major-Generall of the Armie, presented a peticion to the Councell Board, wherein they declared their right to the comand of the armie in case of the absence of the Generall, and desired for the avoyding of future contestacons to the prejudice of the service, it might be soe settled before his Lordshipp's departure, and withall shewed to the Board at the same tyme a paper wherein it was testified that the Lord Inchequine should tell Colonell Grey that in case the Lord Lientenant left Colonell Sidney, the Lieutenant-Generall of the horse, behinde him that he had a freind who wold accuse him of treason, or declare him a traitour. This seemed a matter of soe high concernement as the Board thought fitt to take it presently into their consideracon, and findeing great divisions already in the Armie about this particuler, much disaffection in the English officers and souldiers lately come over to the Lord Inchequine and the high contestacons which might happily ensue heereupon, after they had acquainted the Lord Inchequine heerewith, and received his Lordship's reasons for justificacon of his right to the comand of the Armie, as President of Mounster, as also the reasons of the generall officers of the armie, and consulted with the colonells who were divided in opinion, they thought fitt for composing of all differences for the present to settle the comand of the armie in four commissioners, vizt. the Lord Inchequine and the Lord Broghill, Generall of the horse of Mounster, being the two principall officers of the old armie, and the Lieutenant-Generall of the horse, and Serjeant-Major-Generall of the Armie of the whole kingdome, and these to continew only till the parliament should declare their pleasure therein. And this they were the rather induced unto because upon conference with Mr. Basil, the Attorney-Generall of the kingdome, they found it somewhat cleere that the extraordinarie power graunted unto the Lord President, whereby he claymed the right of a Commander in cheife was but dureing the pleasure of the parliament, which determined upon the passing of the Lord Lientenantes commission, and could not be revived againe but by a new graunt from both howses. And yet soe desireous was the Board to give the Lord President all manner of satisfaccion as they offered his Lordshipp soe he would give his consent to this order, that any person whom he excepted against, should be left out of the comission; which he seemed to take verie well, but made answer he could not give his consent without prejudice in [g] his owne right, but if the Board would make any such order, that it should be verie pleaseing and acceptable unto him, and that he wold willingly give obedience unto it. Hereupon, the Board after severall consultacons—leaving the civill power absolutely in the Lord President—made an order for setting the comand of the armie in the four commissioners afore-named till the pleasure of the parliament were further knowne, and delivered one part of it to the Lord President, and the other to the generall officers of the armie. But the Lord President, the daie that the Lord Lieutenantes Commission determined, came and offered to his Lordshipp a Protestation against it, and the same evening would have returned to his Lordshipp the order which he refused to receive, telling him he was now a private person and could meddle no further with it, having as a publique minister done all that he thought could in that particuler tend to the settlement of quietness in the armie till the parliament was made acquainted therewith. And that he intended next daie to take shipping and so to returne into England: which accordingly he prepared himself to doe. And three of the commissioners having been with the Lord President next morneing and findeing that he absolutely refused to joyn with them, understanding of the Lord Lieutenantes resolucion to leave Corke that morneing, they gave order to put his owne regiment only in armes to attend him out of the towne, which the Lord Inchequine interdicted and comanded by proclamacon by beate of drum, that they should laie downe their armes and repair to their quarters upon paine of death. But the officers of the regiment thought fitt to obey the comissioners and so stood in armes all that daie, whereby the Lord Lisle perceived that there would arise some trouble about this order, and therefore both he and the councell resolved to put off their goeing for that daie and to attend the composing of the differences betwixt them, which they effected. Notwithstanding the Lord President—as wee heard—had the daie before sent for severall officers whom he confided in, to come to him from the out-quarters where they were laid with their companies to doe service upon the rebels, and had—as wee were further informed—gathered about him in his house neere two hundred officers—reformadoes that had been cavaliers—and soldiers, and comanded a troope of horse of his owne regiment to come into the towne; which the comissioners would not give entrance unto, but brought in some troopes of the Lord Broghil's regiment, and so had absolutely the comand of the towne, and full power in their handes—as was confessed afterwarde by the Lord Inchequin's officers—to proceed to execute according to their comission: which, when wee of the councell sawe, and apprehending that matters might growe to some height betweene the Lord President and the three other comissioners who were resolved to stand upon their right according to the order of the Board, wee undertooke to mediate betwixt them, and at length so farr prevailed with the comissioners—by declaring our resolucion even to protest against them, in case they should use anie violence to maintaine their power—as they resolved—notwithstanding their right and power—to recede from their authoritie, and to suspend the execucion of their comission, and to come awaie into England to make knowne the Lord Inchequin's carriage herein to the parliament; and soe they causing all the horse and foot within the towne to laie downe their armes, wee have left all things in great quietnesse, and the full power in the Lord Inchequine, whom wee found so wedded to his own, as that no consideration of any hazard that might happen to the publique could draw him to any manner of accommodation." Signed. Scal. [N. VI., 37, should be 36.]

SIR CHARLES COOTE TO THE COMMITTEE FOR IRISH AFFAIRS at Derby House.

1647, June 4. Londonderry.—“In obedience to your Lordships' severall directions to me since February last to divert as much as was possible for me the power of the rebels from Dublin or the garrisons under the command of my Lord of Ormond, I have indeavoured—though with much difficulty for want of things necessary—by severall incursions into the rebels' quarters to perform your Lordships' commands, whereof I have formerly given your Lordships an accompt in part, since which, haveing beene lately forth on an expedition, I here inclosed humbly represent unto your Lordships a true relacion of what was done by your forces of Connaught and eleven hundred foote of the Lagan forces under the commaund of Colonell Mervine which joyned with us in that service, and as no man shall more readily obey your Lordships' commaunds in all things, so shall I most humbly beseeche your Lordships that the condicion of the forces in that Province may be taken into a tymely consideration, for the extremities we are reduced unto will not admitt of delay. I have severall tymes, and by severall wayes represented unto your Lordships not onely by our agents but otherwise, the miserable condition both of officer and soldier there, who are not only naked for want of clothes, shooes, stockings and shirts, but dye for want of bread to susteyne nature, having not beene able for many monthes past to afford them but five and sixe pounnds of oaten meale a weeke, and if God had not miraculously blessed us this winter by getting beefe from the rebels with the litle salt which we had in the store, we had perished, and when the Lagan men came into Connaught to joyne with us in prosecution of the rebels I was able to afford the men but sixe pounnds of oaten meale a man for twenty dayes which we kept the feilds in, and at this instant I have but fourteen dayes provision in the store after the same proporcion. The rebels know our wants as well as ourselves which will no doubt incourage them to fall on us, and then how unable we shalbe to defend ourselves so accomadated, your Lordships are well able to judge. To continue in the feild—our men being all naked and in want of all necessaryes—which is the only probable way for us to subsist by with so small a strength, the rebels haveing severall great armyes a-foote were rather desperation—whatever the sucresse might be—then justifiable before God or man. Which way to turne myself in so great exigencies, I professe I cannot tell, the Lord direct me, but to the uttermost of my power I shall not faile to indeavour the keeping the men together and preserving the parliament's interest there, humbly desyreing that some speedy course may be taken for our relief and howsoever it may please God to dispose of things my reall indeavours in your service may be accepted.

The sad condicion of the three newe companies of the Lord Folliot's regiment sent hither by the late commissioners being very deplorable, the meanes left them being quite spent, I was inforced to post hither to settle some course for their support for one monthe by layeing a taxe on the inhabitants of the city and the lybertyes formerly overburthened by the tenn old companies of that regiment. Much adoe I had to effect it, and great clamour : the inhabitants conceaving it a very hard condicion that those sent hither for their comfort and preservation should destroy them, which it will in one monthe more undoubtedly, and inforce the inhabitants totally to desert the place. I have severall tymes intimated this unto my Lord Folliot and our agents but have not received any answere thereunto. The soldiers are daily mutaning and running away and much adoe I have to keepe the towne from plundering and to keepe them and the townsmen from cutting one another's throats." If a speedy course be not taken to enable the men to prosecute the war I beg to be relieved of my command.

Postscript.—"I was lately abroad in Connaght with a reasonable party of horse and foote, my own, Mervine, and the Lagan forces joyning with us. We consisted of about 2,000 foot and some 400 and odd horse. We advanced as far as Ballenrobe in the county of Mayo, the rebels flyeing before us into the mountaines of Owles and Erconaght with their cattle, and haveing put our provisions into Balelaghan which was lately delivered unto us by Captaine Costolo, from Ballentobber-patrick we sent out a party of fifteen hundred men in two divisions comanded by [my] Majour and Colonell Mervine's who marched after the rebels and their Creahts into the mountaines. My Majour with his party which consisted all of the Connaght men—onely some of Sir William Stuart's regiment with his sonne joyned with our brigade—had the good fortune to light on the most considerable prey for they brought with them two thousand coves, killed severall straglers and marching back to our place of rendezvous nere Castle Barre before they quitt the mountaines the rebels under the command of Sir Theobald Bourke, eldest sonne to the Lord of Mayo, and Lieutenant-Colonell O'Cahan, Lieutenant-Colonell to Rory McGuire, pursued my Majour with nine companies of the rebels part Ulster men and part Connaght, and about sixe of the clock after noone on the 12th of the last, they beganne to skirmidge with our party and without any long ado came gallantly up to push of pike and clubbing of the musquet which was a great providence of God, for our men's amunicion was by the extreimity of weather and illness of the wayes growne very wett. The number on both sides being equall, the fight for a pretty while was very doubtfull, sometymes inclyneing to the one side then to the other, the officers on both sides behaveing themselves very gallantly. In the end when Lieutenant-Colonell O'Cahan was killed, and Captaine and Captaine (sic) Edmond Bourke, sonne to the Lord of Mayo, Captaine McKenna and Captaine McMahonne taken prisoners which were the leading men—for Sir Theobald Bourke never came into the fight himself—the rebels betooke them to their heeles which stood them in good sted that day, yet it pleased God our men killed one hundred and eighty-seven of them in the place, besides such as dyed sence of their hurts which we understood to be many. And that which is most remarkable, of the rebels' officers being thirty-six from the best to the worst except Sir Theobald Bourke and one reformado sergeant there escaped not one but were killed in the place, but Captaine McMahonne, Captaine Costello, and Lieutenant Bourke who wee have still in our hands. We lost only Captaine Parker of my regiment, and one common soldier of Colonell Sanderson's. Severall of our officers and soldiers were hurt but I prayse God none dangerously. The next day after the fight my Majour came to our place of rendezvous with their prey the armes and plunder of the enemy. And the next day after, Colonell Mervine's Majour returned with his party with a good prey—but not so great as the other—having killed severall straglers but not encountered by any party of the rebels. Whilst they were abroad in the mountaines Colonell Mervine and I scoured the plaines with the horse and dragoones which we made of our baggage horses the foote officers' horses and the garrons we gott from the enemy, gott some catle and sheepe and killed severall rogues about their castles, and so having stayed as long as it was possible for us for want of bread for our officers and soldiers, the weather being extreame ill all the tyme of our being abroad, we returned safe home to Slygo, the Lord make us thankfull. This hath given the rogues a great cheque, for the Ulster men thought to carry all by falling in to the push of pike, but some such rencounters as they have now mett with may make them fall to some newe waye of fightinge." *Signed. LORD INCHQUIN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1647, June 6. Cappoquin.—“As soone as Dungarvan was taken I was forced to sitt still for a fortnight whilst bread was provided for us, during which tyme the army was payd in mony, Captain Swanly having then brought 5,000*l.* which was much about a fortnight's pay after that small proporcion that wee give pay, which is three dayes pay for a weeke to commission officers, 2*s.* 6*d.* to comon souldiers, and five shillings to troopers mounted, if unmounted but 2*s.* 6*d.* This course of paying the mony altogether I held most convenient; first, because the givinge out of provisions with it would have hindered the havinge any bread before hand without which wee could not march into the rebells' quarters; next, because I know that if I should issue monyes and provissions together, the officers and souldiers would bee discontented if they were not paid, as long as wee had mony, which would have bin a loss of that provisions that should have bin issued in respect of the present use of it. Againe by this meanes, the officers were the better able to take the feild, havinge had that tyme and some mony to provide for it; and lastly, because I saw that by keepinge the provisions to bee thus issued, I should not onely make the meanes that was in our hands last a fortnight longer, then otherwise it would, but also thereby enable the army for that fortnight to use what indeavours wee could to gaine further releife out of the rebells' quarters, for which purpose there was no place so convenient for us to lye at as this, because hither wee have our bread and pease—other provisions wee have none—brought by water, which wee have no carriages for, and heere is a convenient place for us, as well to make incursions dayly into the Irish quarters as to prevent their invadeing ours. As soone as the bread was delivered out, I sent away five hundred horse, under the comaund of Serjeant-Majour Banastree to prey the powren country, which was effected with good success and burned all the country, haveing gayned three thousand cowes, great and small, and four thousand sheepe, which would have bin a great reliefe to the army, had they not bin so imbezeild by the souldiers—some officers also being accessary—as they left us not above six hundred cowes and twelve hundred sheepe to bee converted to their publike use; wherein the state's service hath received soe great a prejudice as makes us earnest to find out those who are guilty, who being found, will receive condigne punishment. Wee understood from those that were upon this party that they had not brought one of fifty that they saw, the cattle being sheltred by the woods and boggs, so as their horse could not come at them, which occasioned us to send out five hundred fresh horse with twenty-five hundred foote, under the comaund of Collonel Sterling, the Majour-Generall, hoping with the helpe of those foote to have gayned much more cattle then wee had before. But the people had driven their cattle over the river Shure, soe as wee gott not above four hundred cowes and fifteen hundred sheep, the latter whereof were all devoured by the souldiers then abroad. Upon this march there was no burning neither of houses or corne, the counsell of warre haveing for divers reasons disadvised it.

Whilst these partyes were the last tenn dayes thus employed, I lay heere to fall upon the heeles of the rebells if they should draw out after our party from Clonmell and the parts adjacent where their Supream Councell and a Nationall Synod now sitt, and all their army lye. And—that they might not stirr hence without my knowledge—I sent a hundred horse every day towards that towne to have intelligence. But yesterday those scouts that were out from these horse, being not so vigilant as they should have bin, the rebells were upon them with four hundred horse and one thousand foote before they were aware so as they could not retreat before they were charged and routed being hotly pursued by the rebells till they came within two myles and a halfe of this towne. As soone as the newes came unto mee I went out with all the horse with mee, and though I made such hast to overtake them as tyred many horses in eight myles ryding, yet I could not gett sight of them, but only a few scouts within four myle of Clonmell and finding it to no purpose to goe further, I returned, causeing one to view the slayne which they find to bee thirty-four of our men, besides whom there were eleven prisos[ners] taken; of theirs was onely one killed.

Wee find the divisions among the rebells disable them to fight with us, so as wee might probably carry any citty wee should attempt, if wee had provisions to subsist before it, but haveing onely so much bread as will enable the souldier with the helpe of some beefes reserved for them to spend twelve dayes in making incursions—to gaine what further helpe can bee had in the rebells' quarters towards our reliefe,—I am inforced to imploy the army altogether for that end, and indeed I might not conveniently doe otherwise yett, though I had provisions, for I have not any men to spare from the feild. But if it shall please the state to send a competent number to garrison them, I doubt not wee shall gaine such townes before Michaelmus as will ease them of that charge they are now at, and cause great plenty of corne and all provisions in all our quarters." I therefore beg that Commissioners be sent with what relief is ready. Signed. [N. VI., 43.]

SIR CHARLES COOTE to the COMMITTEE FOR IRISH AFFAIRS at Derby House.

1647, June 11. Londonderry.—I inclose a copy of my brother's letter out of Connaught, by which you may see the endeavours of your servants there “to prosecute the service and to gaine a poore subsistence from the enemy, which will not be possible for them to doe if not preserved by your Lordships' care in supplyeing of us with recruits both of men, horse and other necessaryes. . . . Within these four days here are severall long boats with four frigotes come to the mouth of this harbour to a place called Malin. They landed one day some three hundred men and killed some beasts they brought along with them in their boates, and having drest their meate ashore they returned to their boates and there lye still, and as I am this day assured, there are two frigotts and four long boates more come unto them. We expect them to be highland men driven out of Scotland by the state's forces there, though we have no certainty thereof. Those that landed were excellently armed and had women and children with them. This begetts a great deale of feare in the poore inhabitants of these partes. What their designe may be we know not, but shall indeavour to prevent —by God's asistance—any prejudice. I am confident they will land at Broadhaven in Connoglit, and so joyne with the rebels of that province. The rebels' friggotts have taken above thirty small barques belonging to this kingdome and the kingdome of Scotland within this monthe which were fraughted with provisions and other commodities. The losse of these barques hath raised all things in these parts to excessive rates and ruined many families, and their not being any vessell of strength of the state's on these coasts will starve both inhabitants and soldiers and prevent any supplies of comeing in safe unto us which shalbe sent if not speedily looked unto. There is one Mr. Thomas Costolo and Dudley Costolo—brothers—of an old English extraction, who have done divers considerable services to the Parliament in the province of Connaght since I had the honour to serve the Parliament there, by prosecuting the rebels vigorously, and in tyme of our greatest distresse continuing very faithfull unto us. They have surprised and taken severall holds of persons of great quality which they still hold and preserve for the service of the state at their owne charge, and delivered Captaine Theobald Dillon, brother to the Lord of Costolo, unto me whome they tooke prisoner, omitting nothing that lay in their powers which might advaunce the service, without any charge or burthen to this instant, but have suplyed our men in our tyme of extremity with mony, cowes, and baggage horses to the great furtherance of the service wherein they have meritted much. It is true they are Papists which is all can be said to their prejudice." I humbly ask they may receive some mark of favour. They only desire "to be received into the State's pay and to have the command of a troop of horse and a foot company which in effect they have already in the service and are well able at their own charge to raise and arm." . . . *Signed. ARTHUR ANNESLEY, ROBERT MEREDITH, SIR ROBERT KING, and at Derby House].

1647, July 6. Dublin.—“ Wee have acquainted your Lordships with the uncomfartablenesse of our imployment . . . in commanding men guided neither by rules of reason or conscience, but hurried by their owne lusts to what pleases their fauce, and gave unto your Lordships our apprehensions thereupon soe prophetically that it hath since accordingly happened; for though to prevent as much as in us lay disorders daily threatened by the insolent speches of souldiers upon their guards, and in their quarters wee—upon urgent supplication of the feild officers—ordered a noble a peece to each comon souldier, towards the buying them shooes, stockings and shirts, of which they were in great want, yet on Friday last many of them fell into a high mutinie, and, casheiring their officers, marched directly to Dammas (Dame's) Gate, adjoining to the place where wee have our usuall meetings for dispatch of publike affaires. Upon knowledg hereof, all dilligence was used by the governour to crush an intemperance of soe dangerous example in the first rise of it, and hee ordered out ymediatly a competent force of foot, and severall troops of his owne regiment of horse, which wee must againe lett your Lordships know is the greatest stay wee have to good government in the army, and most cheerfully assisted to suppress this mutiny, and therefore wee cannot but continue with earnestnesse to beseech your Lordships that present course may bee taken for satisfaction of the second payment due upon Colonell Jones his contract which comes to 1,676*l.* 19*s.* 04*d.* least they being discouraged for want of their due, should take in allsoe with the discontents of others to the ruine of the whole. With the formencioned strength the governour himselfe went against the mutineers—the greatest part of them being of Colonell Kinnaston's regiment accustomed to like practizes in North Wales—and after some skirmishing—and coming to push of pike—wherein some of them were killed, severall hurt on both sides, the governour endangered and Colonell Castle's horse shott under him, the mutineers betooke themselves to a place of advantage, a fortified hill, neere the Collidg, and with them many of those called out to subdue them, which occasioned the shutting the gates of the city, the stopping others that were appointed to march, and calling in many of those that were without, least the whole army—too inclinable to distemper—had fallen into mutiny, which their language and carriage gave just grounds to feare and to prevent the spreading of this contagion—if it should have continued till morning—after they had defended the said hill till midnight, they were received to mercy upon their humble submission and promise of amendment. By this great disorder which there have been severall threatenings since of renewing, your Lordships will perceive the necessity there is of hastening a considerable summe of money hither for contentment both of officers and souldiers—the numbers whereof the inclosed lists will give you—who will not bee conteyned with that allowance which we have hitherto made them, and gave your Lordships notice of. If wee might bee bound to name a summe, wee could not pitch upon lesse then 30,000*l.* which might in some proporeion answer their expectations, and helpe to provide herring, beefe and other food for winter, and if your Lordships sent what money is intended for the Brittish in Ulster hither, wee suppose it might bee carefully and profitably laid out for support of such of them as will move and joyne in the service here. Wee are not assured that the numbers of souldiers—of the old regiments which wee have reduced from eleven to seven—will hold, though upon the reducement wee had a generall muster of all your forces in one day, and tooke the strictest course possibly to prevent fraud, which if there bee any will bee discovered at their next muster which wee intend shortly, the generall transposing of officers and confounding of companyes putting them out of the course of deceivring us suddainly.

The horse are not yet reduced, but wee beleve the twenty troops will be brought to ten or twelve, which wee shall endeavour to make the like numbers with the new troopes.

Wee humbly desire for the good of the service that all officers may bee comanded to their charges, for as wee allow noe pay to absentes so wee shall bee inforced to dispose of their comands whome wee have continued upon this new settlement unlesse they returne speedily.

Wee understand from Ulster that Sir William Stuart who commanded a regiment of foot, and a troop of horse in your service is lately deceased, and most of us knowing the great advantage would redound to the service by your Lordships giving the Lord President of Connaght the power to dispose of the quarters hee held, and the rest in the Laggan, and to place a colonell and captaine in the severall charges void by his death, whome hee might bee sure would upon all occasions observe his commands in a cordiall conjunction with the Connaght forces for preservacion of the whole. And upon this occasion give us leave againe to interceed for speedy supplies especially of money, both to his Lordship and the new forces at Derry, who cannot subsist by what is already appointed for them, and have suffered as much, if not more, then any of your forces in this kingdome though hitherto most neglected, and especially wee cannot omit to mention to your Lordships the Lord President's owne particular, whose condicion is soe sad that after the most exemplary devoating himselfe to your service in the midst of difficultyes not to bee paralleled, his life is become a burthen to him. If 10,000*l.*, a summe which hath been frequently afforded to other provinces, were but entrusted with his Lordship for the army there, wee are perswaded you would receive a better accompt of it then you have of many times soe much elsewhere.

Wee must againe in particular remember your Lordships of the great want here is of a traine of artillery, without which noe considerable service can bee done but to waste the enemye's corne, nor the rebels match't in the feild, though were wee provided thereof, wee should not doubt your army might bee masters in these parts, being able to draw out one thousand horse and three thousand foot leaving the guarrisons indifferently manned. . . .

Postscript.—Since the writing hereof we received a letter from the French Resident at Kilkenny, which wee send your Lordships here inclosed with our answeare to it, and humbly desire to receive your resolution therein by the next, as also concerning the Lord of Ormonde's proposition for the 5,000 men." Signed. [N. VI., 46.]

[The ARMY] to SEVERAL COUNTIES.

1647, July [? August] 12. Kingston-upon-Thames.—Circular intended to be sent. "Whereas the heavy burdens of tyranny and oppression
. . . and the obstruction of free addresses to the Parliament for removal thereof occasioned you to desire this army to interpose between you and vassallage, and to endeavour the recovery and establishment of your native liberties. The consideration thereof hath begat in us a firm resolution freely to expose our lives and fortunes to the utmost hazard for the common interest of the free Commons of England. We therefore cannot but conceive a necessity of communion of Council in our preservation of these just and righteous ends. The grievances of every county are best apprehended . . . by themselves . . . and likewise various means of remedy for the same . . . being sometimes necessary for different counties . . . we conceive the most suitable means . . . may be with most facility apprehended by the counties themselves. We therefore desire that two or more . . . of every county that have called this Army by their late petitions to engage for their liberties—and are thereby equally engaged with us—might be chosen as Agitators in the behalf of the well affected in each respective county that they might constantly sit as gentlemen—during the time of the Treaty at least—at the Head Quarters to consider of all the infringements of their liberties and of expedients for relief and to proponnd them to the Council of War and Agitators for the Army, as also that both the Council of War and Agitators might communicate their propositions for the public good to them that from them all things might be communicated to the counties, that . . . the most exact scrutiny might be made to discover the foundations of our Oppressions Bondage and Misery to their everlasting overturning, and then a precious foundation for a glorious structure of true freedom righteousness and justice might be established immoveably." Copy. [N. XII., 209.]

THE COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

[1647, September 28.]—State of the matter of fact concerning the late difference between the English and Swedish ships, in obedience to the order of July 9th. (Printed in Commons' Journals, v. 239.) On Saturday, May 1st 1647, Captain Owen, Captain of the Henrietta Maria and Rear-Admiral of the fleet, having with him only the Roebuck, with 45 men, met near the Isle of Wight with a fleet of Swedes, Admiral, Vice-Admiral, and Rear-Admiral with three men-of-war more and nine to ten merchant ships, "who after several peeces of ordnance still refused to take in their flags, their topsailes being downe, whereupon Captain Owen sent his lieutenant aboard the Admirall to know his resolucion, who alleadged he had commission from the Queene of Sweden, comanding him not to stricke his flagg to the ships of any forreigne prince or state, except in his or their owne harbours, or roades, and declared himselfe resolved accordingly. Captain Owen, haveing received this answere, calls to his assistance two English merchant ships, then neare him, bound to the southward. But during the tyme of his consultacion with them, the Swedish Admirall boyesd his topsaile, and was got soe farre on head of Captain Owen, that he had noe hopes to fetch him up before night, and therefore, being in duty and conscience bound not to deferre any opportunity of preserving the honour and just rights of this crowne in the sovereignty of those seas, beares to the Vice-Admirall and gives him a broadside within halfe pistoll shott. At the first answere from that ship, Captain Owen's tiller was shott asunder, which put him from his steerage, that he could not worke his ship, and thereupon was forced shortly after to stand off, till he had repaired his tiller, and soe then following them and perceiving to stand as for Diepe, he tackes in and stood for Portsmouth. The Roebuck alsoe, whose comander had told the Admirall that if he would not take in his flagg friendly, they should compell him or sinke by his side, did after his denying to doe it, make some shot at the Swedish ships, but night came on.

Captain Batten, Vice-Admirall and Comander-in-chiefe of the fleet, set forth by the Parliament, receiving advice hereof, on the second of May last, sailed out of the Downes with the St. Andrew, being the ship himselfe comanded, the Guardland, the Convertine, and the Maryrose, and on the third of May, in the morning, saw the Swedes lye at anchour in Bulloigne roads—haveing taken downe their colours before Captain Battin came in—, and by eight of the clock, came to anchour close by the Swedish Admirall. Whereupon, he sent unto them and they accordingly came on board, but declared that if their flags had bene up, they would not have taken them downe, by reason of the strictnes of their commission, given by the Queene of Sweden, which caused them to resist the Vice Admirall. Hereupon, Captain Batten brought onely the Vice-Admirall into the Downes, giving the rest liberty to repaire home, for that they wanted victualls, and had charge of a convoy. And after this, the other Swedish men of warre followed their Vice-Admirall into the Downes, declaring that they durst not goe home without her. Which matter, upon a report to both houses, was referred to the Committee of Lords and Commons for the Admiralty and Cinque ports, who on the 7th of May, gave Captain Batten order to release the ships, which being dispatched away unto him, the same night they were forthwith discharged." NICHOLAS, BISHOP OF FERNS, NICHOLAS PLUNKETT, and others, to VISCOUNT TAAFFE.

1647, October 4. Kilkenny.—“The enclosed intelligence is certain confirmed by Colonel Warren, who upon parole came hither yesternight from Dublin. They are very strong in horse and foot by the joining of the Scots under Colonel Munro, now Commander-in-Chief of Ulster for the Parliament. It may be feared Inchiquin hath resolved a conjunction with them. You are therefore with your army to annear the borders of this province, as far as Cashel or Fethard, to hinder such conjunction. The enemy intends to put Ireland upon a day. You are to certify us by what day your army may be at Cashel, or Fethard, whereby to receive our further orders.” Signed. [N. VI., 63.]

JEFFREY BARRON to [VISCOUNT TAAFFE].

1647, October 5. Kilkenny.—“It was an hour after nightfall when Major and I alighted at the Council door last night and delivered your Lordship’s and the Council of War’s letter and being this morning called on presented the reasons of your resolutions with all the advantages I could, which were well received and admitted by the Council. They now only desire a party of 200 horse, which they think your army is able to spare, and which they believe would make the Catholic armies in Leinster matches for Jones, but on that I would not deliver any positive sense though I was often demanded. Some exception was taken at the stiffness of the phrase in the Council of War’s letter, who did not seem to submit this their resolution unto the Council’s determination. All other news are dead here. My other affairs are under debate at the Board. I put them here into great hopes of your success by the goodness of the party of horse and foot you now have, but most of all by your own good resolution. The miscarriages of the services of Cashel and the county of Cork are everywhere in the country much apprehended, but most of any at the Board, to which I think it would be very satisfactory to see your Lordship hath a just feeling.” . . . Torn and in part illegible. [N. VI., 64.]

The Desires of the ARMY.

1647, October 15, 16. Putney.—1. That the Committee would move the House to determine under “what conduct the forces now appointed for Ireland upon the present establishment shall go, the uncertainty whereof is not a little discouragement to men from engaging in that service. And if the Parliament should think fit to leave the appointment thereof to the General we should then offer that all the forces to be continued under the present establishment both for England and Ireland shall be equally engaged without distinction to go for Ireland, when the Parliament shall require, and the Parliament only ordering what proportion of them they will at any time have sent the General to order what particular regiments shall go.”

2 and 3. (The purport of these appears by the resolutions on them, which are printed in Commons' Journals, v. 341, top of left-hand column.)

4. Proposing that the 10*l. per diem* granted by order of the 4th instant be raised to 30*l.* [N. XXI., 70.]

WILLIAM CLARKE, secretary signing by the appointment of the General Council of the Army, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1647, November 5. Putney.—"Whereas it is generally reported that the House was induced to make another address to the King by propositions, by reason it was represented to the House as the desire of the Army, from a tenderness to the freedom of Parliamentary actings this night the General Council of the Army declared that any such representation of their desires was altogether groundless, and that they earnestly desire no such consideration may be admitted in the House's resolutions in that particular." (See Commons' Journals, v. 352.) Signed. Seal. [N. VI., 68.]

[LORD INCHQUIN] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1647, November 6. Cork.—I have seen Colonel Serle who is lately come into this Province, and who is by some suspected to have been interested in certain late actions not consonant to the pleasure of the Honourable Houses, and I desire their pleasure concerning him. Signature torn off. [N. SIR LUCIUS DILLON to VISCOUNT TAAFFE.

1647, November 6. Drumnishe.—“To inform your Lordship of the distracted condition of unfortunate Connaught would but take up too much room and add troubles to your thoughts, I will therefore defer the story thereof, and only let you know that all the friends you have in it are yet living and thats all. I have directed and recommended several captains with their companies to your Lordship. Which of them have appeared or how many I cannot say, but shall be glad to know and to have the favour of being advertised at full of the state of your army and affairs of that province with what else your Lordship pleases to impart unto me. The Commissary-General writes unto your Lordship. They are now in circuit in this Province, endeavouring to order the distractions thereof, but the confusion is so great, as if it come not from a high hand I expect to see no settlement this many a day to come; though Mr. Darcy gives me better hopes, who is a convertent beyond belief, and promises to perform many good acts in this next assembly. I confess I am much taken with his professions, and shall be glad to know of your Lordship’s resolve to be there. We are troubled with frequent marauds from the enemies of Sligo who, with the Lagan men, threaten destruction to us this winter, but they cannot hurt us more than the native robbers do. Lu[cius] went yesterday to the Boyle . . . he will do what he can to preserve the holds entrusted to his care.” [N. VI., 70.]

Those whose names are subscribed on behalf of themselves, and all THE FREEBORN PEOPLE OF ENGLAND to the SUPREME AUTHORITY of this Nation, the COMMONS in Parliament assembled.

[1647, November 9.]—Petition, showing “that the rights we claim in the Agreement, hereunto annexed, are our own both by birth and purchase.

That we see no other means—under Heaven—to preserve these rights unto ourselves and our dear fellow Commoners, than by so agreeing and declaring.

That this Agreement . . . shall be maintained with the same resolution of spirit and hazard of our lives wherewith our freedoms were—as we thought—recovered, rather than we will suffer ourselves by any force or fraud to be deprived of them, or any part of them.

That it is equally grievous to us whether we be enslaved by King or Lords, but to be in continual conferences and addresses offered up by those we trust into the hands of such as have manifested their tyrannical purposes towards us and towards you for our sakes, is a danger we can endure no longer.

That you extremely long forbearing to settle the people’s peace and liberties upon your own authority—which indeed is theirs—without any just cause to hinder you,—your capital enemy being at your mercy and a considerable army at your commands—is matter of great jealousy, and hath necessitated us to betake ourselves to this extraordinary way of remedy. We do therefore most earnestly beseech you to join with your tried friends and natural countrymen in this agreement—any way tending to your weal and ours—and not with the King nor with any others by adventuring again the price of our blood upon the unsafe and groundless terms of accommodation with perfidious enemies.” (See Commons’ Journals, v. 354, and Rushworth, iv. 2. 867.) Signed by 21 officers. Copy. LORD INCHQUIN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1647[-8], January 31. Cork.—Setting forth the distressed condition of his army. "It will bee difficult for mee to resolve whether the want of food or cloathing bee likely to prove most destructive unto us both of them rainging most severely amongst us, so that our men dye dayly of their meere want. . . . I must humbly offer to consideration that there is no visible humane meanes resting whereby" the army "may bee expected to bee preserved from ruine without immediate supplies thence, save onely an intended expedition into the county of Tipperary whether I resolve to draw the most considerable part of the army that can in any wise be able to march and doe designe to place them in the townes of Fetherd and Cashell, and to compell the country to afford them free quarters, so long a tyme as they are able which will not bee above a fortnight or three weekes, the inhabitants being already greatly wasted by our former depredations and the Irish taxes heavily imposed on them . . . At best wee cannot hope to find above 3 weekes or a monthes subsistance abroad haveing already experienced that the like tyme exhausted and destroyed all the provisions in the two countyes of Kerry and Lymerrick, so upon our comeing home, wee can expect no releife but what must bee transmitted unto us thence, for our contributions which formerly were some stay unto us when lengthened out with supplies thence, are now for the most part anticipated and taken upp by the souldier comitting disorderly wast and spoyle in his march or stragling from his garrison which the officers cannot restrayne them from in their necessitous tymes with their utmost indeavours so as wee are forced accordng or ingagement to allow most of our monyes arising that way to answeare and satisfy the prejudices done the country. And for the compositions made with remoter parts, all wee can doe is to take hostages for payment at such reasonable dayes as are allowed to rayse the monyes in, without which they cannot bee levyed and so soone as wee march out of the country compounded with where wee cannot stay and expect they should levy the monyes, the Irish forces slipp in by partyes and restrayne the country from making their payments by seizing the monyes where they find any collected, imprisoning the collectors and dealing with those who contribute to us as with enemyes, so as all the remedy wee have in this case is to hang upp the hostages which may give some satisfacion to the eyes, but not to the stomackes of our souldiers; whose necessities have already growne to that height that they frequently pilladge and plunder our houses and quarters and rifle the people resorting to our marketts which deterrs them from supplying us that way so as on every hand wee are destitute of any support to rest upon. And must therefore humbly beseech that honourable house so farre to compassionate our deepe distress, as either to transmitt seasonable supplies unto us, or to direct a competent proporcion of shipping to transport those soulders who desire to returne to their native country, and to give admittance unto us to make the most moderate condicions wee can for the rest of the wretched English who cannot remove hence with their families but must submit to a worse then Egiptian and Turkish servitude." Signed. Seal. [N. VI., 72.]

CONSIDERATIONS upon occasion of the Late Declaration of the Army to stand to the two Houses without and against the King.

1647[-8], February 1.—Though the King has granted such just laws as the parliament, when their debates were more sober and free, propounded, and which they held sufficient to redress the matters complained of, yet the same things are represented as reasons for the continuance of the persecution of the King. These matters complained of were scarcely sensible to the people compared with those, which the pretended reformers have laid upon them. These men persuade people that it is the public interest that the Kingdom be governed by military license and the King's just prerogatives are the swallowing up of all public interest in his sole power. The Parliament should have confined themselves to the power given them by the King's writ and the trust reposed by their Constituents. Had the King consented to the last address it would have been an absolute abdication, and he could not have discharged his conscience towards God, nor his care over his people. Nothing would have been left, but whether he should be called King or no. That they could not offer the King lower conditions without denying what God by the event of the war has borne such testimony to is a reason beyond understanding. If success proves the justice of a cause, Turks and Pagans might use the same argument. The people were made believe they fought not against the King, and King and Parliament must lead an army against the King. It's the doctrine now that King-killing saints, not Kings, are the Lord's Anointed, and that David miscalled Saul when he so named him, and in sparing him denied that which God had borne testimony to. The people now feel the difference between the mild government of a King and the insolent tyranny of their fellows and inferiors. (Fourteen pages.) [N. XV., 43.]

Come to you I would, but I am told you would not be troubled where you are in Lincolnshire." Postscript.—"My Petition was once read in the House, and one made answer I was dead, but if you please to move me in it, I shall live again and prove successful." Colonel MICHAEL JONES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1647[-8], February 26. Dublin.—“After one month’s refreshing of these men since my coming out of the County of Wicklow and destroying the enemy’s quarters in Westmeath, on the 3rd of this instant I marched into the County of Kildare with about 1,500 foot and 800 horse, where I have taken in 16 castles garrisoned by the rebels, whereby I have in a manner shut up the enemy’s strongholds of Ballestonan and the island of Allan, and much more might have been done had not our naked men been so weatherbeaten through the unseasonableness of the time, whereby I was enforced back, having first placed 800 foot and two troops of horse in that county. I have not been wanting in improving my time and all advantages for gaining upon the enemy, wherein I have now more than I am able to make good, through the weakness of your army here, wanting men to hold what we have, much less to appear in the field with any competent number of strength, should occasion require, so as I am now almost at a stand, until I shall be thence supplied and enabled for further service, therefore make bold to desire your answer to my former letters, for without speedy supplies it is not possible for this army to subsist.” I again represent the necessity of a Commander-in-Chief. *Signed. countrye—for wee are resolved not to leave one of the Independant partie to live in this kingdome for they were all rogues and that he would never fight more, unlesse it were against this Independant armye. Whereupon one of the companye spake and said to his friends, ‘I doubt this fellow is makeinge worke for the gallows,’ and this examinant saith that not longe after this discourse, the said Colonel Strode was speakinge of Committees and in particular of Somersett committee and said of them that they were all rogues and said ‘As for Pyne I make noe doubte but wee shall have him hanged and then what will become of the rest, the countrye will rise and knock them all in heald, as soone as their guard is gone, and that shalbe done very speedilye.’” Signed. [N. 1648, June 3. Saturday morning, 9 o'clock.—“This morning early I understand Sir Marmaduke Langdale is coming down from Appleby and Kirby Stephen towards Barna[rd] castle and so to Yorkshire, and will fall upon our forces thereabout before our body get together, so Colonel Lambert is gone this morning to Otley to meet Colonel Harrison, whose regiment is still in Lancashire, and from thence marches towards the enemy who, it seems, prevents his design. This sudden accident may much alter and distract our resolutions yesterday, if the country be infested with the enemy. Postscript.—Sir M. WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 7. Leicester.—“We having notice of this rising about Stamford upon the last Sabbath day presently despatched Colonel Wayte with what horse were here, who marched presently to Burleigh and so to Stamford, where joining with other forces from Belvoir and Lincolnshire and Northamptonshire, he hath happily suppressed these rising spirits . . . After Colonel Wayte going from hence we presently sent to some townsmen to invite the well affected to come in and join with us in defence of the country. And we found an extraordinary appearance here upon so short a summons, there being with us yesterday here above 300 horse and 200 foot who presently listed themselves for this service, and this town drew forth six foot companies. But the present work being done we dismissed them for the present, all but the horsemen, whom we this morning upon full information of the perfecting of the business dismissed with thanks for their goodwill to it." *Signed. J[OHN] R[USHWORTH] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 8, 12 at night. Rochester. "In my last I acquainted you with the raising of the siege before Dover Castle by Colonel Rich and Colonel Hewson. That night being the 6th of June, the Mayor of Dover, in the name of himself and the jurates, officers, and inhabitants of Dover, sent a trumpeter to Colonel Rich for an act of indemnity and other things least they should oppose him. Hee denied to grant them any because they refused itt when they might have had itt from the parliament, and soe march't into the towne expecting opposition, but the Mayor and three hundred more in armes, instead of resisting betooke themselves to the fort, which was summoned as soone as our guards were sett in the towne, and they immediately yeilded. Whereupon hee sent a company of foote to possesse the fort, where hee found seaventy barrells of powder, besides ordnance and armes. Hee sent another partie towards Sandwich which wee hope by this time is surrendered, and another partie to Deale and Sandon castles of which wee hope you will have a good account in the meantime. Colonel Barkstead's regiment and the horse sent from the Generall under Commissary-General Ireton towards Canterbury as they march't this day neere Feversham mett with a letter from Sir Richard Hardresse—who lately besieged Dover Castle—, Sir Thomas Palmer, Sir William Man and divers other gentlemen of quality, desiring a parley which by reason that the foote upon this expedicion [is] designed into Essex,—where there is soe great neede—was condescended unto and the matter of the articles instantlie agreed to. But the messenger came away before they were putt into a forme and signed, one article was concluded, 'That at sixe of the clock tomorrow morning wee were to enter the towne, and all the armes and amunition are to bee brought into the cathedrall church.' You will receive a more exact account from his Excellency as soone as the articles are signed. I forgott to acquaint you that our partie march't with ladders instantlie to storne the place when the messenger mett them, and a partee of the enemies horse some four miles from the towne charged the van of our horse; wee killed one and tooke twenty. I hope that Kent will bee totally reduced immediately which when the shippes doe know may bee a great inducement to them to returne to the obedience of the parliament. His Excellency hath sent unto them by such persons who may probably prevaile with them, assuring his indeavours for indemnity." [N. VII., 16.]

Captain JOHN COPPIN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 9, at 9 at night. From aboard the Greyhound frigate.—"I coming from the Norward as far as Yarmouth Roads, where we had intelligence of that unhappy revolt of that wicked perfidious crew, which I am confident are enemies both to God and man, and my company understanding this, the greatest part of them being Deal men, they carried me and my ship perforce into the Downs, so I perceiving this I complied with them, and coming aboard of she that wears the flag God directed me so that I seemed to join with them in their horrid design, till such times that it pleased God to work my deliverance out of their hands. So after much merriment at the Castle ashore I went aboard. So perceiving . . . that most of my Deal men were ashore I consulted with my Master and the rest of my officers how we might get away from them, and Providence being our friend we resolved unanimously as one man with the hazard of our lives being some four or five and thirty in number and no more to venture to set sail and run away for Harwich. They no sooner perceiving that my ship was to sail being about 4 or 5 . . . in the afternoon the 8th of this instant but presently two of their frigates ents cable and made sail after me, which were the Warwick and the Petican, and let fly at me several piece of ordnance, but the Lord was so pleased that we got away from them, and here I am arrived safe in Harwich, where I found three ships more for the Parliament, the Providence, the Tiger, and the Adventure frigates. I heard of from the late Boatswain, now Commander-in-Chief of she that wears the flag, that they will go and take colliers and sink them in the mouth of the river of Medway to prevent all those ships that are there from coming out." . . . — to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 14, 8 o'clock in the morning. From the Leaguer before Colchester.—“Yesterday the Generall marched from Coggeshall and about one of the clocke in the afternoone came before Colchester, whereupon the enemy drew out both horse and foot into the feild and lined the hedges thicke with muskettiers, and the Generall comaunded part of Colonell Barkestead's regiment and the draggoones to beat them from the hedges, which accordingly they did from feild to feild, and followed them close into the towne, doing execucion upon them and pursued them through the suburbs up to the verie gates.

The enemy perceiving the town would be lost if they should admitt our men to enter with their horse and foot that fled, shut the gates. Whereupon we tooke betweene two and three hundred prisoners, Sir William Layton and divers others of qualitie. The foot being thus farre engaged, it was conceived if they had two peece of cannon to breake open the gates wee might enter into the towne, the walls being too high to be stormed and besides a storme was not intended, soe accordingly two peeeces of ordnance and more foote of Colonell Barkestead's and the Tower regiment was also sent. These were all the forces save some horse which made good the suburbs against all the forces of the enemy from three of the clocke in the afternoone till twelve at night.

A summons being sent in the afternoone to the Lord Goreing, he sleighted it, and the townesmen rise in armes in great numbers and joyned with Goreing, whereupon it was thought fitt to fire the gate in order to which to fire the houses next adjoining, which being done proved to be our disadvantage by reason of the great light it gave the enemy to take ayme at our men over the walls, in so much as about two of the clocke this morning it was thought fitt to drawe of from the suburbs and with the more difficulty and dainger wee brought off the cannons.

The army is now drawne upon the ground where wee first faced the enemy. All the bridges are pulled upp towards Suffolke, and the Suffolke forces are sent for to make good one part of the seige, Sir Thomas Honywood and the other forces of this county another part, and this army to be devided into two parts more. If they have provisions in the towne—wee suppose they have not—it may make the busines take more time to reduce them this way, yet it is better then to cast away such gallant men against walls and bulwarks.

There is many of the enemy slaine and ours could not hold out that long service without losse. Colonell Woodham was shott in the legg, Captaine Laurence a captaine of horse shott in the body, Captaine Coeke shott and it is conceiv[ed] mortally wounded. Our souldiers are very hearty and would faine fall on againe.

Sir William Laiton told me when he was taken prisoner that in all the services he had beene in, he never see the like gallautrie by foot in the charge in the feild and into the towne. The enemy played with their great cannon all the day long from our first appearance before them but did verie little execucion. I never knew the Generall in so great dainger in these warres as in this charge. The enemy must be-take themselves to sea for their is no escaping and wee hear the country will come in verie freely to blocke them upp.

This is all the accompt I can give you at present being much wearied with the last night's continued service." Unsigned. Seal broken. [N. VII., 22.]

Report by Mr. KNIGHTLEY.

SIR MICHAEL LIVESEY and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 14. Canterbury.—“The bearer of these enclosed gave us great cause of suspicion, and upon search of his trunk we found the enclosed letters which in regard of the name of the person to whom they are directed we thought fit to transmit unto you, the bearer having a passport from the King of France.” Until the Militia of the County may be reformed and recovered to a parliamentary interest we have improved the present opportunity, while any part of the army remains, to endeavour to raise some considerable strength to be engarrisoned in some few convenient places in case of the army's withdrawal. As this will probably be a work of charge we ask that whatever pecuniary punishment may be imposed on the Delinquents may, after making good the losses of the well affected, be employed for the use of the County. What moderation the House may use towards those who have been misled by others so as to difference them from the ringleaders we conceive will be a winning merey upon ingenious spirits and an awful and exemplary justice upon such as are most unworthy of favour. (See Commons' Journals, v. 606.) Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 23.]

PETER PETT to [the COMMITTEE OF THE ADMIRALTY AND CINQUE PORTS ?].

1648, June 15. Chatham Dock.—“On Tuesday 23 May I came for Chatham and upon examination of divers of known integrity to the Parliament I perceived the designe of the Kentish petitioners to be so desperate that forthwith I sent an expresse to the Commissioners of the Navy, and desired them immediately to ympart it to your honours; which was the next morning presented to the Speaker of the House of Commons. The summe whereof was this, That if the Parliament did not presently either answere their desires, which I feared would prove unreasonable, or suppress them by a power, the whole county would not only be up in armes forthwith but hazard Parliament and kingdome, for that the partie rissen was not only desperate in their resolucion but ymplacable in their malice, to which I received no answere at all. Wendsday the 24th, after I had sent downe the Fellowshipp at Gillingham for feare of their seizing of her, I mustered the ordinary men of the Navy and found as well divers officers of the shippes missing which were joyned in that horrid engagement to act as committee men with the pretended committee at Rochester as also many ordinary shipkeepers that had then taken up armes to se[r]ve the gentlemen of Kent and that committee. I caused them at present to be prik't out of victualls and wages but with this provisoe that if any of them would lay downe their armes, and come in to do their duty within two daies they should have their full allowance. But never an officer appeared nor above two ordinary men. This morning also the pretended Committee sent Mr. May, one of their committee men, with one Mr. Taylor with a threefold request to me. The first was to signe their petition, to which I answered that I would be so farr from signeing of it that I would not read it; the second was that I would give them leave to gett hands to it in the yard; to that I answered that it was a place of garrison, kept for the service of the Parliament and therefore I could not give way unto it without a manifest breach of trust; the third request was to borrow ordnance, to which I told them it was more I thought then a committee of Parliament would do without leave first had from the house. Therefore I durst not be so highly presumptuous to attempt any such thing, but advized them, if their affections were real to the Parliament as they pretended, then not to dare to meddle with the Navy or anything thereunto belonging, for that I was confident the Parliament would take it as a large demonstration of mischeife intended either to themselves or kingdome. Their answere was that they knew the Committee would not staine their honours with such perfidiousnesse to the Parliament and that they would undertake that nothing should be meddled with. All which notwithstanding, within two howers after, they sent a party and tooke Uper Castle, carried away the captaine thereof to Rochester prisoner, and kept a guard of musketeirs and examined all vessells coming up or going downe.

Thursday, Fryday and Saturday being the 24th 25th and 26th of May, I expected orders either from your honours or the Commissioners of the Navy, for the transaction of the affaires thereof in reference to its safety in so dangerous a tyme, which failling of, the passages being stopt up, and for that the pretended committee sent a troop of horse to me to know whether I would lend them ordnance, to which I still gave my denyall, I thought it my duty in reference to my trust haveing no power to resist them, being forsaken almost by the whole Navy to write a letter to the pretended committee to this purpose, That they would be cautious in suffering any act to be done by their instruments that might trench upon the honor of the Parliament and safety of the Navy which I was confident would not only be very acceptable to them and invite the honourable Houses the rather to a compliance with them in their just and reasonable desires, but also engage me. Their answere to which was that there was no intentions on their parts for an attempt prejudicious either to the honourable Parliament or Navy; that if there were any suspitions they did disavowe them and only protest their resolution for the advancement of their just right of petitioning etc. Notwithstanding which, they sent a warrant that evening to Captaine Jervas, comander of the Fellowshipp, for searching the ship, and the next day they sent another order to bring up the shipp to Upner Castle, and there they tooke out both powder and victualls.

The 27th being Sundaye, they sent an order to gunner Pratt to fetch forty barrells of powder out of the Soveraigne and Prince which they shewed me. I then told them the great danger of such an attempt as to themselves in obeying such an order, and the dishonour that would be putt upon the parliament in meddling with powder on bord those shippes stated as a guard to the Navy, besides the exposinge of the Navy to ruine and what a cleere contradiccion it was of their promises, at which tyme I staved them of. But the next day being Munday, because they intended to possesse themselves of all the Navy that they might make use both of shippes and stores, they sent a company of musketeers under the comannd of one Dirkin of Rochester, and ushered by some of the principall gunners of the Navy to the new dock. I caused the gates to be shutt, stood upon our guard, and parlied with them out of a window. I told them I was sorry to see them in that posture at this place and asked them by what order they came hither. They told me they had warrant from the committee, which when I had redd and blish't at the impudency of their committee and insolency of them to give and obey such an order for seizing of the yard and stores together with the Soveraigne and Prince, I askt them whether they thought that order would beare them out, and what was the reason their new reasters were so perfidious as to promise me and declare to the world one thing one day, that they would not meeddle with the Navy, and the next to seize on all. They told mee they might as well breake their promise with mee as the parliament had done with them. I bid the wisest of them to tell me what the parliament had promised them since their rebellions rising that they had not performed. They told mee that they had proclaymed them rebels and traytours, and they were resolved to defend themselves as long as they could; and when they saw there was no coming into the yard they forthwith seized on the Soveraigne and Prince, left Dirkin to keepe the guard and sent up to their army some twenty-five barrells of powder from thence ymmediately.

28th 29th and 30th, being Tuesday, Wendsday and Thursday, haveing as well possession of the shippes and ordnance as of the powder, they carried away divers peeces of ordnance and were makeing of carriages for them, but through the infinite mercy of God in givinge successe to the Parliament's forces under the comannd of the Lord General at Maidstone on Thursday, they were so amazed as that on Fryday they began to shift for themselves, and the Lord Goring together with divers of the pretended comittee gave warrant and order to one Captaine Bonner, Mr. Morland, and others to take possession of the Fellowship of which Captaine Gervas was comannder, then riding at Upner Castle, and comanded him to carry her away next morning, pilot and all things being ready, of which I hearinge on Fryday evening caused presently a court of guard to be kept at Chatham new dock with those few forces and men we had, and manned a boat of musketeeres, haveing consulted first with the carpenter and boatswain of the shipp, whom I found true to the Parliament, and seized on the ship and captaine and brought him away, his brother and Morland, prisoners, and so saved the shipp, and the next day being Saturday, wee tooke possession of the Soveraigne and Prince. And then most of our Samaritan officers and comon men became Jewes, and would needs joyne with us; but because I found by experience their unparralelled perfidiousnesse to the Parliament, divers of them haveing bene cheefe actors in this rebellion, and others by the way of signing the petieion, and taking up of armes, engagement, I forthwith tooke a muster of all men both ordinary and extraordinary, belonging to the Navy and all which I found guilty I thought it my duty to give warrant to the Clerke of the Cheque to prick them out of victualls and wages till such tyme as they could cleere themselves, whose names I have drawing up in two listes ready to present to your honours." I offer it, whether it be not a thing very fit to purge the Navy of such ill members. [N. VII., 24.]

THOMAS [LORD] FAIRFAX to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, June 15. From the Leagner before Colchester.—“The bearer hereof, Captain Harrison, cometh from the well affected of the Isle of Ely to acquaint your Lordships with the dangerous condition of themselves and that place especially the inner parts of it about Wisbech which are joined to Holland and Marshland and which is like to be the rendezvous and make the head for all the Malignant party of those parts if not prevented. The forces settled for the guarding of the island are all necessarily employed upon the frontiers of it and much too far for that service. . . . It is the desire of the well affected there—and I do earnestly wish that some order were given for it—that Colonel Hubbert of Well in that isle . . . may have power to raise such forces for the guard of those parts as your Lordships shall think fit.” (See Lords' Journals, x. 329, 330.) Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 25.]

SIR GEORGE BOOTH.

1648, June 13. London.—“The prevailing party in the two Houses hath on Friday last voted the disarming of the kingdom, and intend to rule us by an arbitrary power and their army, if they can. The Kentish Trained Bands are dispersed by force and craft, but Sussex, Hampshire, and the adjacent counties are rising. We have a considerable army of resolved men now in Suffolk, and as it moves our disbanded soldiers and the Cavaliers gather to it. We doubt not but a little will lay Independent flat. Our City stands nenter. We desire you to interrupt publicly or privately, by force or otherwise, the proceedings of Duckenfield and his confederates that we may have a speedier end. You and Colonel Mainwaring may do much.” Seal. (See Commons' Journals, v. 606.) [N. VII., 26.]

1648, June 20. Chester Castle.—The governor being absent in taking steps for the payment of the assessments of some neighbouring counties allotted for the supply of this garrison was prevented from giving this first speedy relation. On Friday last, the 16th, "there was some discovery of a most deep and desperate plot to have betrayed this garrison . . . into the hands of the Malignant party of the kingdom. This present Tuesday there hath been some further knowledge thereof, and yet are there so many examinations of engaged persons behind, that the bottom of the plot cannot for the present be presented to your Honour, only this much in general, that some of the greatest in this city and county that have served with and against the Parliament since the beginning of the late war are accused to be prime actors in the business, and that God Almighty hath frustrated their expectations and preserved this place in safety, and these parts of the kingdom from an open and desperate war, and the lives of many godly persons from the malice of unreasonable men." *Signed. Colonel VALENTINE WAUTON (OR WALTON) to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, June 21. Lynn.—I have had “severall advertisements of the designe of the enimie to surprize Lin and Crowland, in which they acted very farr. But there speciall eye is upon the Ile of Ely, a place of that concernment that if possess by an enimie where they might head a considerable armie with all provision for horse and man att there pleasure. According to the trust reposed in me [1] have settled Lin in a quiett posture for the present as to enemies within, and am repaying the woorkes which ware much decayed within the moate. Two forts more would be made upon the inward line to make that line regular that the new woorkes which are large might be speedily slighted, for the small force I have are not sufficient for the towne. The out-works will require more men to man them then I have in the towne for that they lye open to invite an enymie, which may prove mischeavous. I have disbursd mony for the repairing the inward woorkes which I am in hand with dayly, that some course may be taken for the reimbursing of that mony againe. I spent the last weeke in putting the Ile of Elye—the south part—into a posture of defence. I vewed all the passages into the Isle and caused breast woorkes to be made upon every pass, and all great boates upon the fresh rivers to be secured under our guards. I summoned in the auxilliary forces who made a good appearance, about four hundred men, the captain and officers honest, ready upon all occasions to serve the publick but have spent upon their owne estates all this warr. I conceive if some course were taken for their future incouragement to be paid the dayes they shall exercise their men on, and drawne forth to defend there frontiers, the charge is not considerable, they having noe feild officers. The auxilliary souldiers are tracttable and willing to serve the commonwealth if they might receive there just pay due from those that find the armes who are much in arreere for former service. Soe that I was foreet for there present incouragement to send forth warrants for there speedy payment. For I find few that are there intrusted take care of the honor of the Parliament, or their owne safety. Likewise the alarum tax which hath lyeen two yeares in collectors’ hands due to those souldiers I have caused to be brought in. I am setting forward to putt the north part of the Ile into a posture, those that may be trusted. But generally they are disaffected as Wisbich, March, and Whittlesey, whome I purpose to disarm, and to arme honest men if they may be found. Colonel Hubbert and Lieutenant-Colonel Dimond are the only men for the Parliament, but over powred with Malignants. I cannot see how that part of the Ile can be secured without a troope of horse upon their frontieres. Colonel Hubbert would be the fittest to commaund them, who is a person of fidellitie and trust if itt be thought convenient. Crowland and Whittlesey woorkes are much decayed and part of Whittlesey fort not finisht, that if any enimie should rise within they cannot defend them selves against them, but for want of mony they are not made soe defensible as they might be. I had forty barrells of powder, match and bullett proportionable lately from the committe of the armie, which spends apace, being disperst to Ely, Whittlesey, Crowland and Boston, and for Lin guards, soe that if there should be any sudden occasion I know not from whence we could be timely supplied. I have noe meanes to send out a scoute or for entilligence but all out of my owne purse, that any enimie may come under the woorkes before notice can be taken. I desire that ammunition may be with speede sent, and those other things taking into consideration, if thought necessary, the souldiers have great want of swords, not one hundred in my regiment, alsoe drumes, about twelve wanting. They have not bin recruited these three or four yeares. The committe of the armie allowed 13*l.* for fair coullers. There is yett wanting to compleat my regiment in Lin and the Isle of Ely, thre coullers." Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 30.]

to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, June 22. Horsham.—We endeavoured to remove the magazine at Horsham to Arundel Castle on the 9th, but were resisted by the Bailiffs and Constable and disaffected party there, by whom the arms and magazine are still kept with a strong guard. They threaten to kill and plunder those who endeavour to remove them, using very high words against the Parliament. On Tuesday last a letter was delivered to the Bailiffs and Constables from Colonel Morley and Colonel Stapley requiring them to remove the magazine to Arundel Castle, but notwithstanding the said arms and magazine are still kept at Horsham with a strong guard, and the Bailiffs and Constables replied that they could not remove the same. "The Malignant party have given out speeches that they will arm themselves with the first arms and rise as one man against all such as have not joined with them in a petition called the Sussex Petition: they likewise refuse to pay taxes or to yield any obedience to the ordinances of Parliament. Till your lordships remove the obstructions we cannot safely meet for getting in taxes for the army or to doe the Parliament any further service. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 31.]

Colonel RALPH ASSHETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 23. Kendal.—The bearer Captain French is despatched by the officers and soldiers under my command to ask the House for an establishment of pay. "We have already reduced the enemies' garrisons of Dockerhall and Bertham and forced the retreat of the enemies' horse out of Westmorland, and in order to a further perfecting of the work are upon advance for conjunction with Major-General Lambert." ROBERT WRIGHT, Mayor, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 24. Chester.—The favour shown us by the House during the late plague here encourages us to address them. This city before its surprisal by the King's forces faithfully paid all assessments laid on it by Parliament being about one eleventh of what was imposed on the county, but since then about a fourth part is burnt, the rest almost wholly worn out by the king's forces in their time, and by the payment of great sums by the most able citizens to the use of the Parliament after its reduction, and also by the devastating plague, together with the want of trading all this while. And now in this most miserable condition we are called on to pay assessments for the army and Ireland, which we acknowledge are yet unpaid, not from disaffection but inability. We therefore ask that all arrears may be remitted, and that for the future the city may be charged at only a reasonable rate. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 34.]

SIR HARDRES WALLER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 24. Exeter.—Have received no answer to my former inquiry how my prisoners were to be disposed of. In consequence of the soldiers not receiving their pay they are unable to pay for their quarters, which causes ill feeling between them and the country people. I therefore suggest as the best expedient that troops and companies should gather their moneys in the Hundreds where they quarter as assistants to the Constables, so that it being brought to the High Constable may be paid by him to the officer. Our next difficulty is the disposing of these forces in market towns and cities according to the ordinances of Parliament, which not being sufficient, an enlargement of quarters to the adjacent places became necessary, which however was much complained of, and further it is a generally received opinion that we are not suffered to march into Plymouth and by command expelled out of Exeter. I therefore desire a declaration or order of the House that all towns in these counties of Devon and Cornwall shall be free for their forces to march into upon all occasions. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 35.]

SIR HARDRES WALLER to SIR JOHN TEMPLE.

1648, June 24. Exeter.—“ Captain Richard Hart, who hath suffered much from the cruelty of Lord Inchiquin and his wicked party by being imprisoned and thrust out of his command and with much ado got from thence . . . an honest, sober, faithful man, assured me that Lord Inchiquin and his forces are actually joined with the Irish, and that he hath sent a good party of his horse to join with Lord Taaffe and that Lord Taaffe had sent a great part of his foot to join with Lord Inchiquin’s forces, and . . . that their whole design of conjunction depends on coming for England, and that they resolve to land in Cornwall, that they knew long since that the ships would revolt, by means whereof they expect the Duke of York to come to them, or at least they assure themselves of those ships to come and bring them over, which design hath been to me so visible that I have given notice thereof some months since. They can well spare 2,000 horse and a large body of foot . . . Although it hath pleased God to enable me so to quell the enemies of the Parliament in these parts that they were never lower, yet they might be looked upon as merely under a force and that if any enemy of what quality or condition soever should land infinite numbers would presently resort to them, which my inconsiderable force cannot be imagined able to look upon. . . . Postscript.—Honest Sir William Fenton, gallant Lieutenant-Colonel Phane and some ten others are like to perish there as the Parliament’s martyrs, if the House do not take some present course for their relief and release which in earnest I am so conscientiously sensible of that I cannot be silent in it, as I desire you and other real men may not be which are there upon the place from whence they may be relieved, as you will all answer it to God and the world.” (See Commons’ Journals, v. 620.) Seal. [N. VII., 36.]

Colonel EDWARD ROSSETER to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, June 24. Lincoln.—“ The late rising of the disaffected party with Styles and Hudson near Stamford was happily suppress before my coming downe, yet was not this country thereby freed from danger, the enimye much increasing at Pontefract, wherby their partie in these partes were encouraged to list men, and the better to carry on their designe, the most active of them had very frequent meetings in divers parts by which the peace of this county was much indangered. To prevent which I have with the assistance of the committee completed a troope of horse ; save onely for armes, for supply whereof I humbly crave your Lordships' order, and by these I hope the country wilbe continued quiet within itselfe, though not protected from the growinge enemy, who is so increased at Pontefracte, as that he may without interrupcion march into any parte of this county. For the better security of these partes, I sent a party of horse into the Isle of Axholme with commission to an active gentleman to raise a company of foote for securinge those passes, the inlet into this county, but such was the aversnes of those partes as that they earnestly opposed their owne and the countrie's security, for which I feare they have by this tyme suffered, I haveing this night intelligence that a party of horse, foote and dragoones of about five hundred are ther entred, and I feare may settle in that place, to the great annoyance of this county, wee being no way able to make resistance, the inhabitantes being in no defensive posture, nor have they any provision of armes to protect themselves or offend their enemy, the magazeene of this county being removed to Hull whence without your Lordships' order wee can have no restitution of any parte thereof. Provision is here made for securing of all places of strength in this county. The care of Belvoire Castle is committed to Captain Henry Markham, whoe is authorized to raise sixty foote for security of that place. Mr. Francis Fines is by the committee desired with fifty men to secure the Castle of Tattershall. Bullingbrooke is ordered to be demolished, and an ingeeneere appointed to effect the same the next weeke. Hougham House and Torksey are already slighted.

My Lords, perceiving that whilst wee endeavour severally to protect our divided counties, wee may successively meete with our respective ruines, wee have agreed on Monday next to drawe to a randevouze in Newarke with the severall horse of this county, Nottingham, Derby, and Leicester, to prevent the enimies intended garrisoninge of that place if possibly wee can effect it, which indeed I much doubt, our conjoynd force being so much inferior to the enemy, and no way fitted for present service. So that without an addicion of some other force by your Lordships to be speedily ordered to our assistance, I cannot perceive how we should with this handfull of men be any waies serviceable to our country or the Kingdome." Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 37.]

Colonel JOHN SPARROWE to SIR HARBOTTLE GRIMSTON.

1648, June 26. From the Leaguer before Colchester. — "Our country now begins to be so exhausted of provisions that it may well be doubted that the poor will be compelled to rise for want of bread. And I cannot see any other remedy unless some pay may be advanced for the pay of the General's army, and . . . then we should be supplied by way of markets here and other countries would readily send in for our money, whereas now all provisions are raised in our country.

both for the army and the Essex forces. The Suffolk forces are now come in and they are principally supplied from their own country for present, but now we have in a manner begirt the town of Colchester round, and then Tendering Hundred will be subject to supply them. I hope the enemy will soon be straitened and compelled one way or other to yield, though as yet they seem high and confident. I hear that Captain Lin and Captain Ayliffe, Sir Benjamin's son, have with a party, possessed themselves of your house at Bradfield and intend to garrison it, but I believe they will soon be compelled to leave it" . . . [N. VII., 39.]

Colonel FRANCIS HACKER and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June 26. Leicester.—We have used the power given us by the Ordinance to raise forces in this County, in which we have had extraordinary assistance from Thomas Lord Grey and Peter Temple, Esq., who have personally gone through every Hundred. And the country thereupon coming in very freely had the choice of their officers and chose Lord Grey and Mr. Temple to be colonels in two Hundreds, and Colonel Beaumont, Colonel Hacker, and Colonel Heselrige for the other Hundreds. We are all much obliged to Lord Grey and Mr. Temple for their forwardness, and conceiving that their appearing in arms will be of considerable advantage, we recommend that, if the House please to give way they may accept of these places and commands accordingly, and act as occasion shall require. *Signed. P. H. to JOSEPH MASON at his father's house in Southampton.

[1648], June 27. [London.]—"The Saints are not well pleased to find every one desirous to send them to a place of bliss before they have a mind to go. At Colchester last week they lost many by the sword—some say 1,500 at one bout—more by deserting the colours. 'Tis thought 4,000 of the old army is all—if so many—left. On Thursday the General sent in propositions of peace, indemnity, deposition of arms, &c. The same were returned in offer to him again. Trinity House being consulted how to set out a fleet to reduce the revolted, made answer that the more were sent out the more would be lost, the defection being general. They desire a personal treaty to reduce all, which . . . I doubt they will not be induced unto, but by the sword, for I am confident the K. will not depose himself to get a treaty by first granting those bills, so often denied, and so much suffered for. By letters from Paris we understand of the Prince's journey to Callis, where the shipping attends him, and whither many from hence are gone. 'Tis thought he will hazard much, rather than Colchester suffer, which at present wants neither courage nor men and commands land and sea enough to support a relief. Pembroke also proves hard of digestion. The Saints there also multiply losses. . . . The mutinous humours of the city continue of the old fashion to little effect—raill upon the Parliament and obey it, feast Cavaliers and suffer them to be imprisoned, long to see a personal treaty as some new strange thing." [N. VII., 43.]

THE COMMITTEE OF THE ESTATES OF SCOTLAND to LORD INCHQUIN.

1648, June 28. Edinburgh.—"We are very sensible of the great extremities the Lord Inchquin hath been reduced to by the malice of the Independent party in England and it appears by the relation made unto us that his Lordship and the Protestant army in Munster have not been able still by force to oppose their common enemies, but have been necessitated to agree to a cessation with some of them, thereby to divide them among themselves to engage them in an active opposition one of another, and for the more vigorous pursuing of Owen Roe and that party that directly oppose the right of the Crown of England and laboureth a foreign interest whom he which might be trusted without a cessation with those who are guilty of the shedding of so much blood of the Protestants there, and to which it is protest his Lordship hath been necessitated by the withholding from him those assistances necessary for carrying on the war against them. The Kingdom of Scotland, though they cannot admit for their parts of any conjunction or association with the Roman Catholics there or any else under what pretences soever yet they will ever most cheerfully assist to their power the Lord Inchquin and the Protestants with him, both against Owen Roe and all the party with him or who shall continue in their disobedience to the Crown of England, and likewise against the prevalent Independent party in England or Ireland and for that end we shall henceforth include the said Lord Inchiquin, his army, and all such as are or shall be joined within the solemn League and Covenant in all treaties and agreements for peace which this nation shall make for [their own] behalf, and we do expect his Lordship will make no agreement for himself and his party without including this kingdom and including its interest. We leave to the Lord Inchiquin, concerning his comportment to the Lord Clanrickard, the Lord Taaffe and the Irish who are willing to submit to the King's authority, provided the terms of that submission be not prejudicial to the Protestant Religion.

As for the Lord Marquess of Ormonde we look upon him as a person so full of honour loyalty and good affection to religion as we conceive the Lord Inchiquin and the Protestant army in Munster will do themselves great right in acknowledging and submitting themselves to the authority he hath from his Majesty. We shall employ some from hence to reside there, and in the mean time shall desire the Lord Inchiquin to continue a good correspondence with us" and the Scotch army in Ulster. Draft or Copy. [N. SIR THOMAS HONYWOOD and others to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, June 29. Leaguer before Colchester.—"The rebels having by the providence of God shut themselves into Colchester are now by his Excellency's forces—with the weak assistance we have been able to contribute—begirt on each side and near approached in sundry places. Their obstinancy in the defence of that place sheweth plainly that as they are the only visible force now in arms against the Parliament in all the South parts of the kingdom, so they look upon themselves as the last refuge of their party, and are resolved to venture to the utmost for the upholding their dying rebellion. The bottom of their confidence we conceive is from help of foreign assistance, which—as by themselves, so also by the revolted ships and others—are daily threatened. The concernment of the present affair . . . is not unknown unto you. They or we may justly expect certain ruin on the ground where we are. If any help be afforded them it is like to be by the way expressed. For the compassing of that the most opportune place is Harwich, lying in the mouth of those parts, where the revolted Navy may be easily fraught with disbanded soldiers." There are some ships there of whose fidelity his Excellency is assured. Considering the importance of reducing the forces in these parts, we desire that your Lordships should take order for the continuance and supply of these ships there. We also desire that a considerable supply of money and provisions be sent to the forces under his Excellency's command. "The sad condition of our friends in durance presseth us to remind your Lordships of a righteous resolution of sending to the head quarters such a number of considerable Delinquents as may undergo the same way of entertainment amongst us as our worthy friends do find among the rebels, there being as yet but one come unto us. . . . Our friends are placed in such a house, as lies under the mouth of our chiefest battery, so that we must either forsake our advantage, or at every shot endanger the lives of those worthy persons." *Signed. 1648, July 2. Leagner before Colchester.—Concerning the differences at Hull between some of the townsmen and the Deputy-Governor, whom he praises, and the affronts offered to him by Mr. Boatman, the great incendiary in the town, concerning whom a paper is enclosed, and desiring that a good quantity of provisions for the Castle and Block-houses there might be speedily sent down. Signed. [N. [Major-General LAMBERT] to ———.

[1648], July 2. Brampton.—Since my last dated at Rickaby nothing considerable has happened. The country near Carlisle being altogether unable to furnish us longer with provisions it was thought fit to draw off at a little further distance yet so as to prevent provisions from going to the enemy. Accordingly on Friday last we drew off both horse and foot and marched to Brampton and Warwick Bridge and kept strong guards there and at other passes thereabout. Upon our drawing off the enemy with about fourscore horse troubled us in the rear and followed skirmishing about two or three miles. In this retreat Major Robinson, who brought up our rear and behaved himself very well received a shot in his face, though not dangerous, at a pass we went over, and the enemy following us to a second pass I appointed Major Haynes with a commanded party of Colonel Twisleton's regiment to draw up behind that pass upon the flanks of the pursuers where the ditch was so straight as a horse might leap it, and ordered him when they came up to career over and fall upon them, which he accordingly did, and the enemy immediately faced about with their whole party, and he had the pursuit of them almost as far as Stanwix. The enemy never stood but about twelve of them were taken prisoners, two slain, and divers dangerously wounded. After that we retreated very quietly. In this pursuit one Captain Sherburne, a Lancashire man and Papist, was taken, and the rest of them most gentlemen and reformed officers well mounted.

I received letters out of Northumberland from Sir Arthur Heselrige signifying that the enemy there increases much and summon in the country which come in freely, and thereupon sent Colonel Lilburne with three more troops of his regiment to join with the rest of ours there, and upon other letters I appointed Colonel Harrison with his own regiment and four of Lieutenant-General's troops should likewise go to their assistance, and accordingly he set forward yesterday afternoon. We this afternoon met with Colonel Ashton concerning the disposing of the remaining forces, which I conceive we shall draw up on the South of Carlisle. Copy. [N. XII., 250.]

Colonel JOHN JONES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, June [July] 4. Denbigh Castle.—“This last night this Castle of Denbigh should have been betrayed. The enemy that were to surprise it were in number about 80, of whom about 50 had entered the outer ward before the alarm was taken, having gained a corporal by promising him 100*l.*, and likewise two sentinels—who stood on that side where they were to enter—their confederates. The Captain of the Watch suspected treachery in the corporal by his neglecting to relieve his sentinels in due time, and therefore went himself the round and made the first discovery. The prisoners we took and the said soldiers which were in the design have upon their examination discovered the whole plot, as far as they knew being a limb of the general design of the kingdom. The chief contrivers yet discovered unto us are such as have perfected their compositions and were permitted to enjoy their estates as friends Postscript.—I was with the Governor in the Castle when the alarm was given and was an eye witness of the good posture and readiness of himself and soldiers although he had at that instant a greater number of prisoners in the Castle than soldiers.” Seal. [N. VII., 10.]

SIR ANTHONY WELDON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 4. Rochester.—“We are in a daily expectation of new insurrections boldly threatened by the Malignants from several parts of the county whereunto they encourage themselves from the fresh remembrance of their own late formidable appearance, the only visible check thereof, the army, being now otherwise engaged, the nakedness of the well affected party by them disarmed, the delay of exemplary punishment upon themselves, their great hopes of succour by a foreign invasion, and the advantages thereto by the revolted ships and castles in the Downs together with the declared countenance of the Prince. All which mischiefs we are in this condition altogether unable to withstand by reason of the late plunderings and spoil of the Parliament’s friends and of the county in general, the dissolution of the whole frame of the Militia, the imbezilling of the public magazines and moneys, besides the extraordinary and unproportionable burthen of taxes upon this county made use of by the Malignants to exasperate the people against the Parliament.” We have therefore raised a regiment of horse and one of foot maintained upon free quarter in confidence the house will grant supplies for their maintenance which we suggest should be by applying the fines or sequestrations of the principal incendiaries in this insurrection. (Most of the rest of this letter sufficiently appears from the resolutions passed thereon. See Commons’ Journals, v. 628. “The mitigation and exemption” there alluded to was proposed to be in favour of “such persons whose particular cases compared with their former actings for the Parliament may give just ground to believe that their compliance in this action was really forced.”) Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 47.]

SIR THOMAS BARNARDISTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 4. From the Leaguer before Colchester.—“The forces of our county were so forward to serve you that four regiments of foot and seven troops of horse were advanced, besides those that kept the passes, and at our coming we found them in their approaches near unto the town, and they have since behaved themselves so gallantly, that after a hot dispute, where some of them lost their lives and many of them much blood, yet in the conclusion they beat the enemy out of their houses in the suburbs . . . so far as the East Bridge, which doth much straiten those within the town by hindering their sallies into Tendring Hundred. We are this day at their quarters with them, and are careful to send them in provision and to provide their pay. At their first rising there appeared in some of them a strange averseness to the service, but afterwards so unexpected a forwardness, and cheerfulness in all of them, that makes many wonder at it, and may make us all confident that God still appears for us. They labour under many difficulties, and the pay they have received we stand engaged for and doubt not of reimbursement at the public charge." . . . (See Commons' Journals, v. 624.)

SIR THOMAS HONYWOOD and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 4. At the Leaguer before Colchester.—“The difficulties wherewith wee have wrestled in the late engagement, not onely continuing but also growing upon us, dayly reports and informacions carying with them too much probability of further tumults intended, and forces to be levied for the reliefe of them besieged, giving us just cause of feare that wee whoe were soe much overpowred by their first attempt shall no way be able in our present posture in the least measure to serve the Commonwealth or protect ourselves, wee are bold to give in our estate and desires to this honourable House, from which alone—under God—wee hope for assistance. The sad condicion wherein wee are will not give us leave to neglect or disbelieve the manifest intencions and knowne threates of our enemies, both in our owne county, the places adjacent and others remote, experience having convinced us that straitened power and small forces in such condicions as that whereunto wee are now reduced is the readiest and most expeditious course for the ruine of the undertakers, wee are enforced to such a further engagement and advancement of the one and the other. Something wee heare is voted in order to the payment of the forces wee have already raised, which as wee receive with acknowledgment of your honourable care therein, soe it being onely for a month allready fully expired, wee cannot but informe your Honour that it will not reach to a supply of our necessities, without an addition at least of another month to be levied according to the continuance of our troubles, but indeed were that whole force of the old establishment, both traine and auxiliaries in the best posture they possibly can be settled in, it would be exceedingly short of what our present necessity calls for. Whilste our enemies were allwayes visible and at such a distance as wee might observe their motions towards us, the present power of the country especially considered as in association was not contemptible, but as to this tyme our feares arising for the future and our actuall troubles for the present from neighbours and formerly supposed friendes, many of the Trained Bands, both officers and soldiers, divers of the auxiliaries horse and foote, being seduced into the late rebellion, others refusing or neglecting to come or send in to us, doth amount nere the one moiety of the whole force, which the imminent danger of invasion from abroad for which our enemies are of late soe accomodated, nature itself continually prompting us to seeke the raising such a visible strength and the supporting of it by such a directing power, and meanes of supportance and maintenance as which with the blessing of God wee may oppose to the utmost endeavours. Our neighbour county of Kent, as wee humbly conceave, have given us as to the pointe of a boddy of horse and foote continually in pay and service, a desirable patterne. Lesse then what they have done, wee cannot apprehend wilbe usfull in any measure unto us." We therefore desire authority for levying such forces, and for enforcing an involuntary contribution from the estates of those who have contributed to laying the foundation of a second war. Signed. [N. VII., 49.]

[Major-General LAMBERT] to ———.

[1648], July 4. Wetherall, near Warwick Bridge.—I sent Colonel Lilburne with the remainder of his regiment to Northumberland with instructions to alarm and disturb the enemy in his levies, till I could settle affairs here so as to send a more considerable party. I also gave him instructions not to attempt anything upon the enemy, except God should put some clear opportunity into his hands by surprising, beating some quarters, or the like. According to his directions, hearing the enemy had summoned in the country near Cockett, in Northumberland, and had a great quantity of arms coming thither for the arming of such as should appear, he drew towards them in the night, intending thereby to give the country such an alarm that they should not appear the next day, but coming nearer and finding them in great security, and having either none or a very slight guard, he fell into their quarters. He took divers gentlemen of very good quality and account—according as the enclosed list will mention—, betwixt three and four hundred private soldiers and at least 600 horses, most of them very good. The enemy after this blow got together and made some parties in small bodies, and might probably have acted something upon him being diverted by his prisoners, and the soldiers upon their prey. Nevertheless they did not come on any farther.

I had upon further advice sent Colonel Harrison with his own regiment and four troops of Lieutenant-General Cromwell's for the relief of that county, most of which on that good success I hope to recall for defence of these parts from the enemy which I hope will be easy to be dealt withall, if they do not receive those supplies from Scotland, which they expect with very great confidence.

I understand from a very good hand, that partly by affections but chiefly by force they carry on the new levies in that kingdom, and have already drawn down to Dumfries, 25 miles from Carlisle, 3,000 horse and 6,000 foot, with arms, ammunition, victuals and other provisions of war, and this day Lord Calender and Major-General Middelton came thither, and gave out they intend for England this week. Enclosed:

Major-General LAMBERT to his father-in-law SIR WILLIAM LISTER.

1648, July 4. Wetherall, near Warwick Bridge.—"The number of our forces are in all 23 troops of horse besides two in Northumberland and four in Yorkshire, but some very small, having divers commanded parties forth in other parts of the kingdom, many fallen sick, and abundance of horses sick and lame, and some run away upon the new raising of horse into Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, which amount unto about 2,300 horse and 1,200 foot besides Lancashire, which is about 1,000 foot and 300 horse. From Scotland we hear that the Malignants by force and power carry on their new levies very fast and have already in readiness 4,000 horse and 10,000 foot, which lie at Dumfries being of the new levies and 3,000 foot more which my information reports to be of the old army, which I understand not in regard I conceive all their foot was disbanded, and 3,000 more which they expect out of Ireland the 1st of July all which makes 16,000. Besides the horse aforementioned they have 2,000 horse of the old army and 1,000 more out of Ireland; great store of arms ammunition and oatmeal already brought to Dumfries. Signed. (Seal, a centaur with motto Nosce Teipsum, the same as that on the Margetts' letters in Lord Braye's collection. BARON WILD.

THOMAS [LORD] GREY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 5. Cotesbridge.—“Having intelligence from Colonel Rossiter that the cavaliers were at Lincoln I sent Colonel Hacker with about 200 horse being soldiers and countrymen who after following them three day[s] they took 100 or thereabouts passing over the Trent and I having intelligence that they were marching this way I sent in for the countrymen that were late listed and securing the passes last night drew them all to Cotesbridge to the number of 400 or thereabouts, and sending out parties from thence met with some of them, they being totally routed and running away in 30 and 20 in a company. I have sent parties every way to meet stragglers and am following that way the greatest part is said to be gone. The particulars you shall have more at large when the parties are all met and the officers drawn together. . . . Postscript.—“The fight was at Widmorepoole in Nottinghamshire upon the confines of Leicestershire.” *Signed. J[OHN] R[USHWORTH] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 5.—(Corresponding in substance and in many places verbatim with that printed in Rushworth, iv. 2. 1179. It adds that the sally was commanded by Sir George Lisle.) Postscript.—“Had we but old soldiers instead of these countrymen Colchester had not been out of your power at this hour, but you shall see God will give it us in good time” and recommending “honest Mr. Sleigh of Berwick.” . . . “I have a list of 30 Coronels (Colonels), who are in Colchester, and have all formerly been coronels for the King, and now for the Covenant—as they say—in right of the King.” Only the Postscript and address in Rushworth's hand. Seal. [N. Colonel THOMAS MYTTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 5. Denbigh.—“Being here upon Monday night to meet Colonel Jones . . . had it not been that God in his mercy prevented the enemies' design we had been all surprised, they having engaged a corporal, one Sutton, and two private soldiers, Williams and Ashmont, who stood sentinels that night to betray the Inner Castle unto them. The corporal was to have 100*l.*, the two private soldiers had no certain sum promised. We were all upon the pit's brink, they having effected their design so far as to be possessed of the outer works of the Inner Castle, and were got to a gate which cometh into the Inner ward which did not reach the ground by three-quarters of a yard, there being a piece of timber put under the gate to prevent any passage that way, which would have been quickly and without noise removed, the corporal having laid a wooden bar ready for them at the place to effect it, but it pleased God that, a sentinel having called divers times unto the corporal to relieve him and the corporal not answering, one Serjeant Owen being Captain of the watch that night . . . speedily went the round and coming near to the place where Williams stood, first heard a noise and then espied the enemy got into the tower where the sentinel stood, and gave the alarm. The Governor being not gone to bed, having parted with Colonel Jones and myself not half an hour before, got his men presently upon the works which when the enemy was aware of they made all possible haste to be gone, leaving many of their arms behind them in the Castle, and two of them fell under a draw-bridge where they could not come out till they were apprehended as soon as it was day, who have confessed unto us much of the design and divers of the persons that were there that night . . . Williams fled away with them, the corporal and Ashmont we have taken, who have confessed how and by whom they were engaged. There is nobody that hath power to proceed against them by Martial Law, and this place hath more prisoners than soldiers in it, which I humbly desire may be taken speedily into consideration, it being of so considerable consequence that all the Parliament's interest in North Wales, excepting the county of Montgomery, will be lost next, if the enemy should possess himself thereof, Anglesey being in that posture it is yet in. The chief actors that we can discover as yet . . . are Major Dollbin, Captain Dollbin, Captain Rutter, Captain Parry, Captain Hughes and Captain Charles Chambers, all of them commanders heretofore for the king, William Chambers and one Hughes both tradesmen in this town. . . ."

SIR ARTHUR HESERIG to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 6. Newcastle.—“ Upon the first notice of the prisoners that were taken I sent you upp a list as it then came to me and although they lost Sir Richard Tempest before the rest were brought to me, yet I find many gentlemen of qualitie and officers not mentioned in that list, in all full an hundred. Many of the officers and gentlemen are papists, and I am putt to very great charge and trouble in keepinge so many prisoners. It is not fitt to my understandinge that Collonel Grey and some of the most active and dangerous amongst them should be prisoners in their owne countie. I thinke Scarborough Castle or some other place might be more proper for them; and for those papists that have bene in armes I desire to know your pleasure whether yow will admitt of any exchange for them. Some of the private souldiers I have taken into service, others that were pressed men I have discharged, and there remains about one hundred and fifty that I believe will never change their partie so long as they live. They are most of them troopers that have bene in the same service formerly with the gentlemen that are prisoners, and it is a very great charge to mainteyne them and whensoever they are sett at libertie it will be an addicion of so many stout desperate men to the enemies strength. I could heartily wish that both they and such others as have formerly fought against the parliament and have againe taken upp armes were sent to some forraigne plantacions for they have noe estates and are sodainely ready in every parte of the kingdome to rise upp in armes. This day the Scottch forces that are raised hould their randevvous eight miles from Carlile, and it comes to me from very good handes that they intend to come into England on Saterdag. I was tould by one this day that came yesterday out of Scotland that the Scotts forces were uppou their march towards their randevvouz, and that he was in their quarters. And withall he told me that he heard divers ministers preach both uppou the dayes appoynted for humiliation and other dayes that the Curse of God would follow them. His wordes also were that there was not an honest man in Scotland but was against their comeinge into England. It would be of great advantage to this kingdome and to your affaires if some forces of the army could speedilie come downe." (The rest of the letter relates to Mr. Cole, a Delinquent.) Signature torn off. Seal. [N. VII., 55.]

Colonel GEORGE TWISLETON and Colonel JOHN CARTER to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 6. Denbigh.—Suggesting in reply to the letter of June 8th, which thanked them for their services against Sir John Owen, and asked them to represent a way for remunerating the troops engaged in that service, that pay should be granted them out of the sequestrations of the estates of Sir John Owen's confederates, and asking for repayment of about 3,000*l.* apiece due to themselves. Signed. Seal. [N. Colonel EDWARD ROSSETER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 6. Nottingham.—"It hath pleased God to give us a seasonable victory over the Pontefract forces, an increasing, active, and resolved enemy. . . The timely advance of Sir Henry Cholmely with those under his command—stopping their retreat by his lying on the North side Trent—gave us this opportunity of fighting them. My present indisposition occasioned by my wounds received in this sharp engagement will not give me leave to present you with an account thereof in writing. I have therefore sent my Captain-Lieutenant to give you a full narrative of the whole business." (Printed in Grey, iii. Appendix, No. 17, p. 26.) Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 58.]

THOMAS [LORD] FAIRFAX to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, July 8. From the Leaguer before Colchester.—Referring to his former letter concerning the differences between Colonel Overton and the townsmen of Hull, and stating he had since received by Alderman Ramsden and others another petition desiring his removal, but without mentioning any particular charge, nor had the gentlemen anything to say against him as a soldier. *Signed. Colonel ADRIAN SCROPE to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, July 10. St. Neots.—"We after a very hard march came" here, "where we found the enemy, and early in the morning we fell into their quarters and had suitable success even according and beyond our expectation. The enemy when we entered the town were drawn up into three bodies, which my forlorn hope charged and routed before the rest of my horse entered, but when the rest came up the dispute was quickly at an end, for then they got out at all the passes and ran for it, but divers of them fell and some of the chief ones, and we have taken divers prisoners. . . . The Duke of Bucks escaped with about three score horse, who is gone—as I understand—towards Lincoln. I had marched all day Saturday and all night that my horse were unable to pursue further than Huntingdon, but I hope, if he goes that way, that he will be met with by Colonel Rosseter's forces. He is not at all considerable and unable to do anything." (See Commons' Journals, v. 633.) Seal. Enclosed:

Major Holland,	Quartermaster George Wheeler,

The Duke was the General. There were slain of my part two men only, my Captain-Lieutenant wounded and three more. Since the writing hereof was taken Colonel Legge and mortally wounded. I hear also that Sir Kenelm Digby's son is slain." [N. VII., 61.]

Colonel GEORGE TWISLETON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 10. Denbigh.—On Monday night Major Dolbin and his party "came to that gate of the Castle where those centreys stood between 12 and 1 of the clock and by the help of two ladders were all received in by them . . . and having the command of all the Outer Ward they came to the Inmost Gates. The Captaine of the Watch, Serjeant Owens, misseing the Corporall and suspecting something in that hee was absent and had not releevd those two centreys as hee had commanded immediatly went the round, and towards that tower where hee suspected danger. The centrey made him stand whilest he called the corporalls severall tymes before hee would answer and the centrey beeing one of them in the plott would not let him pass untill the corporall gave the word who hearing the captaine of the watch soe exceedingly storme, came as if hee had beene with reliefe to an other centrey, and bidd let him passe, but indeed as hee after himselfe confessed came from the gate where the enemy was, and hee was helping them to breake it open and that hee thought they had done enough to make all sure before the captayne could give the alarum, much more before the castle could take it. The captaine passing presently looked over the wall, saw the enemy all within and at the gate called to this centry to fire. Hee did not, hee then called to armes. I beeing then up in my chamber with Collonell Jones came late that night beeing designed by the howse for some speciall service touching Anglesey, tooke the first call, and came directly to the gate where I knew the greatest danger lay. Against which a gun was placed where I fownd the enemy. God directed us to doe that and soe astonished the enemy that they were presently put to shift for themselves. The corporall should have let the enemy through the way wee sent out and releevd our centreys which was over a draw-bridge that I made of purpose very strong and secure. The captaine of the watch before by an imediate hand of providence leadeing him went a litle after the setting of these treacherous centreys, and findeing the draw-bridge unlockt, onely haspt on the inside, hee lockt a doore which secured the passage to the draw-bridge by which means the corporall could not come to it to let them in, which if hee had done as was plotted, wee had then beene all irrecoverably lost for they might have come all round the castle in private wayes and to the prisoners which were in number more then I had souldiers in the castle, whereof was Sir John Owen and others of great noate to the number of above one hundred, and let them out uppon us before wee cold have taken the alarum. Another speciall peece of providence was that neither the enemy nor the corporall should thinke of using there great hammer with which one blow uppon the padlockes that lockt the bolts the corporall might have made way for them, and then they might all have rusht in a body. The enemy left behynd them near fifty armes, swords, bills, fowling peeces and suchlike weapons. Wee tooke a eleven (sic) prisoners first and last. The night was darke and rayny and my chardge within in respect of my prisoners was great, which was the cawse I would not sally untill I had secured all within. Then I did, but all the birds were flown except two that wee tooke and by means of them gott a discovery of the persons that were both chiefe in and accessory to this plott. I have the corporall and one of the centreys in hold, and both of them did confesse all those particulars. I formerly mencioned they were to have an 100*l.* but had in hand litle, one 10*s.*, the other 5*s.* I had informacion from Chester that the other centrey that came away with the enemy is apprehended there. They confesse noe more of my men in the plott, but I suspect many of the guard that was uppon the watch that night and have turned away some of them. Noe providence nor care can fence against treachery. I had ingadged all my souldiers seeing the desperatnes of the tymes in the inclosed ingadgement, had turned out and changed all—to the number of above threescore—that had bene cavaleers, and that had not morall principles of honesty at least to guide them. There was not the least discontent or shew of it in any, but duty readily and exactly performed according to as strict rules and orders as I could prescribe: yet these rogues were seduced who had served in these partes above four yeares, and never was of the enemies party.” Signed. [N. SIR MICHAEL LIVESEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 10. Kingston.—“The inclosed coming to my hands I thought fit to send it to you, whereby you might perceive it is not a personal treaty will serve your enemies’ turn; but it is your lives and your estates they thirst after. . . . Those enemies are very high and in many places ready to rise. As yet they stop and imprison those that are your friends, some they have killed since the flight of the Lord Holland. If I should be commanded any further service here I will presently discover and secure them.” [N. VII., 64.]

SIR THOMAS HONYWOOD and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 11. At the Leaguer before Colchester.—Repeating their request that “amongst ourselves upon our own charge with the help of their estates who, we hope, have justly lost them by unjust labouring to possess other men’s we may raise such a force,” viz. a regiment of foot and another of horse and dragoons, “as whereby we may readily serve the Parliament in any such exigencies as they may be probably reduced unto and secure our own country from the like imbroilments, as that which it now wrestleth withall The sad condition of our worthy friends in Colchester . . . doth every day heighten our compassion, as indeed we were most unbowelled men, if we should not be afflicted in their suffering, besides such is the policy or rather cruelty of the enemy that they place them just under the mouth of our only advantageous battery. A bullet within these few hours notwithstanding all our care and declining our own advantage passed through the room where they are all in durance.” (See Commons’ Journals, v. 635.) Signed. [N. SIR MICHAEL LIVESEY to [the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE].

1648, July 11. Kingston.—“I appointed two of my best troops to be at Deptford and Greenwich this morning by five . . . which I am confident was done accordingly. As for the dragoons your Lordships write for, they are in Kent already. I am now marching up to the borders of Kent by the advice of the gentlemen of Surrey, leaving only two troops of horse behind me. Three carriages of ammunition I have left with the gentlemen of Surrey. . . . As for the countrymen's horses to be returned again I am confident there is not any one to be found in the whole brigade so taken save only the troop at Harborough, which had order to take such men's horses as were enemies to the State to supply the loss that troop had sustained in that service." . . . Signed. [N. VII., 67.]

ROBERT SCAWEN, THOMAS HODGES, FRANCIS ALLEIN, and WILLIAM LEMAN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 11. Bury St. Edmunds.—“In observance of the order of both Houses (see Commons' Journals, v. 619) we came to the headquarters on Tuesday last, where we understood the great necessities the army in general was in for want of pay and for monies for the carrying on their works and other emergencies, as also the great burthen . . . on the adjacent parts of Essex and Suffolk by furnishing provisions for the forces there, which by estimate amounts weekly to as much as would in money pay a month's pay to these forces." . . . We have stopt all moneys in the Receivers' hands of the adjacent counties and converted it to the present occasion, but we find very little money in the Treasurers' or Collectors' hands. We have endeavoured therefore with the Commissioners of Essex at head quarters and with those of Suffolk at Ipswich and Bury for the speedy collecting and getting in of the arrears of the nine months' assessment and of three months' of the last six months', and are now going into Norfolk to do the like. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 68.]

Colonel NATHANIEL RICH to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 12. Walmer.—“After three weeks beleaguering of Walmer Castle and many fruitless attempts both by sea and land . . . to disturb us here and relieve it, it hath pleased God to give it into our hands, and though we find in it such provision as might have enabled them within, being about 60 in number—enough to man sufficiently so compacted a place of strength—to withstand us three weeks longer, yet . . . I thought fit to hasten at present its regaining . . . by giving the besieged the enclosed conditions, the sum of which is their protection from the soldiers' violence, not intending by any thing therein contained expressly or implicitly to anticipate your justice or favour. . . . If I may presume . . . to offer anything I think the Lord Admiral's presence in the Downs with some ships may be now as safe—riding under this Castle's protection—as advantageous to discountenance any foreign influence here and hasten the redumption of the other two, possessed for the most part by seamen, who I find rather capable of complying impressions from the successful appearance of your maritime affairs than of the land.” (See Commons' Journals, v. 634.) *Seal. The HOUSE OF COMMONS.

[1648, July 12.]—Answer to the London Petition. (Printed in Commons' Journals, v. 634.) Draft. [N. XXII., 109.]

THE EARL OF WARWICK TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 14. Chatham.—A messenger from the House came last night with a warrant to fetch up many of the officers that were in the late petition and insurrection of Kent. I had examined many of them and absolved some, the evidence against them failing, but if the House has anything against them more than the evidence brought before me they must submit to further examination. As some of them, whose names are in the margin, have been of great use to me in fitting out the ships, and as their going up will be a great hindrance I have ventured to keep them till I be got out. If you will have them before, I will send them though it will much hinder the service here. The rest come up with your messenger. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 70.]

[Major-General LAMBERT] TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 14. Penrith.—“To-day I received a letter from Duke Hamilton desiring my pass for . . . Mr. George Halliburton . . . with letters to the” King and the Parliament from the Committee of the Estates of Scotland, which I accordingly gave, but perceiving he had other letters between private persons not within his instructions I ventured “in his sight to take a particular of the superscriptions of those letters which I have inclosed . . . and with it the letters themselves sealed up in one packet under his and my seal by this bearer, Lieutenant-Colonel Osborne. . . . The letters, as I perceive by the superscriptions are many of them written in ciphers, and I believe may be of concernment. Here is also a cipher with the letters which the gentleman affirms was for his own use. . . . Since my last we have continued very still at our quarters at Penrith, little action being on either side, and the enemy beyond our expectation quiet, though doubtless their numbers be much more considerable than ours. They give out that they defer attempts upon us until they receive some forces—which they do expect—out of Ireland. I do also expect some additional forces to mine here, which if they come to us, and we remain safe in the meantime, I hope we shall be in a condition to meet them in the field.” (See Commons’ Journals, v. 640, 643.) Signature torn off. [N. VII., 71.]

Colonel R[OBERT] OVERTON TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 15. Hull.—“I have lately seized 388 case of snaphance pistols and 400 pair of holsters brought down from London to Hull in Roger Robinson’s ship closely packed up in seven oil casks.” From many circumstances it appears that the master and most of his men were privy to the plot. “They do not produce any bill of lading, only the master showed me the enclosed bill signed by William Boothe of Killingham in Lincolnshire, formerly in arms for the King, who confesseth that at the request of a friend he paid 5*l.* in hand and gave his note for 5*l.* more to be paid at Hull, but denies that he knew of these arms or what the freight was, but saith that he only disbursed” the money on behalf of his friend who cannot now be found or heard of. The witnesses to the bill are Mr. Readhead and Mr. Harbottle both formerly in arms against the Parliament. “Readhead, as the Master . . . relates, should have come to receive these arms at Hull and thence conveyed them to Turnbrigge, where it was intended they should have been received by the enemy, and . . . there was in Lincolnshire 1,000 horse which would hereupon be immediately in armes for the King . . . I have fetched in Mr. Boothe, and shall secure his person until I receive further directions. . . . Readhead and Harbottle being more remote and having no horse under my command I could not conveniently pursue their quest." I ask an order of indemnity for the seizure, and that supplies of pay may be ordered for this garrison now 3,000*l.* in arrear of what is due upon several warrants charged upon the assessments of Lincolnshire and Yorkshire, as our soldiers are invited by the present levies from want of livelyhood to betake themselves to field employment. I also ask that what may appear to have been spent on repairs of this place may be paid out of the 500*l.* in the hands of the Committee of Sequestrations, and that speedy advance may be made of the 6,000*l.* ordered from the Excise. Seal. Enclosed are copies of the bill referred to, and of a declaration by Roger Robinson that it was signed by Mr. Boothe and witnessed by Mr. Readhead and Mr. Harbottle. [N. VII., 72.]

[JOHN RUSHWORTH] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 15, 12 at night. Leaguer before Colchester.—“In my last I intimated to you that wee hoped to gaine the Gatehouse, the workes about it, and church, all which the enemy had fortified very stronglie. And it pleased God this afternoone about 5 of the clocke to deliver all these places into our hands. The manner was thus: wee discharged foure peece of cannon altogether which much amuzed the enemy in the works and then discharged foure more, and immediatlie our musquetiers fell on and stormed them (?) in the gatehouse with ladders, and threw in hand granadoes. The enemy opposed very stoutlie for a while, and threw downe severall of the ladders, but att last gave backe. Some held out their handkercheefes, others fired very feircely, yet notwithstandinge our men gained the works and parte of the gatehouse, and throweing in a hand granadoe, where there was some of the enemy, stood to their armes. It happened to lighte amongst their maggazine, consisting of about four barrells of powder, and blew upp about forty of their men. It pleased God that wee had but one man hurte with that blowe. All this eveninge our men have been digginge and pullinge out the dead bodies of the enemy: findinge here and there a legg and an arme by itselfe. There were in the whole number as some of the prisoners whoe had quarter confesse, seaven score, and wee have but about sixty prisoners. Not any could escape—wee gettinge betweene them and home—soe the rest were putt to the sword, and destroyed as aforesaide. I send you he[re]w[ith] that you may see how they still persiste in their venomous disposicion to shoote such things as may bee sure to ranker and poyson the flesh. The enemy was soe enraged att this losse—haveing totally by this meanes slutt themselves upp within the walles and not haveing any parte of the suburbs—that they sett the suburbs round the towne on fire and all this present there is the saddest spectacle to bee scene that hath fallen out in this age, there beeing now burneing in a grate plaine houses above a mile in length, and with that violence as it is a wonder to behold it. By this wee can conceive that they are desperately bent and will not only distroy the suburbs but even burne the towne alsoe. Postscript.—This day my Lord Generall had another paequett boate, which came from Holland yesterday, and then the revolted shippes were there. Hee hath sent an expresse to Yarmouth to advise that towne to stand to their armes, one Johnson of Yarmouth, an Apostate, beeing newly come to the shippes, and whoe gives out hee hath made the towne sure for the King. If some members were sent doune thither it is very needful, and might bee of great use.” (A short abstract of this letter is in Rushworth, iv. 2. 1191.) Unsigned, but in Rushworth's hand. Seal torn off. [N. VII., 73.]

The EARL OF WARWICK to [the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE].

1648, July 15. Chatham.—Concerning the landing of men from the revolted ships in the Downs, and the bad supply of his fleet. (Printed in Grey, iii. Appendix, No. 77, p. 131.) Signed. [N. VII., 74.]

SIR JOHN BAMPFYLD, SIR JOHN NORTHCOTE and others to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 15. Exeter.—We have considered how our county may be put in a posture of defence, but find manifold defects, the chief being : 1. The ordnance is very defective ; 2. The great want of arms both for horse and foot ; 3. the distraction the county is in, occasioned by the diversity of rates unequally laid upon us beyond any other part of the kingdom, of which we give details. The remedies we conceive to be the speedy passing of the Grand Ordinance for the Militia, that 300 horse arms and 3,000 foot arms be speedily sent to us, that there may be but one rate for Ireland on foot at the same time, and that the Army rate being duly paid there may be some reasonable deduction for Free Quarter, and the deceitful way of Billet removed. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 75.]

ROBERT CLIVE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 15. Styth in Shropshire.—“I should spare to trouble you . . . did I not apprehend the danger of losing this county to be far greater than others conceive it to be. There hath been special care taken to make all the houses which were thought to be tenable incapable to harbour the disaffected party ; yet I much fear that if some speedy care be not taken for settlement of the Militia in this county, your friends will be enforced to seek for security in some place else. There have been orders granted long since by the Committee here for raising 1,200 foot, but I find they have been very little successful, and those who were the first that engaged for you altogether unwilling to appear ; this backwardness of theirs arising not from any disaffection to you, but from discontent that those who have been least serviceable and that appeared but lately for you are most countenanced by those in authority here, and such who first engaged themselves for the Parliament and acted cordially to the last are very little regarded . . . There have been very lately with me many godly persons both clergy and others who acquainted me that within very few days many disaffected persons have left their habitations and great numbers are enlisted round about this part of the country for the King’s service. Who the chief actors are I cannot yet learn, but I shall join my endeavours with theirs to find them out, if it be possible. There are many gentlemen of quality who have not prosecuted their compositions at Goldsmiths’ Hall, and speak great words ; if you would send a positive order for the speedy securing of them all it would much encourage your friends and may haply in a great measure prevent the enemies’ design. There are 120 horse in pay which are lately raised, these . . . have neither Captain . . . nor any other officer. This is dissatisfactory to many of the soldiers themselves, and all the well affected that I have met with, who gave me assurance, that, if the Parliament would grant a commission to some faithful and active gentleman of this county to command the horse, in all cases of necessity they would not only engage themselves but all that had relation to them for the Parliament’s service. We shall the next week endeavour to put in execution the former orders of the Committee for raising foot, which, if not speedily done, I fear the enemy will take some encouragement to rise the sooner. Here are many that daily—to encourage the Malignants—raise false intelligence of the General's defeats in Essex, and the greatest successes of the enemy in all parts." . . . Seal. [N. VII., 77.]

SIR MICHAEL LIVESEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 17.—Thanking the House for their order of the 12th instant. (See Commons' Journals, v. 633.) "I and my forces have had very hard marches and duties this fortnight, and are extreme weary, yet hope . . . to advance up to Deal and Walmer Castles before the enemy lands, who lies ready to that purpose as you may perceive by this enclosed." Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 78.]

THOMAS [LORD] FAIRFAX to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 17. Leaguer before Colchester.—Suggesting on account of the late design on Denbigh Castle and the importance of the place the necessity of raising another company of foot of 80 men and also a troop of 60 horse to be under the Governor's command. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 79.]

JOHN RUSHWORTH to SIR JOHN TREVOR.

1648, July 17.—Concerning the exchange of Mr. Ashburnham for Sir William Masham. (See Commons' Journals, v. 640.) Seal. [N. VII., 80.]

The EARL OF WARWICK to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 18. Chatham.—Stating that in pursuance of the order of June 14th (see Commons' Journals, v. 599) he and the Commissioners of the Navy had investigated and determined the charges brought against several officers as actors and abettors in the late insurrection, that by a later order these officers and some others had been sent for by the House, and that though they had waited for some days they could not obtain a hearing, and desiring on account of their poverty that, if nothing fresh was proved against them, they might be remitted to himself, and he would render to every man according to his demerit. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 81.]

Colonel MICHAEL JONES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 19. Dublin.—"Haveing formerly received Inchiquine's declaration . . . with a letter to mee invitatory to the same course by him taken, of all which you have bin particularly informed, I did after on the 28th of June send to his Lordship that letter, the copy whereof had bin first sent to you, beeing in returne to that of his accompanying his sayd declaracion. This I sent by Captaine John Parsons—a gentleman of approved fidellity to the State, and some times of some intimacye with his Lordship—of whose soe sending, together with the private instruccions given him I have certified the honour[able] the co[mmittee] of Lords and Commons at Derby House by my letter of the 28th of June last, the principall ends of all beeing, the assaying whether the Lord Inchiquine might bee drawn backe to his obedience to the parlyament, or dealt withall on condicions for resigning to the parlyament the places by him held in that province or if that might not bee, to sound the depth of his Lordship's designes as much as could bee possible.

On the 18th present, Captaine Parsons returned with his Lordship's letter to mee—heere withall enclosed—wherein may appeare how farr hee is engaged in that his unhappy undertakeing destructive—as farr as in him may bee—to the interests of England heere, which I doubt not but the Lord will yet preserve to you, notwithstanding all combinacions whatsoever to the contrary.

Therein is withall found what expectacion there is of Ormond's ariveing heere and to what purposes, which is alsoe intimated in that declaracion lately published by Owen Roe and his partye, a coppye whereof is herewithall sent you.

By the sayd Captaine Parsons, I further find that Ormond and Inchiquine are confederate as with the Irish soe with the now ryseing party in Scotland, and with some Scotts in Ulster, and that there have letters lately arrived in Mounster sent from Scotland by an expresse, which have bin comunicated by Inchiquine to the Rebels' Councell at Kilkenny.

That upon Ormond's arrivall, Inchiquine's cessacion is to end in a peace concluded with the Irish who are to yeild upp all to Ormond and hee to bee by them received on his former pretended commission as Lord Lieutenant. That it is resolved by the confederates in this cessacion and association to joyne against mee if not adhering unto them after soe many invitations on all handes from them; which now—havinge gained that I intended by dallying with them hytherto—I am resolved to put them to; purposeing within a few dayes to appeare in the feild with what forces I can make thereby to destroy as much as I may possible, the rebells' corne now comeing on—this beeing their future hope of subsistance—as I have in all this time by partyes of horse spoyled them of their cattell—more then four thousand cowes beeing within these two moneths taken from them—which was their present beeing. More then service of this kinde cannot bee heer expected, in the weake condicion I am, and yet is this of very great consequence duely considered. But I trust to bee by you in due time better enabled for further service to the more speedy ending of this warr.

To you is committed the management of this warr and God himselfe will therefore require at and by your hands the accompt of that innocent blood which hath bin heere inhumanely spilt and the cry of that destruction, burning, ravishing robbing and spoyleing the English heere is now shrill in God's care for vengeance against those cruell rebells. In the justice of which cause I have confidence even with this very inconsiderable party to appeare—if God will have it soe—against their whole powers.

This is the time for doeing the werke heere effectually, the divisions of the enemy every day more and more encreasing.

Postscript.—The necessity of the service and the preserving of your interests here hath—since the above was written—enscreed me to the securing of those of Ormond's party here whom I conceived dangerous to us on his arriving, which is daily expected. Some of them I have now sent hence by Captain Pilgrim to be delivered at Chester, and to be disposed of as to you shall be thought fitting, the names and qualities of the prisoners are herewithall sent to you." Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 82.] Enclosed:

i. LORD INCHIQUIN to Colonel MICHAEL JONES.

1648, July 15. Cork.—“I have received yours by Captain Parsons to whom I have communicated the grounds of our proceedings, wherewith I hope you will rest so well satisfied, as that you will with us contribute to establish his Majesty in his just rights, settle his authority over this kingdom, where probably we may suddenly restore the Protestant Religion to its former lustre and the laws to their force, and afford some assistance according to our oaths and professions towards the restoration of His Highness and the Parliament of England to their just rights, privileges and genuine freedom. My Lord of Ormonde is hourly expected here with great supplies of money arms and ammunition, and this army like to be paid constantly at a high rate, whereof I hope yours will make themselves capable to partake." Signed. [N. VII., 76.]

ii. List of persons secured as PRISONERS by Colonel JONES.

Sir John Gifford, Sir Maurice Eustace, Colonel Sir Francis Willoughby and six others to be sent to Chester, seven others to be prisoners in Dublin Castle, Lord Grandison, Sir Thomas Lucas, Sir Robert Byron and Major Billingsley to be secured. (See Carte, Life of Ormonde, ii. 36.) [N. XXI., 67.]

Captain ROBERT BATTEN to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 19. Holy Island.—“I have been in a besieged condition near these six weeks. The enemy hath made a garrison of Haggerston House which is within two miles of this isle, which doth hinder all things from coming in for the relief of the poor inhabitants as well as the garrison, and they daily threaten to fall in and burn and plunder the town, so that we are forced thereby to extraordinary duty, and have not moneys nor provisions for the supply and encouragement of my soldiers, neither have I received any certain intelligence from the South this month, the Cavaliers being master of all the country hereabouts. This day the Scots came into Berwick with seven regiments of foot and some troops of horse. The English Cavaliers are marched forth. My drum being there saw Colonel Brandling deliver up his command unto the Scots' Governor. There is great need of a ship or two for my assistance. The guard of Berwick hath lien open these six weeks and many vessels have gone in thither, and at present there are three riding at anchor before that bar, but what they are I know not.” . . . Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 83.]

PETER LOGAN, Mayor, and PETER MARFORD to ROBERT WALLOP.

1648, July 19. Winchester.—Concerning the probable danger to Southampton, if the revolted ships in the Downs carry out their plan of attacking the Isle of Wight and the places adjacent, especially since the declaration of the seamen at Portsmouth, and desiring that some speedy course be taken for the safety of the town. (See Commons' Journals, v. 647, 650.) Signed. [N. VII., 84.]

WILLIAM TATTNELL, ABRAHAM MELLO and JOHN DANIELL to Colonel WILLIAM WILLOUGHBY.

1648, July 20. Tilbury Fort. — Desiring a supply, as they had neither victuals or money and no fortifications. Though the guns are very good, there is but small store of ammunition and few men to man them, many being dismounted for want of carriages, and many other necessary things belonging to them being wanting. “We have 38 trusty and stout men, but the place is sickly and for want of fitting lodging some of them have gotten the ague already. . . . Seeing no relief of viatials and money come unto them . . . they will be gone if a sudden order be not taken to supply them and accommodation be made for their lodging" . . . A postscript by Mello alone desires repayment of 4*l.* odd disbursed by him for necessaries for the soldiers. (See Commons' Journals, v. 649.) Signed. [N. VII., 85.]

Major-General LAMBERT to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 20. Barnard Castle.—“On Friday night last presently after the sending away of Mr. Halliburton from Penrith the enemy with his whole body marched up to us, and pitched that night within a mile or two of Penrith, where we quartered; and taking into consideration our small numbers compared with theirs, the consequence to these parts and the whole kingdom, if we had been foiled by them, and not knowing the pleasure of the Parliament upon the coming of the Scotch army into this kingdom, we resolved to retreat towards Appleby and further as occasion should be. On Monday morning they followed with their whole body to Appleby . . . and after some skirmish with them about maintaining of the pass against them there, which was gallantly performed by our foot, the loss of which dispute fell most on the enemies' part, of whom were slain about 40, divers wounded, some taken prisoners and 50 arms, our loss being Colonel Harrison wounded upon the first charge with our horse guard, Captain Cromwell's lieutenant slain, Lieutenant Sheeres taken prisoner and three or four foot soldiers wounded, we drew off the next morning and came to Kirby Stephen without any disturbance of the enemy and so we marched that night to Bowes, and from thence next day to Barnard Castle, our horse and men being very much tired and worn out with continual duty, hard marches, and bad weather, so that the soldiers are very much disenabled, and doubtless without some speedy addition of forces, supply of money, recruits of horse, arms and others necessaries . . . the service of the Parliament is like to suffer very much by endangering the loss of all these Northern parts and permitting the enemy to recruit and grow greater every day, which with the small number of forces in these parts could not possibly be prevented.” . . . (See Commons' Journals, v. 646.) Seal. [N. VII. 86.]

Colonel THOMAS BETTESWORTH to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, July 21. Portsmouth. — Complaining that Mr. Cobb, the Receiver General of the County, does not pay the gunners and soldiers of the garrison, particulars of which will be given by the bearer Captain Joyce, and desiring that they will send their commands to the said Mr. Cobb and to Mr. Faulkenbridge of the Revenue office. (See Commons' Journals, v. 647.) Seal. [N. VII., 87.]

The COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, July 21.—Report. (The purport of part appears from the votes thereon printed in Commons' Journals, v. 646, the rest is that the Committee of Militia of Westminster have desired that the fair at St. James' be put off for this year, lest under colour thereof there be a meeting of many that may prove dangerous to the Parliament.) [N. XV., 94.]

SIR HENRY CHOLMELEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 22.— . . . “Whilst I was attending the enemy towards Nottinghamshire they drew out 200 of their foot from Pomfract and possessed themselves of Thornhill Hall, the late house of Sir William Saville, where they began to fortify, which being of itself defended with a moat was soon made strong enough to be maintained till cannon should be brought against it. Upon Sunday morning last my own regiment of horse and Colonel Fairfax's regiment of foot march[ed] up close to the house and presently possessed themselves of some out-houses which the enemy endeavoured to maintain. The dispute was hot for about an hour, and in that we had eight or ten men slain and twenty wounded, the enemy had their share of loss likewise. That night and the next day we endeavoured to draw away the water from the moat, and by Tuesday morning it was well nigh dried. I then sent a trumpet with some articles to them, but they refused them and desired a treaty, upon which it was at the last concluded that they should march away, leaving all their arms and ammunition bag and baggage behind them, only three horses and three swords being allowed to three of their officers. After the articles were signed the enemy by accident fired their powder, which killed five of their men, and blew up part of the house, which afterwards took fire, and burnt the house down to the ground. I marched the next day with the two regiments I had there to Wakefield, where they now lie to keep the enemy in on that side, and Sir Edward Rhoades' regiment of horse and 500 foot are at Ferribridge to attend the enemy's motion there. They are about 200 horse and above 1,000 foot in Pomfract and the Newhall. The regiments of foot commanded by Colonel Wasteil and Colonel Lassells are marched up towards Colonel Lambert, together with a troop of my regiment and another of Sir Edward Rhoades' regiment, and Colonel Bethell hath orders to march up with his regiment of horse likewise." Scal. [N. VII., 88.]

The EARL OF WARWICK to the COMMITTEE OF LORDS AND COMMONS FOR THE NAVY AND CUSTOMS.

1648, July 22. Aboard the St. George in Sea Road.—“I have received notice of some distempers amongst the seamen at Portsmouth, particularly of those in the Guarland and the John. Upon the first intimation whereof—being on Tuesday last—I writt to the rere-admiral to discharge by ticketts such of the said two ships' companyes as were ill affected, and the rest—which seeme very fewe—to place aboard the other ships. Nowe I heare—that being offered—they are resolved not to stir out of their ships, till they receive their pay. I have therefore, upon consultacion this day had with a counsell of warr, resolved it to bee most convenient that they bee both paid off and discharged at Portsmouth, and that such of them as the captaines and officers shall approve of as well affected, bee invited to enter themselves aboard some of the other ships. I doe therefore recomend it to your Lordships, that a speedy provision of money may bee made for their pay accordingly, their continuing under an expectation of it—considering their resolution not to oppose the revolted ships—tending meerly to contract further charge, though after the receiving it, I feare there wilbee noe absolute security against their actings to the parlyamentes prejudice nor against the evill influences that their example may have upon the other ships. I have signified to the Comissioners of the Navy my recomending of this to your Lordships, that they may attend and put in execution what you shall thereupon direct. Wee have alsoe this day resolved—as an expedient to the quicker manning of the flete—to sayle with the St. George as high as Tilbury Hope, and to place the Adventure and Nicodemus neere my selfe, the Unicorne in the Medway betwixt the Hope and Gravesend, the Fellowship as high as Greenhithe, the Hector at Northfleete, and the Greyhound at Purfleete, for avoiding of some inconveniences which may otherwise present themselves; the ships, one with another, being not halfe mannd, the Adventure and Nicodemus excepted." Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 89.]

JOHN COLLINGWOOD to Mr. SCOTT.

1648, July 24.—“This last week I heard of a petition . . . set on foot by the reduced soldiery about London . . . to the Houses of Parliament, wherein they set forth the cause of their first engagement, which was to reduce the enemies of the Commonwealth that the peace thereof might be settled; the first being accomplished the second is still neglected, and they also left unsatisfied therein or in point of arrears, wherefore they have often petitioned, and in their attendance thereon many have perished for want; now their desires are that the Kingdom may be settled, and to that end that his Majesty may come with freedom and safety to London to treat according to the just desires of the City of London that so religion may be settled, the taxes taken off from the people, and general other desires looking that way, and then they will readily engage with the Houses again . . . and so they go to desire to have their accounts audited and some present satisfaction . . . of their arrears and security for the rest. They further say that their patience are tired, and therefore cannot defer longer the want of satisfaction herein, that is to say, to have the King settled in his just rights with religion and the liberties of the people, which if not accordingly done they shall be constrained to use all just means to accomplish.” I replied that I misliked the petition as it mentioned anything besides arrears, had it been limited to them, I and divers others would have joined. “They made mention to me of something they intended to add, as the present engagement now began again, and something concerning the Scots, and this they told me, they were advised to do by some of their friends in the House, which if your members be of that mind I fear some desperate design.” . . . (See Commons' Journals, v. 646.) [N. VII., 90.]

Colonel R[OBERT] OVERTON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 27. Hull.—Informing the House of the revolt of Scarborough, of which he had sent notice to Lord Fairfax, the Army in the North, Newcastle, Nottingham, Lincoln, Boston, &c., and desiring that ships might be sent for the preservation of this town now in great distress for want of pay and endangered by the jealousies fomented by the agents of the disaffected party. Seal. Enclosed:

Captain ROBERT WITTIE to Colonel OVERTON.

1648, July 27. Beverley.—“This morning I came from Scarborough, where I find the affairs of that garrison very sad. Being brought before the Governor on Tuesday night at my first coming to town, he was pleased to utter many expressions of discontent against the Parliament and General in their more than ordinary slighting of him. He told me he had received the day before a letter from the Prince. What the purport thereof is doth too well appear by his declaring this day for the King, and his hanging out a red flag over the walls, which I am informed he had not usually done before. The Prince is expected daily to land in that harbour. Some officers there told me we should within a very few days hear of some men-of-war at Humber mouth . . . Postscript.—He hath expected Colonel Fairfax to come to him these two or three days, but he was not come this morning when I took horse." [N. VII., 91.]

SIR WILLIAM STRICKLAND to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 28. Hull.—“I am right sorry nowe to accompany the rest of Job’s messengers that bringe the newes of the trecherous and unworthy betraying of Scarborough Castle. I cannot acquaint you with many perticulers for my house being within twelve miles it was conceived in the countrie that their first action would be my surprisall, and therefore some well affected persons that gave me notice thereof yesterday late in the afternoone, perswaded me being sicke and having kept my chamber, immediately to remove and not to adventure the slowe pace of a coache with my wife and children, but in that weeke posture to come to Hull without any delaye, where I arrived att seaven att night. I heare the governour reported yesterday morning that he had received a letter from the Prince, then in Yarmoth roades. Generall rumours are this daye that the Prince is there, but that not certainly knowne. My designe is to adde to the sence of the House the dangerous consequence of this losse. The enimie had noe hold att sea untill nowe, this will give them all manner of accomodacion, and incorage their great partie here, to declare themselves and to leave you nothinge, and being owners of the North—as formerly—they will not dispaire of the South. If some present and vigorous course be used, your interest—by God’s blessing—may yet bee regained. If you looke upon us and direct us there wilbe some life remaininge. Let me take the boldnesse to tell you that playing after games had lost you heretofore, if by miracles you had not bin preserved. We subsist by hopinge that Colchester is yours, which if soe, conceive it necessary to looke after Scarborough. Although with weak health, my poore desires and indeavours have not bin omitted in getting up your horse forces here, which are nowe in a convenient readinesse.” Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 92.]

SIR ANTHONY WELDON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 28.—Acknowledging the votes of the 8th instant, and desiring power to be given to such persons as Parliament may appoint for fining or compounding with persons sequestered or sequestrable within those votes. (The orders made hereon are in Commons’ Journals, v. 652.) Signed. [N. VII., 94.]

SIR JOHN BOURCHIER and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 28. York.—“To all our former distractions we have this day the certain and sad report of the revolt of the Governor of Scarborough declared in the face of the town by beat of drum. By this we expect no other than that the design of the enemy is ripe for the landing of the Prince’s forces there or thereabouts, and the danger of the Parliament’s forces in the North by being between a body that may be landed there on the one side and the Scots on the other side, and so the hazard of these parts at least your wisdoms will easily apprehend. We are now necessitated to employ the forces this way that we intended for the North. And how to keep any of our force together for want of moneys we are utterly to seek. The care we perceive the Parliament hath taken that way lately we must humbly say we cannot see wee are like to receive any fruit of in any seasonable time. We humbly beg” for a speedy supply of horsemen and money, that Sir Henry Choimeley’s request for power of Martial Law may be granted, that ships may be sent down to secure the coast of Scarborough and Bridlington, and for 200 barrels of powder with match and bullet proportionable. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 95.]

Colonel HENRY HERBERT to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, July 28. Bergenenny.—“I was sent by the House into Wales where I have served them to my best ability in all faithfulness, having spent a great part of my time with Lieutenant-General Cromwell, and on Tuesday (25th) parted from him not far from Gloucester. I am now returned to Monmouthshire, where suddenly Colonel Horton and the gentry are to meet to put Wales into the best posture we can for the service of the Parliament, and truly I shall not want work, which I hope will excuse my attendance” at the call of the House for the 7th of next month. Seal. [N. Colonel MICHAEL JONES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, August 4. Dublin.—“By a party of 1,650 foot and 750 horse sent out the 28th past with Sir Henry Tichborne and commanded by Colonel Moncke, who was to meet them with 100 horse and 200 foot we have . . . possessed ourselves in the County of Meath of the Castle of Raffin, the two strong forts of Nobber and Ardlonan—also Cruse's fort,—and of Lagan water Castle standing on a considerable pass. There is also taken the strong castle of Ballehoe, our men entering a breach made with above 40 great shot, and putting to the sword all therein found. Colonel Moncke is called off from us by some occasions requiring his presence at home, but our party is proceeding in the work for clearing that country of the enemies' garrisons and for thereby settling our quarters and enlarging them. The noise of Preston's advancing with 4,000 men—he being within 20 miles of our quarters—occasioned my not advancing with that party now abroad, that with the rest of the army I might attend the enemies' motions if breaking in upon us. The further purging also of the army from Malignants . . . required necessarily my presence here for finishing that work, and for preventing any evil thereupon ensuing . . . But all things settled I shall . . . with the whole army fall into the enemies' quarters and shall then perfect—what by a party only I am not but leading unto—the destroying the rebels' corn, as far as I may possibly do. Preston is with his army taking in those places Owen Roe held hereabouts, and is at present besieging the town of Athy, part of which he hath already taken, and is with four guns battering the principal hold in it. Clanrickard and Taaffe joined with some horse and foot of Inchiquin's have taken the Castle of Athlone by them besieged and held by Captain Gawley for Owen Roe, who for 500*l.* and the command of a troop of horse hath surrendered the place, it being delivered into the Lord Dillon of Costello's possession." I desire reinforcements, and that the money designed may be sent us with all convenient speed, there not being 100*l.* in the Treasury. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 101.]

SIR MICHAEL LIVESEY TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, August 10. Sandwich Down from my rendezvous.—"This morning Captain Batten came to the Prince with his ships; in them many land soldiers. They landed them this morning between Sandown Castle and my quarters at Sandwich where my outguard of horse and foot was in number 120, which beat them, took and killed 20 private soldiers and one quarter-master with the loss of one foot and one trooper of mine, who carried the cornet. I believe we shall be in action every day, by reason the ships are in such want of provisions. . . . Captain Greene, whom the Prince put so much trust and confidence in is a recusant, and hath been these five years a pirate at sea, and not any one hath done more mischief to your service than he hath." Seal. [N. Colonel JAMES HEANE, Governor, to the COMMITTEE AT DERBY HOUSE.

1648, September 30. Weymouth.—Having at last got an addition of two companies I must disband them or see them perish for want of bread. "How impossible it is to keep these garrisons without them needs no demonstration. . . . The seas are pestered with Irish men of war . . . no less than 30 in a fleet, the Isle of Portland but this very week beset by some of them, and had I not had men ready there must needs have been taken. Had the enemy no possibility of proceeding a foot further, that Island is so convenient a receptacle for men of their profession that it will be a miracle if any ship pass safely either East or Westward." I therefore desire that these men be constantly paid, and 8 or 9 guns sent to Portland. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 45.) [N. VII., 108.]

Colonel MICHAEL JONES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1648, October 4. Dublin.—"I am lately returned from the enemies' quarters, where I have taken in their two main strengths in these parts, the strong fort of Ballysonan and the Island of Allan with some other considerable pieces, whereby our quarters are both enlarged and secured. My next work is to destroy all belonging to the enemy without us, which until now could not be done, neither is the time yet fully serving thereunto, most of their corn—by reason of the weather—not being yet made up, and not till then to be destroyed. In the spoil to be here necessarily made of corn will be taken from us all means of subsistence other than what must be thence or elsewhere acquired, which would be of timely consideration, that thereby no obstruction be to the service, and that the contracts to be made for us may be to the State's best advantage. As for money there hath not been so much as one penny in the Treasury for one whole month past." . . . The army is also short of men and horses. Signed. Seal. [N. VII., 110.]

1. That an Act be passed for sale of the Rebels' possessions in the cities and towns of Dublin, Cork, Kinsale, Youghall and Drogheda according to the intent of the Ordinances of January 15th, 1647[-8] and June 5th, 1648.

2. That an Act be passed for the attainder and forfeiture of the Rebels, and also of all the hereditaments held by any of them by intrusion on any of his Majesty's possessions formerly reputed their inheritance.

3. That it be enacted that the loyal Protestant subjects shall hold and enjoy all the lands and hereditaments in Connaught, Clare, Limerick, and Tipperary, whereof they or those from whom they claim received the rents and profits before the Rebellion for their former estates therein.

4. That it be enacted that after disposition of the 2,500,000 acres intended for the Adventurers all the residue of the lands forfeited by the Rebels or held by them by intrusion as aforesaid be disposed of for the further prosecution of the war there, for advancing the revenues of the Crown, &c.

5. That by Act of Parliament the same provisions be made against Jesuits, priests, friars, Papists and Popish Recusants in Ireland as are or shall be in England and all the laws made and to be made in England concerning such persons and their children be made of force in Ireland; And that all Papists and Popish Recusants be made incapable of being magistrates, officers or Commissioners in Ireland, and also of any practice in the Law, Common or Civil, either in public or private, or to sit as members in either House of Parliament in Ireland, or to have any military employment in that Kingdom.

6. That the Act intended for the due observation of the Lord's Day be made of force in Ireland.

7. 8. That there may be remitted to the loyal Protestant subjects of Ireland all rents &c. due to the Crown from Michaelmas 1641 till the Rebels be subdued and all subsidies due by virtue of any Act of Parliament in Ireland since the ninth year of his Majesty's reign except such as have actually been paid.

9. That the tenures and rents of all lands and hereditaments in the five escheated counties of Ulster be reduced to what they were in the beginning of the late Earl of Strafford's government, and yet then the remaining rents will be above double the rates intended by the Act for the Adventurers to be laid on lands in Ulster.

10. That the loyal Protestant subjects shall have and enjoy the lands and hereditaments held of them by the Rebels by lease, which leases will be now forfeited. [N. XXI., 80.]

The Scots' army being then routed and Lieutenant-General Cromwell on his march northwards a little before Captain Batten sent his wife to Newcastle for relief, saying, if her husband had not a speedy supply he might be forced to deliver it up. Whereupon the Governor sent to Major Mayer to march into Northumberland with all possible speed, who accordingly marched to the Island, took and beat off the enemies' guards, and sent into the Island provision for the garrison for six months. When the Major came into the Island he found at least 200 sheep pasturing, a great warren full of rabbits and worth at least 100*l.*, and the cobbles at sea bringing in great store of fish, besides that Major Sandersen not above two months before sent in provision for at least six months. The Information of JOHN PINE of Weymouth.

Same date.—On Saturday last he came out of Youghal, in company with the Mary Constant. It was reported that a peace was proclaimed in Waterford on the 27th of January between the English and Irish, the heads of whom are Ormonde and Inchiquin for the English and Antrim, Taaffe and Preston for the Irish. He hath heard that Inchiquin hath between 3,000 and 4,000 horse and foot. He knoweth that the Irish have forty frigates at least and two new ones are on the stocks at Wexford that are 100 foot by the keel almost. Prince Maurice was at Cork the last week, and Sir Pearce Smyth, the Governor of Youghal, told him that between Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice they had 28 sail of shipping. Captain Penn hath been in fight with the Mary Antrim and another frigate, and lost his mizenmast and boltsprit, but after made the Mary Antrim fly under Scilly, having killed eleven of her men. The cellars and storehouses at Waterford are full of Englishmen's goods, and the Irish there come and trade for them familiarly. The Irish forces at sea are most Dunkirkers, Fleming and English, and with them their frigates and men of war are most manned for commanders and seamen. They have at least 28 sail now at sea. A ship under the command of Captain Darsy is gone over into Holland to fetch the Prince over into Ireland. Those Irish men of war lie constantly so in the throat of the Channel between Scilly and the Land's End that no ship can pass them in or out unless in the night or in a dusky dark time. A Wexford man of war lately took a ship of 500 tons of corn that was coming up to this port of Bristol. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 133.) Signed and Attested. [N. XXI., 82.]

Mr. SAXBY's account touching the securing of the SCOTCH COMMISSIONERS.

[1648-9, February 28.]—On Monday [the 26th] about 3 o'clock the House gave Colonel Harrison the order, who desired Mr. Saxby to go with him. They went to their lodging and found they had gone two or three days ago to another house, and on inquiry there that they had gone to Gravesend on their way to Scotland. Mr. Saxby then went to Gravesend, and finding a Scotch vessel there ordered a Parliament frigate to attend her motion. Then he went in a boat and informed the master of the Scotch vessel that there was an order to stay some persons aboard his ship, but none should receive prejudice. He then took boat and in another boat sent the captain of the fort with eight musketeers with directions not to stir. Going on board he met Sir John Cheisly and inquired for Lord Lothian, to whom he showed the order, who having read it said he was his servant to wait upon him, but desired to stay aboard the ship that night. Mr. Saxby offered them to go anywhere on shore in respect of the coldness of the night or to the fort. Lord Lothian desired a copy of the order, and said they were public persons, and what was done to them was done to others, to which Mr. Saxby said he would not give an answer, and then they went on shore, and he waited on them to their lodging and there secured them. He came hither yesterday, but the House not sitting he resorted thither last night and stayed there till 11 o'clock. He moved them if they liked to take any house in the town it should be prepared for them, which they kindly accepted. (Then follows the Order for payment of Mr. Saxby's charges which is printed in Commons' Journals, vi. 152.) [N. XX., 45.]

Declaration of the PARLIAMENT concerning the maintenance of MINISTERS and CHURCH GOVERNMENT.

1649, August 6 and 7.—After a preamble stating that insinuations have been made that Parliament has laid aside all care for religion, they declare that it is their real intentions and shall be their constant endeavours to advance religion in its purity and to promote the sincere and powerful preaching and spreading of the “Gospel” through the Commonwealth of England and Ireland and the dominions thereof, and they will give due encouragement and protection to all persons who shall conscientiously serve and worship God in the purity of his ordinances, and shall live peaceably and submissively under the present Government; That they will with all convenient speed make new laws, where need requires, and effectually provide for the due execution of the laws now in force for the suppression of popery, superstition, idolatry, prelacy, atheism and all manner of profaneness; That as they have reserved for sale—towards the augmentation of small livings and the advancement of the ministry and learning—all impropriations belonging to the late King, Queen, or Prince, to Bishops, Deans, and Chapters, which are of great yearly value, and many of those belonging to Delinquents, for which the Parliament have allowed out of the fines of such Delinquents who have compounded above 100,000*l.* and a further great sum out of the fines of others who have not yet compounded, and also have by Act lately settled 20,000*l.* per annum out of the public Revenue for these purposes, and they are resolved also to reserve for the same purposes such impropriations as belong to all Papists in arms and to those Delinquents whose estates are or shall be confiscated and such other impropriations as shall fall within their power to dispose: So they declare and promise that, when they shall change the present maintenance by tithes into some other way, yet they will first take care that no alteration shall be made therein until a certain and plentiful livelihood and maintenance—though perhaps to be more equally distributed—be visibly provided and firmly settled for maintaining such public ministry. (Then follow two clauses, the first concerning payment of tithes is printed in Commons' Journals, vi. 275, and with these preceding words “And therefore until the Parliament shall have liberty to take the same into consideration which within a short time they are resolved to do,” was omitted by order on August 6th, the second, establishing a Presbyterian form of government and public worship according to the Directory, was omitted by order on August 7th): Provided that all persons, who—upon conscientious grounds—cannot join in such public form of worship and Church government shall have freedom to worship and serve God in such other way as is warranted by the Scriptures, such persons walking holily, religiously and peaceably in their conversations; Provided also that this privilege shall not extend to the toleration of the Popish religion, superstition, idolatry, prelacy, atheism, or the use of the late service book, commonly called the Book of Common Prayer in any place whatsoever within this Commonwealth. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 275.) Draft with numerous amendments. [N. XXII., 58.]

SIR CHARLES COOTE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1649[-50], January 21. Belfast.—“Since my last note by Colonel St. George I have been in the Laggan beyond Londonderry where I found my brother Colonel Richard Coote besieging of Castle Doe, the only seaport which was in the enemy's hands in this province of Ulster, which we had surrendered to us. My Lord Lieutenant having dispersed the forces of the enemy in the West a great part of them are falling down into this country to take up their winter quarters—if they may—which occasioned my return into these parts." The men under my command are destitute of clothes, shoes and stockings, and have no provisions except what they get by quartering on the inhabitants. A great part of them are sick of the purple and other diseases, and some die every day. The Lord Lieutenant is so far from us, being in Munster, that we cannot expect any relief from him. I sent Colonel Venables to him about six weeks ago who took ship from Dublin but was driven back. If Parliament does not speedily supply us with necessaries the good success God has granted us will be lost. If money be sent us we can get provisions from other places with less charge and delay than if they were sent by long sea. Signed. Seal. [N. VIII., 2.]

Admiral ROBERT BLAKE to the KING OF PORTUGAL.

1649[-50], March 10[-20]. From his Flagship.—As soon my fleet arrived in Cascaes Bay, hearing that Rupert and his fleet had not yet sailed I caused the letter from the Parliament to your Majesty to be immediately placed in your hands. Since your Majesty has been thereby acquainted with the object of this expedition and also apprised of their sincere friendship towards you I could not doubt that we shall find your Majesty favourably disposed to our undertaking, since there is nothing in our instructions and plans but what relates to the common advantage of nations, which is disregarded, unless pains are taken to exterminate pirates, that most nefarious tribe, the enemies of the world. Since the brothers Rupert and Maurice are an important part of them, who have now for several years been carrying on piracy with the ships of the English Commonwealth which were carried off by a treacherous revolt, and with some others they have captured, to the great damage of many, but to the greatest of our own countrymen, who cannot but deem it the work of some special Providence that they have been detained in your harbour till the arrival of our fleet? Your Majesty will, I hope, attribute it to our sense of duty and just feelings of revenge should any hostile attempt be made upon them while they are in harbour and it is impossible to make it otherwise: For that is certainly both allowed by the law of nations and requisite for our interests, and will be, as I hope, of no small advantage to your kingdom and people. I therefore trust that your Majesty will readily grant that we may freely use your port and will interpose no obstacle to so honourable an enterprise should an opportunity occur. I beg your Majesty to feel certain that we shall never do anything in the smallest degree inconsistent with the friendship between the two nations or which might give just ground of offence to your Majesty. I again earnestly entreat your Majesty to regard us in this light, and ask you to give a favourable hearing to the lieutenant of my flagship and to allow him soon to return to his duties. In Latin. Copy. [N. XVII., 91.]

WALTER STRICKLAND to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1649-50, March 10-20. The Hague.—“The States of Holland took into consideration the things proposed by the Commissioner Snaep about his coming . . . to reside at London to transact the affairs of Holland with the Commonwealth . . . and being willing to give him some encouragement to counterbalance the apprehensions he might have from the great ones who might endeavour to take him off they have given him more than they formerly allowed him . . .” with “leave once every year for some short time to come over to order his affairs here and to take order for sending over himself and his necessaries without any charge to him. This was done yesterday, so I believe he will shortly prepare for his journey and will bring such credentials as will be necessary in respect of acknowledging the Commonwealth. This seems to be no good augure to the Pretender’s now coming hither, his best friends having omitted no endeavours to have carried it otherwise. I hope your Honours will allow him all the advantages of a public Minister . . ., and by giving him such audience and reception as may in some measure answer the like the States of Holland give me to the great regret of your enemies, I doubt not but such use may be made of this as may cut off the hopes of your greatest and most considerable enemies.” (See Commons’ Journals, vi. 384.) Extract. [N. XVIII., 141.]

Articles of agreement between JOHN MENDEZ DE VASCONCELLOS on the part of the KING OF PORTUGAL and CHARLES VANE on the part of Admiral BLAKE.

3. In the last case the said Admiral undertakes that he will neither commit nor allow any act of hostility either by sea or land against the English ships which are not on his side or their soldiers or sailors without his Majesty’s permission in writing unless in self defence.

4. On the return of fair weather the said Admiral undertakes to return with his whole fleet outside the Castles of St. Julian and “Capitis Sani.”

5. The said Admiral undertakes that while the fleet on account of stress of weather is at de Oeiras or nearer or further out to keep his men on board, forbidding them to land except a few to procure necessaries.

6. Other matters are reserved for further negotiation.

A COUNCIL OF WAR.

1649[-50], March 23. On board the George in Weyres Bay.—Whereas the King of Portugal proposes that for a speedy accommodation between him and the Parliament’s fleet in reference to Prince Rupert’s fleet and for the removing of all jealousies some person of quality should be sent on shore to treat with such as he shall send, appointing Captain Robert Moulton, Vice-Admiral of England, for the purpose and empowering him to treat according to the following instructions:—

You are acquaint the King or his Ministers that this fleet was and is for the reducing or destroying of the revolted fleet now in this harbour, and there being no other way to attain that end but by the consent of his Majesty or by force you are insist on these particulars:—

1. You are to demand a restitution of all the ships now under Prince Rupert's command, and if that shall be denied;
2. You are to propose that liberty may be given unto the fleet here to seize on them by force of arms wheresoever we shall find them, and if that also be refused;
3. You are then to propose that his Majesty will within some short time give a positive command to both fleets to depart this harbour at one and the same time, and in case Prince Rupert and his fleet shall not conform themselves to the order at the time appointed then his Majesty will be pleased not to afford his fleet any longer protection, but to give this fleet liberty to seize on his ships by force of arms as opportunity shall be offered.

In case the King will not give his assent to any of the fore-said propositions which you are to insist upon with all instance and importunity as being just and reasonable;

4. You are to desire in the name of the Commonwealth—being in amity and league with this kingdom—the freedom and privilege of the harbour, and to ride where we shall find most safety for our ships and conveniency for obtaining the ends which we are employed about and whereof a most strict account will be required at our hands, we engaging ourselves upon the grant thereof not to do any act of hostility upon Rupert's fleet or any of them, while we are in this port, except they provoke us, or his Majesty shall give his assent.
5. You are to insist upon the aforesaid instructions to the best advantage of the Commonwealth the managing whereof we leave to your discretion in regard to some circumstances of time and place, provided that you recede not from their tenor and substance. You are also to give the best assurance to his Majesty that whatsoever scandalous reports are spread abroad concerning the design of this fleet there is no other intention of it but the reducing or destroying of the said revolted fleet and no evil purpose to his Majesty kingdom or people. Copy. [N. XVII., 92.]

ANTHONY ASCHAM to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1650, April 3. New Style. Puerta Santa Maria.—“Nothing new having hapned since my landing, but my health and recoverie from a desperate feavour, I have the lesse worthy of your present advertisement. The $\frac{1}{2}$ of March, I landed in this place, as a necessary passage to San Lucar, where I intended my stand, till I should have answer from the King to your first letter, for my safe and honorable approach to him, if he please to admitt of it. But the Duke of Medina Celi governour both of San Lucar and of this towne, before I could cleare my things, sent his secretary and his coach to welcome me on shoare. I desired to kisse his handes in this my passage to San Lucar—where lodgeings were prepared for me—and to acknowledge his civilities to me in the first place which his secretary promised should be instantly done. But first he carryed me to a captaine's house in the towne where I by the Duke's order am lodged till he heare first from Court whether the King will admitt letters from the parliament or noe, etc. The Duke upon that ground desired to be excused from any visitt from me, till he knew what order the King would give about me, that he conceived the King might be surpris'd at the newes of my arrivall, presuming he had received nothing from the parliament of their intents of addressing themselves to his Majesty in such a publique way. Otherwise his Majestie would have sent orders to the sea coastes about the reception and security of my person. Wherefore he absolutely declared that he could not yet permitt me to send any advise or letter of the parliament's, or any servant of mine to the Court, till his Majesty had first given answer to that expresse which he was immediatly dispatching to him, and to which he should have answer in eight dayes. Being under soe strict a hand, I could not send the gentleman of my owne which I intended; but if by Monday—which is the eighth day—I have not my liberty, I hope to find some other sure hand for the dispatch and delivery of the letter which the Duke shall never know of till it be too late for him to hinder itt." *Signed. Admiral ROBERT BLAKE to [CHARLES VANE].

1650, March 29. On board the George.—"I received yours . . . last night. It is now evident enough that the King intends to do what he can in favour of Prince Rupert. And I take that message sent you as a prelude of some farther declaration against us when opportunity shall serve, for it being known to him that another fleet of English ships is prepared—as Rupert in his declaration saith—to join with this and there being no likelihood at all in the world of any English men of war to come into this harbour to his assistance, but of the French daily expected and rumoured among them what other construction can be made of that message but that his purpose is to contribute what he can to the increase of Rupert's strength and to the lessening of ours? And therefore my desire" and that of the Council of War is "that you would plainly speak to the King or to those which shall be sent from him, and to press them to give a clear and positive and universal answer to our propositions and to let them know that we should take it far better at his hand that he did openly declare for Prince Rupert against us than by such indirect policies to undermine us, and by uncertain and equivocal pretences of amity to entertain us and to lead us along by the nose any longer with an opinion of his neutrality, when as we may clearly perceive by that order given to his forts the contrary is intended." Copy. [N. XVII., 94.]

CHARLES VANE to [WILLIAM LENTHALL].

1650, April 3. Lisbon.—"Being sent by the Council of State to the King of Portugal with such instructions as they were pleased to charge me with I have held it my duty to give the Parliament an account of my safe arrival at Lisbon and my reception there by that King, who upon our advance with the fleet into the River of Lisbon was pleased to give order for my landing, and accordingly sent a Lieutenant-General with a coach with six horses to bring me to town where I have been these seven or eight days, and Friday last had my audience from the King, who, after general acknowledgements of the Parliament's kindness and expressions of his desire to maintain friendship with the state of England, for those other heads in my charge which I had represented unto him, he was pleased to refer me to his secretary to give them in writing. Their carriage hitherto is pretty fair, and they seem to grow weary of Prince Rupert's fleet. I have informed the Council of State of all particulars, and therefore shall trouble you no further, but to my power shall endeavour in these transactions to manifest my cordial affection to the Commonwealth of England and to yourself." Colonel WILLIAM RYVES to [OLIVER CROMWELL], Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

1650, June 9. Cork.—Have sent to Nelson his commission as Lieutenant-Colonel of my regiment, who beyond my expectation gratefully accepts the same.

I desire your Excellency to hasten over Captain Nicholls with his company or else to send me conditions with commission for my Captain-Lieutenant John Payne to fetch me a new Company in his stead. "My Lord Deputy hearing an alarm of the enemy's being together in Connaught ready to advance hath sent for my Lord of Broghill to draw back out of Kerry, who . . . was likely to finish his work there by this day. Ormonde and Inchiquin were on Thursday night last with about 4,000 men at Ennis . . . as intending to advance into Munster as is thought. By which appears their French voyage is not yet intended, unless Montrose's defeat hasten it. My Lord Deputy is about Catherlough, Duncannon, and Waterford with the army at present, from whence there is no news only that all is well . . . and in a prosperous way. The Tory party in the West since the hanging of the titular Bishop of Ross hath lost their courage and by the Lord of Broghill's march is dissolved." [N. VIII., 11.]

Lieutenant-Colonel JOHN NELSONN to [OLIVER CROMWELL] Lord
Lieutenant of Ireland.

1650, June 9. Cork.—“My Lord of Bro[g]hill according to your Excellency’s commands after the surrender of Kilmallock—which place my Lord Deputy committed to my care—advanced to Kilborlane Castle which I was before with 200 men and upon articles to surrender which was concluded upon his Lordship’s appearing. The next day he advanced for Kerry and the Lord of Hosts hath been with him as your Excellency may perceive by the enclosed. My Lord Deputy being now before Carlow hath thought it conveyment to recall my Lord of Bro[g]hill that there may be a conjunction of his party and the army, only leaving 6 companies of foot and a troop of horse with me in Kilmallock and 5 troops of horse and 3 of dragoons with Colonel Ingoldsby in the County of Limerick. The enemy are endeavouring to embody and Ormonde and Inchiquin were this week and [at] Limerick and very active endeavouring to garrison that place which as yet is not effected. The sickness which 30 men in a night died of before I came to Kilmallock the Lord hath so mercifully appeased for us that there hath not died 10 this 10 days, which manifesteth Him to be a wonderworking God in garrison and field. We may stand still and see everywhere the salvation of God. My Lord, it shall ever be my earnest desires at the throne of Grace that as you are honoured you may be humbled and every way fitted to be the Lord’s instrument to the end for His own glory, that His love may be shed abroad in your heart making you all glorious within.”

Enclosed:

LORD BROGHILL to Lieutenant-Colonel NELSONN.

[1650], June 4. On our march to Castlemaine.—“We had by the blessing of the Lord brought our affairs in this county to very hopeful progress and had, I make no doubt, to a good issue, if you know what had not been sent to me. We have almost all the towns and castles in this County and every day a Barony comes in. We have taken two ships, one of my Lord Inchiquin’s laden with iron which some resolute troopers swam after with their swords in their mouths and hands when she was under sail, and took her.” Seal. [N. Edinburgh.—“The Estates of Parliament of this kingdom having intelligence of the marching of your forces towards their borders and being certainly informed that the English ships have searched diverse and seized upon some of the ships with the persons and goods therein belonging to this kingdom, and considering the large Treaty, which requireth a previous remonstrating of wrongs and seeking redress and giving of three months' warning before denouncing of war, which is also agreeable to the Law of God and practice of nations and conducible to prevent many dangerous consequences, they have written to Mr. William Lenthall Esq. Speaker of the House of Commons, and have thought fit to show unto your Lordship that they acknowledge on their parts their obligation and declare their resolution to observe that rule of remonstrating first the breaches of peace, of craving just reparation, of using all fair means and giving of preceding warning of three months' before any engagement of these kingdoms in war. And they desire to know whether your Lordship and those under your command do acknowledge yourselves obliged, or by your answer will oblige yourselves and declare your resolutions to observe the fore-said order upon your part to us, as also that your Lordship would plainly declare unto us, whether your marching be for defence or offence and whether with intention for keeping only within the borders of England or for coming within ours. Having thus cleared their intentions they desire to be cleared of yours by a speedy return to this letter with this express, being persuaded that God's justice will pursue whatsoever party of either nation that shall unjustly and unnecessarily invade the other kingdom.” (See Commons' Journals, vi. 435.) Copy. The COUNCIL OF STATE to Colonel EDWARD POPHAM and Colonel ROBERT BLAKE.

1650, July 13.—Instructions. After reciting at great length the events which had occurred at Lisbon and the negotiations with the King of Portugal they grant letters of reprisal against all the ships and goods belonging to the said King or his subjects and require the generals of the fleet in execution of the said letters of marque and reprisal to seize arrest surprise and take all such ships with the goods therein and to send the same into the custody of the collectors of prize goods that they may be valued judged and condemned in the Court of Admiralty for satisfying the loss and damages sustained by the Commonwealth in the premises in the said port and territories of the said King and of the charges incurred by the Commonwealth by reason of the neglect of justice of that King and the other defaults before mentioned, provided that any perishable goods or any ships ordnance or ammunition that may be necessary for the special service of the Commonwealth shall be inventoried and the former sold and the latter used for such service. And for that the Parliament were in probable expectation and would have been in a position to recover their said ships from Prince Rupert did not the said King still shelter him with the protection of his port, and for that the said King notwithstanding the often representations to him of the manifest iniquity and injustice on Rupert's part and the right and justice on the Parliament's part, "and notwithstanding the breaches of peace made by Rupert in the same port even to the infringement of the territory and dishonour of that King himself does yet persist to protect and defend Rupert in the same port and is the sole obstacle and impediment that the said ships are not again rescised and taken by the generals of the Parliament's fleet and doth it purposely to the end the General might not rescise them inasmuch as that King hath made it his desire to the general to remove afar off from the entrance of the port for that very end that Rupert might have hopes to get away, you shall therefore—the law of nations permitting it till that King remove the obstacle—continue to block up the said King's port and make stop of anything advantageous to him or tending to his commodity retentionis causa for caution only till he abstain from further protecting Rupert in that unjust detaining of those ships in his port and do cavere per obsides to hinder the Parliament no more in that their just design." THE MARQUESS OF ORMONDE to the POPISH CLERGY AT JAMESTOWN.

1650, August 2. Rosecommon.—"We received yours of the 24th of July on the 1st . . . and with much grief acknowledge that this nation is brought into a sad condition, and that by such means as when it shall be known abroad, and by story delivered to posterity will indeed be thought a fable; for it will seem incredible, that any nation should so madly affect, and violently pursue the ways leading to their own destruction, as this people will appear to have done, and that, after the certain ruin they were running into was evidently and frequently discovered unto them, that in all times and upon all occasions have had power to persuade and compel them to whatever they thought fit. And it shall be less credible when it shall be declared that the temporal spiritual and eternal safety even of those that had this power, and have been thus forewarned, did consist in making use of it to reclaim the people, and direct them into the ways of preservation It cannot be denied but the disobedience we have met with, which at large we declared unto many of you, who with divers of the nobility and gentry were assembled at Loughreogh in April last, were the certain ready ways to the destruction of this nation, as by our letters of the first of May to that Assembly was made apparent.

Ancient and late experience hath made it evident, what power those of your function have had to draw the people of this nation to what they thought fit. Whether your Lordships have been convinced, that the obedience which we desired should be given to his Majesty's authority in us according to the Articles of Peace, was the way to preserve the nation we know not, or whether your Lordships have made use of all the means at other times and upon other occasions exercised by you to procure this necessary obedience we shall not now determine. Sure we are, that since the said Assembly not only Limerick hath persisted in the disobedience it was then in, and aggravated the same by several affronts since fixed upon the King's authority, but Galway hath been seduced into the like disobedience. For want of due compliance from these places, but principally from Limerick, it hath been impossible for us to raise or employ an army against the Rebels."

(The next clause is printed almost verbatim in Carte, Life of Ormonde, ii. 125, beginning "To attempt this," ending "have effected the work.")

"For want of such an army, which, with God's assistance might have been long since raised, if Limerick had obeyed our orders, the Rebels have without any considerable assistance from abroad taken Clonmel, Ticroghan, and Catherlagh, and reduced Waterford and Duncannon to great, and we fear, irrecoverable distress. The loss of these places and the want of any visible power to protect them, hath undoubtedly induced many to contribute their substance and personal assistance to the Rebels, from which whether they might have been withheld by your censures we know not, but have not heard of any such issued against them.

And lastly for want of such an army the Rebels have taken to themselves the contributions which might have considerably assisted to support an army and preserve this kingdom. If therefore the end of your consultation at Jamestown be to acquit your conscience in the eyes of God, the amendment of all errors, and the recovery of this afflicted people, as by your Lordships giving us notice of your meeting is professed, we have endeavoured briefly to show, that the spring of our past losses and approaching ruin arises from disobedience, and it will not be hard to show, that the spring of the disobedience arises from the forgeries invented, the calumnies spread abroad against the Government, and the incitements of the people to rebellion by very many of the clergy. That these are errors frequently practised and fit for amendment is no more to be doubted, than without they be amended the affliction of the people will continue, and, is to be feared, end in their utter ruin and destruction, which if prevented by what your consultation will produce, the happy effect of your meeting will be acknowledged, without questioning the authority by which you meet." Transcript in Nalson's hand. [N. XII., 255.]

Captain ROBERT WYARD to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1650, August 5. Yarmouth.—According to the command from the Rear-Admiral I lay at North Seas with the fishermen till the 23rd of July, and then went to the mouth of Humber to ballast and water. The merchants of Hull sent me letters that there were ready ten ships, six for London and four for Rotterdam. The London ships had stayed above ten or fourteen days for convoy. They prevailed with me to convoy them all into the Roads and to see the Rotterdam ships safe into harbour. I consented knowing the great necessity they had for a convoy, and that they had sent many letters to many of the ports on the North coast to be sent to the Rear-Admiral desiring one, which had not reached him, so they promising to acquaint your Honours I set sail out of Humber the 28th of July and gaining the Roads the 30th, where I left the London fleet to Captain Jones, "and my convoy setting sail upon the last of July with a bare wind contrary to my mind about 8 of the clock at night I came up with the headmost of them, whom I found to be very much in drink, and out of a bravado he fired three guns, the which I think it was the means to bring misery on us all, for before 10 of the clock there came up with us six great frigates. The Admiral had 26 guns, the Vice-Admiral 22, the Rear-Admiral 20, the rest 18 and 16. The least had too many guns for one poor ship to encounter with all at once and some of them, as I hear at Yarmouth by them that hath been taken by them very lately, that they have 250 men apiece. They coming up very fast with us, we immediately fitted our ship, little thinking they had been all frigates. I hailing the headmost, the which was the Admiral, he said he was of Amsterdam, and commanding him to come to leeward he would not, but said 'All friends,' so I fired at him. I had no sooner fired but he cried amain 'For King Charles the Second, you Roundheaded dogs.' I told him, our cause was good, I did scorn their words, for I had powder and shot enough for them. With that he fired a volley of small shot at me, I being upon the poop, and a whole broadside, and so did the other five frigates, they continuing so all night firing broadside for broadside that we were almost tired out. They came up with us so fast that our guns was so hot, I was afraid they would have split, we plied them so fast, but after they had tasted three or four broadsides apiece from us we bringing most of them by the lee in the night it was some ease to us for to refresh us. The fight began before ten in the night, the night being very light and the sea as smooth as the Thames all the time of the fight which continued till 12 o'clock at noon. I hoped to have had relief, knowing there was two ships in the Roads, but none came to our assistance. I spent 16 barrels of powder and 700 shot, beside musket shot, and barr shot in cases. I received 12 great shot in my mainmast, I have not one whole mast but my bowsprit, and I am sure in the hull, masts, sails, and rigging I have received about 500 great shot, so that 300*l.* will not make the ship good again besides powder and shot . . . spent. The ship is so torn that, if it had not pleased God to send us fair weather, I had lost all my masts, for I had scarce two good shrouds on a side to hold them . . . Although the ship be mightily torn and battered I have received no hurt, but only two of my men. One is dead since we came to Yarmouth, but I hope the other will recover suddenly. I had eight men burnt with powder by a shot from the enemy. I hope in a short time they will be recovered . . . We were so torn in the fight that we had not one sail to help us but our foresail. All was shot down, yet it pleased God that I kept the ship all the time under command, and I kept my convoy 12 hours before I lost them, and they seeing me so torn, one of them struck, and the other being entered made no resistance, they having but 11 guns betwixt them, and after they were surprised the six frigates came up with me again thinking to have sunk me, the Admiral having 18 guns on the side next to us, they all gave us twelve broadsides before they left us, but we being ready to receive them we galled them so, that if any one ship had but come to have relieved us we had taken the best of them, for they were so torn that they lay three hours by the lee without any sail, four of the best of them. It will be the next spring[tide] before I can get my ship ready or shall have water out of the haven." (See Commons' Journals, vi. 454.) Copy. [N. XII., 256.]

ROBERT BLAKE and EDWARD POPHAM, Generals at Sea, to [the COUNCIL OF STATE].

1650, August 15. From aboard the Resolution, riding off the Port of Lisbon.—“ Wee suppose your Honours long ere this are acquainted by Captaine Badiloe from Cadiz, howe in his way thither hee mett with some French men of warr and suncke one of them, the rest escaping out of their hands. Since that it hath pleased God in this place to exercise us with various and mixt providences, sustaining us with apparent evidences of his good will in our extreame straightes, and yet withholding from us the fruit of the desire of our soules in our greatest hopes. The truth hereof, your Honours will perceive by the ensuing relation. The 26 of July betweene 9 and 10 in the morning, Prince Rupert after long preparation and much noise came forth of the Bay of Weyres with twenty-six ships, eighteen carvells, the wind at E.S.E., our fleet being then at anchor neere Cascais Road. We forthwith weighed and stood of with them, they keeping the wind of us. Having gott a reasonable bearth from the shoare, wee haled our forsails to the mast with our fleet which then consisted of ten saile beside the Brazeele ships, our Cales squadron being not returned, the Hercules and Assurance off at sea, the Providence at Virgo for water, and the Constant Warwicke on her way from England. The enemy still kept the wind, the French admirall with foure fireships being the headmost of their fleet, and a sterne of him about a mile, the Reformation. A little after, the wind coming to the South, wee filled our sailes, tackt and gott the wind which the enemy perceiving tackt likewise. Then wee bore away lardge upon the Frenchman being betwixt us and the Réformation, and exchanged some shott with him, as alsoe did the Phénix. But as fast as wee bore upon him hee bore away large in toward the harbour, and Rupert likewise---his mizen alway haled up—. Wee followed them till wee came into tenn fathome water neere the South Hetchooopes, and then it drawing toward night, having a lea shoare, and a leeward tide, and being in the indraught of the harbour, wee submitted to the present necessity, and stood off, the enemy coming to anchor betweene the two castles. That night was little wind and thicke. The next morning, the wind being easterly and but little, they gott under the forts of Cascais where the wind being as it was wee could not possibly fall on them, but kept faire in sight of them, that day being for the most part calme. In the evening wee gave order to the Assurance being then come to us to alarune them in the night thereby to keepe Prince Rupert in apprehension that hee might not steale away. The next morning being foggy and little wind wee espied the enemy under saile turning to and againe under the castles, and bore in soe neere that the castles shott at our frigot, being then alsoe calme. A little after, the wind at South, and very little, and the enemy seeming to make toward us, wee haled upp our sayles, till they had placed themselves in the wind of us thereby to drawe them to ingage. But they had noe minde to come to us, though wee lay many howres for them, nor could wee gett to them, they keeping the advantage of the shoare. At length about sixe in the evening wee discovered seven or eight saile in the offing, which the enemy likewise perceiving tackt and stood in. Wee not knowing whoe they were plyed toward them, and at breake a day they fell in among us, being our Cadiz squadron, which came very seasonably for us not having above fowre dayes drinke left in our fleet. After wee had releveld our shipp with a little licour wee stood in toward them in Cascais Roade but could doe nothing, the wind being easterly; and at our approach, they running from us in toward the Barr, soe that wee lay short that night having resolved the next morning by breake of the day, if possible, to fall in among them. But when wee sought them they were all gone in to the great greife of our hearts, whoe longed for nothing more if it had stood with the will of God then to put an end to that great trouble and charge of the Comonwealth. This is a true and faithfull relation of what past in the whole bussiness. A fewe dayes after upon the 4th instant, came to us the Constant Warwicke by which wee received your Honours' letters with further instructions for carrying on the service. In one of them wee find that your Honours have bin informed of the going in of a rich caracke from the East India after the seizure of the Brazeele ships and are pleased to note it as an omission of duty in us, wherent wee cannot but exceeding wonder seeing it was nine dayes before wee made a stop of the saide ships, and when shee past in wee knewe not whence shee was but conjectured her to bee a shipp come from Port a Port, neither had wee then any colour of authority to seize her.—having not received the King's finall answer—, nor if wee would, could wee possibly have done it, shee being to the windward, and keeping in close under the shoare, under comand of their forts. As to that which your Honours are pleased to intimate of sending some ships to lye off the Ilands for intercepting the Brazeele fleet, wee have debated it at a Councell of Warr and upon consideracon of many inconveniences which might arise from the seperacion of the fleet, the unfines of the Brazeele ships to stay out, which wee have therefore sent home, the unprovidednes of our owne, especially of drinke in supply wherof wee have mett with such hazardous difficulties, it was the resolution of the whole Councell that wee were in noe capacity for such a service. Touching the merchants mencioned in your Honours' letter, wee have in obedience to your comands used our utmost endeavors to gett them of by sending a trumpett, and employing a captaine ashoare with proffers of exchange for them, and divers others in prison, but they utterly refused at first to exchange any merchants and wee have sithence prest it againe but have not yet received any concluding answeere from them, though wee have wayted five dayes, neither doe wee thincke it safe in expectation thereof to delay the sending away these shlips least wee bee brought into some distresse for want of drinke which is soe hard to bee gott, or by change of weather, which they are noe way fitted to endure in this place." Signed. [N. DOCTOR STEWART, Dean of St. Paul's, to SIR EDWARD NICHOLAS.

1650, September 12–22. Louvre.—“From Jersey we are now come to Paris where we have been this fortnight. We are told the Duke shall [have] 600 pistoles from the State of France to carry him towards Holland. I believe that the Duke of York will make some stay at Bruxelles to advise with his father's honest councillors. Lord Hopton, Sir Edward Herbert, Mr. Windham, 'tis hoped, will be sent for, and no doubt Secretary Nicholas will be entreated to come thither; the journey is not great nor chargeable, and therefore I should entreat” him “not to fail, when he is sent for. The Duke . . . is very right set and you will see a change in his servants shortly. Queen of England will do little with him.” Extract. [N. XII., 258, No. 1.]

WILLIAM BASIL TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1650, September 13. Kilkenny.—“Within a few days after the surrender of Duncannon my Lord Deputy marched with his army into the county of Wicklow, where after part of our army had scoured the woods his Lordship divided his army, part whereof he sent back under the command of Sir Hardress Waller toward Limerick for the besieging thereof, and with the residue marched toward Tecrohan with intent there to victual, and so to march to Athlone, but our forces in the North having taken in Charlemont and advancing southward his Lordship sent an addition of forces toward Limerick and with the rest joined with the Northern forces and is marched to Athlone, whereof I doubt not but you will have—with God's blessing—a speedy and good account. The priests of Galway have lately interdicted Ormonde from meddling with any of the affairs of the Irish. Munster, Leinster, and Ulster are now wholly in our possession, only much infested with Tories, and I doubt not but we shall have speedy footing in Connaught." After stating the care of the Commonwealth to preserve a right understanding between themselves and all other States and in particular with France, and their attention that due and speedy justice should be done between those of their nation and France, complaining that similar justice had not been done by France, as the debts contracted for their service by their Minister at Constantinople and due to English people had not been paid, and that English merchant ships and goods had been taken by the French in the Levant and adjudged prize and that they could get no redress, and declaring that they had therefore given letters of marque to persons interested in the said debts and losses, and had also given orders to all their commanders at sea to seize all French ships to be kept in deposit till the people of this nation receive justice from France; but, before proceeding to adjudication they had thought it right to make one more demand for justice. OLIVER CROMWELL to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1650, October 2. Edinburgh.—“Colonel George Gill had a regiment under my command. I persuading myself that nothing would be more welcome to the Parliament than to hear and redress innocency which is so confidently stood upon by this man do in all humility desire he may be heard, and if it be found impudency in him he may have his punishment doubled. It is not my importunity in the person occasions this boldness, but because I durst not deny my [con]science. Craving pardon for this trouble I rest.” Signed. Seal. Enclosed:

Admiral ROBERT BLAKE to [the COUNCIL OF STATE].

1650, October 14. From aboard the George in the bay of Cadiz.—“From the last account which Colonel Popham and myselfe gave your Honours by the Brazeele ships sent for England till the seperation of our fleet, I suppose your Honours doe understand from him, what endeavours have bin used by us in your service, and with what successe. And that on the third of September wee were necessitated for want of liquor to part, the Resolution, Andrewe, Happy Entrance and five others to goe for Cadiz or Virgoe for a supply ; myselfe on the George, with the Leopard, Bona Venture and seaven others to keepe plying off the Rock. Fowre dayes after our parting, being Saturday, about eleaven in the morning wee discovered a part of Rupert's and the Portugall fleet in a mist, and about fowre in the afternoone, wee found our selves—the mist clearing upp—very neare the whole fleet, consisting of of thirty-six sayle. I had onely with mee the Phenix and Expedition, having left the rest in the fogg. By God's good providence, the enemies' fleet was all to leiward of us, soe wee keeping the wind made toward them being resolved to encounter Prince Rupert, whoe was the headmost of the fleet. Coming within reach, wee gave him a broadside, soe did the two frigatts, which the Lord was pleased soe to direct, that his foretopmast was shott off by the capp. Wheruppon hee bore upp into the middest of the fleet and the thicke mist taking them againe out of our sight, wee stood off to seeke the rest of our squadron, which wee mett with the next day. The Saturday following, early in the morning, wee discovered the Brazelee fleet bound for Lisbon, consisting of twenty-three sayle. I forthwith made towards the admirall, whoe being to nimble, I fell on the rereadmirall, being a shipp of noe lesse force, and had above three howres dispute with him, it blowing very much wind, soe that wee could not use our loure fire. At length after losse of many of his men, hee yeilded, wee being soe neere that at going off, the head of our shipp received a cracke. Wee tooke in all seaven prizes having in them above four thousand chests of sugar, and neere four hundred prisoners. The vizeadmirall was burnt, being first boarded by the Assurance, whoe saved most of the remainder of his men. The wind being northerly and very neere spent, I bore upp for this pl[ace] whither by God's blessing we came all in safety. Wee were welcomed with much honour by the Admirall of Spayne whoe was at an anchor in the roade. After my coming, I sent away advice to Malaga to the fleet there to take the benefitt of a convoy, which many have followed. Three of the prizes being not fitt to goe to sea, I have unladen and removed their lading into other ships. The other fower I have sent home under comand of Captaine Bodiloe together with the George, Assurance, Hercules and the ship Marchunt. The Leopard staies behind to reaire the masts which are very defective, but I hope in a fewe dayes shee wilbee made fitt to goe for England. I doe intend God willing in the Bona Venture, with the Phoenix, Elizabeth, Expedition, Constant Warwicke, and the John to continue out yet a moneth or longer to doe the comon-wealth all the service I can hereabout, or elsewhere as the providence of God shall direct mee." The JUDGES OF THE ADMIRALTY COURT to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1650, October 15.—Report thereon. We are of opinion that, as the fact is therein stated, the spoils therein mentioned of English ships and goods both at sea and in ports by French ships and the approbation thereof in the French Courts, as also the seizure of the persons goods and books of account of the English in their towms have been by the said Resident sufficiently represented to the proper French authorities as contrary to treaties and the free course of commerce, and that the said Resident having often demanded justice in vain represented to the proper authorities that unless within forty days reparation was fully made the Parliament would proceed to reprisals, but no reparation was made, that therefore justice has been sufficiently demanded, that no further demand is necessary, that the Parliament may justly proceed to reprisals and that it is necessary immediately to proceed to adjudication upon the ships and goods already seized. Copies. [Admiral ROBERT BLAKE] to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1650, October 30. From aboard the Leopard in the Road of Malaga.—“The day after I had despatched away Captain Badiloe with the George and other ships for England which was the 15th instant the Hopewell ketch came to me at Cadiz, by which I received your Honours' letters, and in order to the directions therein for improving all endeavours for advance of the public service, having got the four frigates cleaned and some victuals into them I went aboard the Phoenix, and being at sea four or five days off the Straits' mouth met with a French man of war, who after some dispute yielded upon quarter. There was in her 36 brass guns and 180 men, the Captain, Chevalier de Lalande, commander of a squadron, (Chef d'escadron) brother to him that was sunk by the Adventure frigate. I intended to have taken the ship along with me to sea, but was necessitated to leave her at Cadiz upon intelligence given me that Prince Rupert was abroad, and had attempted to seize some of the merchant men here. I intend—God willing—to pursue him as far as Providence shall direct, and should have given . . . a more full account of affairs had time permitted. Being under sail I crave your Honours' pardon" . . . Signature torn off. [N. XVII., 43.]

1650, November 5-15. Formentera.—"Since you lost my company, I have taken one prize worth securing; and by reason her main-mast is shot away and other very great defects I am forced to go with her to the nearest place to this. You are appointed by your instructions to carry your prizes into the Isle of Sardina (?) (words erased and illegible). To that place you are to send all your prizes, and when you shall come near it yourself to send me word, that I may return you orders what to do. Admiral ROBERT BLAKE to the GOVERNOR OF CARTAGENA.

1650, November [5-]15. From aboard the Leopard in the Road of Cartagena.—"The occasion of my coming hither is, I suppose, made known to you already. That is in pursuit of some of our enemies, part of that fleet which was so long protected against us in the port of Lisbon, but, I hope, will find no such entertainment here. The many and free expressions of goodwill towards this fleet, which I have received elsewhere by special command of his Catholic Majesty do assure me rather of the contrary, and common justice do require no less as against notorious pirates and destroyers of all trade. It is of very high consequence to the Parliament of England, and may be of no small concernment to his Majesty to give this business a speedy and present dispatch, that being master of those ships which are come into this harbour, I may be at liberty to pursue and by God's blessing seize upon the remainder of their strength before they join themselves unto the French, which is likely to be their last refuge. My desire therefore is that you would be pleased to send your answer forthwith by this bearer Captain Moulton." Copy. [N. XVII., 44.]

Admiral ROBERT BLAKE to the KING OF SPAIN.

1650, November [7-]17. Bay of Cartagena.—“There being at present for ought I knowe noe publicke Minister for the Parlyament of England residing in Madrid I have taken the boldnes by this imediate addresse to give your Majestie to understand: That on Sunday last, part of the fleet under my command did chace five sayle of Prince Rupert's into the Bay of Cartagena. One of them destroyd himselfe by fire without the harbor. The other foure went in where I supposed I should not have mett with any difficultie in seizing of them, being made confident before at Cadiz, that your Majestie had sent order to all your ports, not to admitt any of Prince Rupert's fleet. But I found it otherwise, being at my going in twice shott at by the Castle and after visited by the Alealde, whoe required mee not to offer any force unto the said ships then lying under proteccion of the Castle. I did accordingly forbear out of respect to your Majestie's authority, yet with much indignation against those wicked men for the great outrage and mischeife they had a fewe dayes before comitted against divers English marchants' shippis, and that within your Majestie's ports of Malaga, Veales, and Metrill, having taken two and burnt fowre. But what I was not then permitted to doe, Divine Providence did in a great measure accomplish shortly after, for the next day they were by a storme all driven ashoare, one of the men of warr beaten to peeces. The other as alsoe the two prizes are but in a little better condition. The ships might have beene most saved, had I been permitted to come nearer unto them, in time to use the meanes which was denyed me under pretence of expecting your Majestie's order. My desire therefore unto your Majestie according to the duty I owe to the parlyament of England, is that your Majestie wilbee pleased to send your comands, that the artillery, cables, anchors, and other furniture, and what remaineth of the two men of warr may bee delivered upp into my possession for the use of the parlyament of England, and that the goods which have been taken out of the two prizes to noe small value, and what remaineth of them may bee restored unto the right owners. Hereby your Majestie will acquire unto your selfe a name of justice and righteousnes in the world, and lay a very great obligacion upon the parlyament and people of England to unite their affeccions and interests to your Majestie's which may bee of singular importance unto both.” Two Copies. [N. Captain RICHARD BADILEY to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1650, November 9. On board the Happy Entrance in the Downs.—"It pleased Colonall Blake . . . to send mee from Cadiz the 14th of October with order to ply my voyage for England having assigned a squadron of shippes to accompany mee, viz^t the George, the Assurance frigott belonging to the state of England, and the Hercules and Merchant, shippes employed in the service, that soe I might bee the better enabled to take into my chardge and bee a safe convoy unto four prizes, to say, the Peeter, Anthony, Lady Remedia, and Good Sheapeard, that were lately taken from the Portugall in their homeward way from Brazeele laden with sugars and other commodities. For an invoys whereof as alsoe what sugars is upon the rest of our fleets, I humbly referre you to the inclosed packett from Colonall Blake. Ther came alsoe under this convey, twelve other mercharnt shippes, that laded at Leviorna (Leghorn) and Maligoe, and in their homeward way stopped at Cadiz for the aforesayd end. Now, therfore to advise your Honours that after many hazerds by stormy weather—which of late wee have often mett withall—through God's great mercy all the aforementioned shippes are safely arived in this rode, the Anthony prize excepted, which having broken some of her yards and splitt some of her sayles, in a storme neere Portland, she went away for a harbor in the night and that wee judge was Waymouth or the Ile of Whyt. The 28th of October, forty leagues of the Land's End of England, I seased upon a Frenchman that came from St Christopher's, laden with such goods as are specified in the inventory I send your Honours heerewith inclosed, but the shipp being soe leake, that the men I putt aboard her could hardly keepe her above water, two dayes since in a storme I bid them shift for themselves and their lives, and soe venter for the shore although very thicke weather to find a harbor, and I doe not in the least doubt but shee is well arived either in the Ile of Whyt, or the adjacent places, and the next faire weather and oppertunitie of winds I sha[ll] indeavour with all the abovesayd shippes to hasten into the river of Theames." THE KING OF SPAIN to DON FRANCISCO FERNANDEZ DE MARMOLESO, Governor and Captain of War of the cities of Murcia, Lorea, and Cartagena.

1650, November [14-]24. Madrid.—After referring to Admiral Blake's letter of November [7-]17th, of which a copy is inclosed, it proceeds: "In the first place it hath seemed good to me that you give him to understand the satisfaction which I have of his good proceeding and to charge you . . . that you take special care in well treating those ships which are there of the Parliament of England and the same of those besides which shall come as is meet to be done. And out of the desire that I have that with the Parliament and all that belong to them good and acceptable correspondence may be held in all my kingdoms, I have resolved, and it is my will, that the prizes which they shall have taken and in particular the vessels of Prince Rupert you cause to be returned entirely to those to whom they belong or to the Admiral in case that the owners be not there, that he may deliver them to them. Nevertheless this must be by public and judicial acts that the satisfaction which he hath received may appear. As to the point of losses and damages which the Admiral pretends to receive of the goods of those ships of Prince Rupert which I have commanded to embark for the satisfaction of them to whom it belongs, as he mentions in his letter, you may declare . . . that my resolution is that satisfaction be made, and that to that purpose he have solicitors in Cartagena, that the matter may be tried before justice what they have lost by the invasion of Prince Rupert in Velez Malaga, telling him that I had before commanded to make that embark to satisfy also for the offence which hath been received in my ports by the invasion of the Prince for having set upon a vessel defended by my artillery. You shall say with all sincerity to the Admiral . . . that no order had been given that the ships of Prince Rupert should not be received into the ports in regard he had not as then given any offence, which they did in Velez in the invasion which they there made, and also that there was no agreement with the Parliament to forbear to receive them, so that it was the duty of my ministers to defend them under my artillery, as the Admiral saw was done in Malaga to those of the Parliament's party, and also that I have so much the more cause to thank the Admiral for the respect wherewith he proceeded for which I remain again obliged. This is all . . . that I should say to you charging you again to treat and receive well those ships of the Parliament . . . and to despatch courteously and friendly the Admiral in the manner aforesaid." At foot, "Received in Cartagena Monday [18-]28 November at 6 in the morning." A copy in Spanish and two copies of an English translation. [N. XVII., 99, 49, 50.]

THE SAME to the SAME.

Same date.—"Besides that which the other despatches contain . . . it hath seemed good to me in this apart to tell you that I had resolved that those vessels which entered into the Port of Cartagena of those under Prince Rupert, that you should cause them to be disarmed, and that the men belonging to them which were come ashore should be shipped. And having afterwards understood the chance which those ships had to be lost that you cause the men of the said ships to be lodged in some place without the city of Cartagena, where they may be with safety, and may do no harm nor receive any, so ordering that they may have relief in their quarters. And for that which the ships of Prince Rupert did in Velez Malaga, and other ports . . . I charge you that you send orders to the ports under your command that neither the ships of the prince nor his person be admitted therein for any pretence. As also I charge you that to those of the Parliament who shall enter therein all good reception be given, giving them to understand that it is my express will and command." CHARLES SALTONSTALL to ROBERT COYTMORE, Secretary to the Committee for the Admiralty.

1650, November 22. From aboard the State's ship the John in Carthage Bay in the Straits.—“Since our sending home our left flecte from Cales with the shugar prizes in the company of Captain Boddiley our Reare Admirall, there now remaining of the Parliament's ships only seven saile vidt.: the Leopard, Bouaventure, John, Expedicion, Elizabeth frigott, Phenix frigott, and Constant Warwick, on the 20th November, (October) neere the Straight's mouth there was taken by the Parliament's ships one of the Kinge of France's men of warr with thirty-six brass gunes. Munday, the 28th October, wee had intelligence that Prince Rupert with his whole flecte being in all eight or nine saile was two daies since before Malligo. Our Gennerall therefor with the afforesaide seven ships imediately went into the Straights and the 30th October wee weare att Malligo and there heard that Prince Rupert was towards Alligant, and had burnt and sunke five or six ships att Veles Malligo Sipeone (? Estepona) and Mutturill. Wee staid nott two howers but went after him. Satterday, 2 November, betwixt Cape Degatt and Cape de Paulo we tooke an other French with twenty gunes, and on the 3rd day November wee tooke the Roe Buck one of Prince Rupert's flecte neere Cape de Paulo, a ship of thirty-four gunes. On the 4 November the Black Prince of Rupert's flecte, the John being redy to lay him aboard, a ship of forty-two gunes, ran a shoare three leagues to the E. of Carthage and there fired and blew up him seife. The 5 of November, four more of Rupert's run ashoare in the Bay of Carthagen for feare of our forces and there are all cast away and bilged, having nott a mast standing. Satterday, 9th November, our Gennerall, Colonell Blake, sett saile to seeke for the remainder of Rupert's flecte, being now only two ships, vidt. the Reformacion, and Swallow; and left mee here in the Bay of Carthage with the John and two French prizes to bee Commander in Chiefe and to attend the King's answeere concerning the gunes and amunition belonging to the ships putt ashoare. This day the Vice-roy of Murcia was aboard the John, and signified I should have all things belong[ing]e to the ships, His Majestie's comaunds being come downe to Carthage for that purpose, soe that I am now exceeding busie about looking after what may bee received and got together from these wracks for the State's use. Our Gennerall sett saile from hence twelve daies since intending to goe for the Islands of Mynyoreke, Mayyoreke, Fermitera and Ivesey, where our (? their) instructions which wee tooke lead us unto that Rupert's rendezvous weare att these places. I hope by this tyme hee may bee mett withall. Indeede the Lord hath proved us exceedingly since wee have had little of the arme of flesh amongsts us, I mean since our great and powerfull flecte of soe many ships weare reduced only to a little squadron of ten ships under the comand of Coll. Blake, for since then wee have taken the Brazeale flecte, and after that, our squadron being now butt three ships and four frigotts, wee have taken three French ships and distroyed and taken all Rupert's ships, seven in number, only two now remaining, and thus hath God owned us in the middest of our implakable ennies, soe that the terror of God is amongsts them, five chaseth a hundred and ten a thousand, which is marvilous in our eyes. The Spaniards are now exceeding kynd unto us and the Kynge of Spaine hath made large expressions to our Gennerall how acceptable our service hath bene unto him since our coming into the Straights, which I am to deliver unto him, so soone as hee shall arive heere at Carthagene. I expect him heere everie day." Seal. [N. VIII., 27.]

[1650, December 4.]—"In the first outbreking of this insurrection the whole country seemed in a flame—and had been, had not the Lord

even in the moment appointed for your and our sure overthrows showed he was God, Our God, who hath saved and would not now forsake us.—They had so many parties appointed and in so many places that we could apprehend no place safe, but our fears were soon past through the certain information they were all scattered and gone. They fled for fear of pursuers but none then pursued them but the terror of their own fault. We also transmitted some examinations which were the most material we had then taken, wherein there appeared somewhat of danger. We have since taken several other examinations, the principal . . . we humbly herewith present. The business seems so considerable to us upon the place that we take great care to search it to the bottom and make so clear a discovery that we may distinguish by this many secret enemies to the Peace of the Commonwealth, which no oath nor engagement would detect. There are many of power and eminency named as engagers with them but the ringleaders alone must manifest that. . . . But this is too plain that many yea we justly fear so many of the middle ranks of men are engaged in it, that it will be to no end to try them by jury, but either to make some exemplary by a martial trial, or by the High Court of Justice.” . . . But as concerning the three other ships which your Majesty hath been pleased to embargo for the satisfaction of the parties interested I hope your Majesty will excuse me for taking the boldness to renew my former desire which was that the artillery cables anchors with other furniture and what remaineth of them may be delivered up for the use of the Parliament of England to whom I conceive they appertain. And that your Majesty will be pleased accordingly to send your order to your Corregidor here, whereby you will lay a more especial and direct obligation upon the Parliament and complete the work of justice so illustriously begun to our nation’s abundant contentment and the perpetual honour of your Majesty. Speech of DON ALONSO DE CARDENAS to the PARLIAMENT.

1650-1, December 26 - January 5. — On presenting his letters of credence,—“ His Catholic Majesty being the greatest and first king in Christendom, hath thought fit to oblige this Commonwealth by being also the first who should make this acknowledgment ” solely on account of Spain's ancient goodwill towards England, and from his desire for friendship with this Commonwealth. I have special orders to declare his lively resentment at the unhappy accident of Anthony Ascham, the Resident, and also what he has done in prosecution of the cause against those who were guilty, wherein his Majesty and his ministers have not only done all that is permitted by the laws and customs of that kingdom, but have exceeded them by the particular diligence they have used, “ as well with the ecclesiastical judge to make him declare that in point of appeal they are not to enjoy the benefit of the Church as with the secular, to the end that nothing of that may be omitted in execution of the chastisement, which the highest rights of justice permits, and he will not draw off his hand until he bring the business to an end, for which reason so much care is had ” of the persons taken “ that being as they are in a common gaol, he has therein for greater security put guards upon them.” In all which I doubt not it will be shortly declared that the case could not be prest more if the dead person were a Prince, heir to the Crown of Spain. All which ought to assure the Parliament of the care to give them satisfaction on this point, as it is also desired may be given in everything else. Such has been the entertainment and shelter given in the Spanish havens to the ships of the Commonwealth which shall be continued. His Majesty has also ordered that neither Prince Rupert or his ships be admitted for they failed at Velez Malaga in the respect due to his standard, which on that fort and castle gave security to the English merchant ships, as the Parliament will more fully understand by the relation sent me, which I have thought fit to communicate. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 515, 517.) In Spanish with English translation, the first signed. [N. XVII., 57, 59.] Annexed:

A Relation of what hath passed in VELEZ MALAGA and CARTAGENA between the ships of PRINCE RUPERT and those of the PARLIAMENT OF ENGLAND.

[1650, December 26.]—“ Foure English Marchant Ships being together in the haven of Velez Malaga, the captaines thereof warned Don Gaspar Ruys Alarcon, Lieutenant-Generall of that coast, that they mistrusted a fleete of eight ships, which was in sight, and that they had notice they were under the command of Prince Rupert, and that he would treatte them ill because the said captaines and ships were of the Parliament's side. Don Gaspar Ruys de Alarcon, having received this notice, sent Andrew Compero, treasurer of the souldiery belonging to that coast, as also an English interpreter, with a letter for the Prince to bid him wellcome, which when they had done, they delivered him the letter, and then the ordinary complements being past and having offered him what refreshment he should neede, they told him that the Captaine Generall of that coast desired to know the reason of his coming thither because the captaines of the English ships were now in the haven and upon their guard, and had drawne to land, flying from him. To this he answered, he came with order of the King of Great Britany, his cousin, to take all the ships he could meeete with of English, his rebels, and that in conformity to this, he came to fetch away fowre ships which were in that roade. Wherupon, the said Compero entreating him he would not permitt any wrong to be done to those ships, being they were under the armes and protection of the King, his maister, and in his haven, the Prince gave answer, he could not comply with his order if he tooke not his advantage of the occasion he had lighted on, to find Captaine Morley, one of the foure and cheefest traytors, who had signed the sentence of death of the King of Great Britanie, his uncle ; that he had now bin three yeares in pursuite of him, and that the Captain Generall ought to deliver him, not to be guilty of the domages and inconveniences which might follow. To which Campero replied, beseeching him in the name of the Captain Generall, not to attempt what he said, for in doing so he should be obliged to protect and defend the said ships which were in the haven. At length after many disputes, the Prince said that if those captaines did not give him occasion by shooting against him, he would also forbear, seeing they were in his maister's haven, unto whom they should owe thanks that they perished not by his hand. Upon this Campero, having shewed the esteeme he made of this his answeare, said he accepted of the offer and that he would lett the captaines of the other ships know with what care and respect they were to comport themselves not to offer any act of hostility. And soe the said Campero, takeing his leave of the Prince, went aboard the other foure ships, and calling the captaines together, wished them to be carefull not to offend any ship of Prince Rupert's fleete, he having offered not to sett upon them, seeing they were in the King's haven. To which they answered, they would proceed accordingly, but would be informed what they should doe if any fyre boates should draw nigh to scale or burne. To which he replied, that were to breake the agreement, and in that case they might fight and defend themselves, and that the Captaine Generall would also endeavour to defend them if the Prince should offer to attacque them. This being past, in the darke of the night some of the Prince's fyre boates drew towards them, and burnt Captaine Morley's ship, and one other, the men that belonged to them having left them. Those of the two ships which defended themselves with healpe of those of the city, were saved.

On the [3rd-] 13th of November, betweene one and two of the clock in the morning, two English men-of-war of Prince Rupert's squadron, entered the haven of Cartagena, bringing with them two English prizes which they had taken ; and at breake of day, appeared at the mouth of the said haven another squadron of ten ships of war belonging to the Parliament, which came in chace of those others; and the same day. another man-of-war of Prince Rupert's fleete, called the Black Prince entered a crick called Perman, two leagues from the said city, who seeing themselves prest by those of the Parliament, forsooke the ship and sett it on fyre, and it was all burnt, except some litle wood which was saved. Fourty peeces of artillery were sunke; the mariners and others belonging to the ship fled into the said city. Next day, Robert Blake, Admirall of the Parliament fleete, put to shore a captain with a trumpet and letter to the city, to tell them that he came in pursuite of Prince Rupert's ships for to destroy them, because their only busines was to rove at sea, and make prizes of such ships as traded; and therefore demanded, they would not protect them, but cast them out of their haven, or permitt him to enter and fetch them out; and that his Majestie would be well satisfied therewith. They of the city asked him whither he had any order from his Majestie to this effect, and he answering he had not, they replied that the Prince his ships were come for shelter into that haven under the command of his Majestie his artillery, and that without his royal order they could alter nothing, entreating him that he would not trouble them; but if he wanted victualls or refreshments, they would afford them most willingly, and if he pleased to enter their haven with his ships as friends, they might doe it, observing the said order; but before he had received the answeare, he entered the haven, placing some of his ships very nigh to those of the Prince. Then the Licentiado Don Jacinto Barcarcell, high sheriff in that city, boarded the Admirall, and after that he had welcommed him with all cheerfullnes, and offered him all good treaty, he intreated him not to trouble the Prince his ships, and if he had a minde to write to his Majestie, he would procure him a post. Then after some replies he made insisting that he would permitt him to fetch out the ships, alleaging different pretexts, he satisfied him in all, and finally brought him to that, that he would expect his Majestie his order before he would medle further, provided there should be no urgent cause obliging him thereunto, and that he would give an account unto the city of any accident that should happen. The same diligence was used with the captaines of the Prince his ships, who offered the same. Things being in this state, the Prince his ships perceiving their owne weakenes so far inferior to the strength of the Parliament, helping themselves with a south est wind which began to blow, they indeavoured to breake through, but were driven to land, and broken in peeces in the Baye of S. Lucy. The Admirall, Robert Blake, writt to his Majestie, giving him account of this successe, asking of him that he might have the artillery, decks, cables and other appertinences to the ships of war, and that the marchandise which was taken in the prizes, and other goods should be given to their true owners.

Upon this occasion, his Majestie gave order that an answeare should be sent to the letter, wherof here goes a copie, and commanded the Governor of Cartagena that he should lett the Admirall know how satisfied he was with his proceedings, and that he should affoord all good entertainment to him and his ships; and that he should see entirely restored all the prizes which the Prince his ships had taken from particulars, unto whom they did belong, or unto the Admirall in case they were not there, to the end he might deliver them ; and that he should tell him that his Majestie was resolved satisfaction should be given to such as had suffered the losses and damages which the Admirall pretended to recover out of the wealth of Prince Rupert's ships ; and therefore proctors should be left to plead by justice for what was lost by Prince Rupert's invasion in Velez Malaga ; and that no order had bin given to hinder the receaving Prince Rupert's into his haven, because they had not offended before as they had now done in Velez ; and that it was never agreed with the Parliament, to forbear the receaving of them, and therefore there was obligation in his Majestie's minister to protect them, when they came under his artillery, as it happened at Malaga with those of the Parliament side.

And after this, orders were sent to all the havens, forbidding them to admitt hereafter of any of the foresaid Prince his ships, by reason of the hostility offered by them in Velez Malaga, setting on the ships which were under the shelter of his Majestie's artillery." [N. XVI., 60.]

Major-General LAMBERT to ———

1650[-1], January 4. Edinburgh.—My last gave an account of the surrender of Edinburgh Castle. Nothing considerable has happened since but the Coronation of Charles the Second, which was performed with great joy and shooting of guns and bonfires on the 1st instant, and great preparations making towards the sudden raising of a great army which will consist wholly of malignant people. We hear their Parliament has passed an Act, assented to by their king, empowering him to call whom he thinks fit into their army and to hang and forfeit any who shall refuse or desert their colonels, and for this purpose their king is gone into the North, where he is to set up his standard. However this is most certain they have chosen all their new colonels being the most popular and beloved men, with whom we hear the people rise very willingly so that I think we may certainly conclude they will have numerous army before long. Massey has a commission and most English officers, and 'tis confidently reported they have encouragements and intend to send a party for England, which though we shall endeavour to prevent, yet it will be our duty not to be too secure at least in a preventing insurrections and risings in our own bowels, which I conceive is most to be feared. We have had great thoughts how to prevent these new levies, and if possible to have contrived a way for our getting over the water, but Providence denying that all this time makes me wait the Lord's leisure. . . . Our great want besides the difficulty of passing over the river is want of victuals, our stores being wholly exhausted except a little cheese, and we in great straits what to do not hearing of the coming of any more. It will be of singular advantage to our affairs to have money and provisions sent us. Copy. [N. XII., 261, No. 1.]

Major-General LAMBERT to ———

1650[-1], January 8. Edinburgh.—Their young king is gone to Aberdeen, where, 'tis reported he sets up his standard. They will rise willingly, being very unanimous, yet the dumb man of Peebles makes signs that they will before long cut off the heads of some great ones. Truly I am confident they have filled the measure of their iniquities and the Lord will speedily judge them. Middleton is come in and 'tis thought will be received. Duke Hamilton is thought will be general; Massey has a regiment of horse. He must be they say for England and their army will be so numerous as they think to spare a considerable party with him. Straghan, we hear, is excommunicated and sundry others we believe will follow. We are labouring where we can to get a store of horsemeat to Leith. Something considerable I hope we may do, but not full to our purpose. Extract. [N. XII., 261, No. 2.]

Speech of JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES at his audience by a Committee of Parliament.

[1650-1, January 10.]—Enlarging at great length on the ancient friendship between England and Portugal and the services rendered by the former to the latter especially against the Mahometans and against Philip II., and desiring that those imaginary clouds of discord should vanish as serving only to eclipse the clear light of their ancient amity which the importune sagacity of their common enemy would fain deprive them of and stating that he came with full powers from the King of Portugal to confer about the conservation of peace and removing all emergent obstacles to resolve and establish with the Parliament whatever shall be necessary for composing their present affairs. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 523, and Whitelocke, Memorials, p. 486.) In Latin with English translation. The first signed. [N. XVII., 103, 104.]

THOMAS BIRCH and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1650[-1], January 10. Preston.—Asking him to represent to Parliament the case of the widows and children of soldiers killed in the Parliament service by which their leases being for their life were determined, as many of the landlords, Delinquents who had compounded, refused to renew except on onerous terms. Signed. Seal. [N. VIII., 35.]

HUGH HORSOM, Mayor, and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1650[-1], January 11. Barnstaple.—Praying that satisfaction and restitution be made to the town for the disbursements amounting to 16,000*l.* incurred by it for fortifications and soldiers for the service of the Parliament during the war. Signed. Seal. [N. VIII., 36.]

DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

The COMMITTEE FOR ANSWERING THE SPANISH AMBASSADOR, &c.

[1650-1, January 15.]—Draft letter from the Parliament to the King of Spain. “By Don Alonso de Cardenas . . . and by many other testimonies it seems clear how great an inclination your Majesty hath with kindness and civilities to oblige the Commonwealth of England. On our part that Royal affection which your Majesty expresseth towards us and our countrymen comes very acceptably to us . . . and is to be cherished from henceforth with all due returns of neighbourhood and mutual friendship. Nevertheless we desire your Majesty and insist that public justice may now at length be satisfied in the case of Antony Ascham our Resident’s wicked murder so much the rather, because after the authors of such a villainy have been duly punished we shall not doubt the sending an Ambassador from hence to your Royal Court, who may open such things as may be no less advantageous to your Majesty than to this Commonwealth. On the other side if we shall suffer that blood accompanied with so many weighty circumstances to pass unrevengeed we know not how to deny to our just God nor to our native country a participation in the crime especially if we should venture another Englishman into a country where he may be assassinated and no man punished therefor.” (See Commons’ Journals, vi. 524.) [N. XVII., 37.] A Latin translation is annexed to the two copies of the King’s letter which are N. XVII., 56; and N. XVII., 65, is a draft with alterations. The first part down to “this Commonwealth” closely agrees with the draft rejected on the 7th, the rest is an addition.

The PARLIAMENT TO DON ALONZO DE CARDENAS.

[1650-1, January 15.]—“The Parliament . . . have taken into their most serious consideration the letters and papers lately delivered unto them by your Excellency on the behalf of the King your Master, and have commanded us in their name to return this answer.

So soon as it pleased God . . . to restore this nation to the liberty and settlement now enjoyed in this present Government . . . it was their care and endeavour to maintain all good correspondence and amity with foreign Princes and States, the neighbours and former allies of this nation and particularly with the great and powerful King your Master for which purpose . . . they dispatched their Resident unto the Court of Spain.

Upon the same grounds the Parliament doth well resent the respect now done them by the King . . . in qualifying your Excellency . . . as his Majesty’s Ambassador here for acknowledging the authority and sovereignty of this Commonwealth to reside in this present Parliament.

The Parliament takes notice withal of the several favours and civilities extended to their Admirals and fleet upon the coasts of Spain by his Majesty and by his officers there in pursuance of his commands. Though the narrative delivered in by your Excellency be differing in matter of fact from what the Parliament hath received from Admiral Blake in his letters”—duplicates whereof are sent herewith—“and the desires of their Admiral thereupon made, the Parliament doth make them their own, recommending them to your Excellency for an effectual answer to be procured thereunto from the King. . . . And that all due encouragement and security may be given to the merchants of this nation in the managing of their trade and commerce.

They take notice further of a firm friendship and good correspondence which his Majesty is pleased to tender unto this Commonwealth, all which is entertained by the Parliament with very good acceptance and they are resolved not to be wanting on their part in expressing the same towards the King . . . with all due returns of amity and respect.

They also take notice how far proceedings have been had against the actors of that horrid murder upon their late Resident Mr. Ascham and do insist that justice be speedily and exemplarily done therein. For which purpose—among other things—the Parliament have thought fit to direct a letter expressly to his Majesty, which they desire your Excellency's care in causing it to be conveyed unto his Royal hands, and have commanded us to deliver you a duplicate thereof.

What your Excellency hath or shall have further to communicate the Parliament hath appointed the Council of State to receive the same and to return . . . the resolution of the Parliament thereupon." Draft or Copy. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 524.) [N. XVII., 38.] The draft as submitted by the Committee and amended by the House is N. XVII., 62. N. XVII., 64, is another draft of the beginning of the letter.

DON ALONSO DE CARDENAS TO SIR OLIVER FLEMING.

1650-1, January 20-30.—Stating that the state of his health prevents him from leaving the house and that he is therefore unable to comply with the order of the Parliament appointing Tuesday the 21st—31st, for his receiving their answer to the King of Spain's letter, and requesting him to inform the Parliament of the same. In Spanish. Signed. [N. XVII., 72.]

List under the hands of RICHARD SYKES and others.

1650[-1], January 20.—Showing the apportionment of 23,566*l.* 1*s.* 1½*d.* between the reduced officers late under the command of Ferdinando Lord Fairfax by virtue of an ordinance of October 10, 1648. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 47; vii. 174.) [N. XV., 113.]

Colonel OWEN ROE and others to the COMMITTEE FOR THE NAVY.

[1650-1, January 21.]—Proposing that the debts due to them from the State be allowed them out of the discoveries they shall make in manner therein stated. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 581.) [N. XVI. 78.]

The PARLIAMENT to the KING OF SPAIN.

[1650-1, January 22.]—"How much your Majesty hath been affected with the heinous murder of our Resident Anthony Ascham, and what hath hitherto been done toward the punishing of his murderers we have understood both by your letters and by Don Alonso de Cardenas. Nevertheless as often as we consider the foulness of that fact which takes away the very means of having or maintaining any commerce at all if the law of Embassy solemn with all nations shall without punishment so impiously be violated, we cannot but with all earnestness again request your Majesty that those parricides may with speed be brought to due punishment and that you would not suffer justice longer to be deferred by any delay or preference whatever. And though we do very much value the friendship of so powerful a King, yet that the authors of so horrid a murder may not escape their condign punishment we ought to use our utmost endeavours. That courteous usage which by your Majesty's command our men have found in the ports of Spain since the injuries put upon us in the port of Lisbon as also your Majesty's good affection towards us which your Ambassador hath of late with much expression made known to us we acknowledge with all gratitude, neither shall it be displeasing to us to render to your Majesty and the Spanish nation like friendly offices if occasion happen. But unless justice be satisfied without delay which we have now long sought we see not what ground of sincere or lasting friendship there can be, which notwithstanding to preserve and to further all free commerce no befitting means or opportunity shall be by us omitted." In Latin with English translation. Draft with Amendments. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 524, 526.) [N. XVII., 39.]

MILES CORBETT and other the Commissioners to Ireland to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1650[-1], January 25. Waterford.—Concerning the state of the army and the enemy and desiring that supplies might be hastened. (Printed in Grey, iv. Appendix, No. 49, p. 82.) (See Commons' Journals, vi. 530.) Signed. Seal. [N. VIII., 37.]

DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES to the PARLIAMENT.

165[0-]1, [January 27-] February 6.—Humbly demanding an answer with regard to his mission, since if he further delays to do so he will incur the suspicion of coming rather to attempt and commence than to complete the business, and that as a pledge of their good will they will stop or at least suspend the sale and condemnation of Portuguese goods, concerning which he had applied to the Parliament by three letters to the Speaker, to which he had received no answer. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 529.) Duplicates in Latin. [N. XVII., 116, 118.]

The PARLIAMENT to DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES.

[1650-1, January 29.]—Reciting their grievances on account of the protection granted by the King of Portugal to the revolted ships and the steps they had taken to obtain redress by reprisals whereby a full reparation and satisfaction may be had both of the public and private losses, "which nevertheless they are not unwilling to receive by other ways agreeable to the honour and good of this Commonwealth . . . when it shall appear to them how the same may be clearly and effectually concluded whereunto they are the more induced by these offers of friendship and amity by you made in the name of the King your Master to the Parliament . . . who desire to be certified whether yourself are sufficiently authorised for this purpose. And that the powers given unto you on that behalf may be produced for the further satisfaction of the Parliament." (See Commons' Journals, vi. 529.) [N. XVII., 105.]

LORD MUSKERRY to [WILLIAM CANDLER], Governor of Macroom Castle.

1650[-1], January 30.—"The Castle being in opposition to my party I thought fit according to my accustomed civilities to summon you to yield me the possession thereof by fair means and on honourable terms, which opportunity if you neglect I will endeavour to come otherwise by it, and acquit my own conscience of the inconveniences that may ensue . . .”

WILLIAM CANDLER to LORD MUSKERRY.

1650[-1], January 31.—“You should do little to the reducing of the place if you did not attempt it with a piece of paper, in which I always expected more lines of terror than in those of your approaches, only I observe you resolve upon this refusal to recover this place otherwise than by fair and honourable terms. I believe I shall as easily acquit myself of the danger as you of the inconveniency. Pursue the ways of honour and safety to yourself, and you teach me my duty, which is to trust myself and this whole action to the mercy of Heaven and not yours.” Copies. [N. XII., 263.]

THOMAS [WALSH, ARCHBISHOP OF] CASHEL, to Monsieur TIRELL, D.D., Superior of the Irish in the Abbey of ARRAS.

1650[-1], January 31. Limerick.—“Things fallen out most untowardly in this kingdom above ordinary expectation, through the faults of some which quitted” it “and others which remain in it, all the passages and tragedies whereof have been by your private and public letters often suggested to the Supreme Council before and in the time of your agency to the Court of France, and yet the current did go so strong for that faction, as th’ other party could not prevail against it, nor your letters make any impression on them. All Ulster is lost, Leinster have not a foot but is for the Parliament, all Munster unto the City of Limerick and only the County of Clare is lost. Connaught is yet sacred and untouched by the enemy, and out of it we yet hope to recover Ireland by a general insurrection of all the Provinces, whose inhabitants are so graveled and yoked by the Parliament, as they are resolved rather to die honestly in the field than live basely at home. If the Cities of Limerick and Galway had submitted themselves unto those which desired the command of them, they had been lost as other cities and places are. Our new Deputy for Ormonde is my Lord Marquess of Clarickard, of whom I may not yet complain, for he is not in government but since the 24th of December and there are hopes of his doing well. My Lord of Castlehaven is Lieutenant-General in Munster and in the field with a very considerable party of horse and foot. My Lord of Muskerry and Mr. David Roch, son and heir unto my Lord Roch, have a good party in the west of Ireland, Sir John Dungan, Captain Scurlock, Hugh mac Phelim and others [are] with a good party in Leinster. I hope this summer to be off or on, pray for us there hard.” (See Commons’ Journals, vi. 564.) Copy. [N. XII., 262.]

The PARLIAMENT to the AMBASSADORS TO THE STATES-GENERAL.

Same date.—Heads of Instructions. 1. You are to repair forthwith to the present Assembly of the States-General at the Hague and deliver them your Credentials, and also to the States of the several Provinces, if they shall be convened, and you find it be to the service of the Commonwealth to do so.

2. You are to signify to the States-General that the Parliament have thought fit to send you as Ambassadors Extraordinary to let them know that though this Commonwealth have had but too much cause given them to desist from their former endeavours to grow up into firm and near union with that State yet to give a clear proof of the sincerity love and goodwill which this Commonwealth bears to their neighbours of the United Provinces and to show how acceptable the endeavours of the States of Holland to hold a good correspondence with this State have been to the Parliament, the Parliament have thought fit by you to tender the friendship of this Commonwealth to the States-General and to let them know that the Parliament is not only ready to renew and preserve inviolably that amity and good correspondency that hath been anciently between the English nation and the United Provinces, but are further willing to enter into a more strict and intimate alliance and union with them.

3. You shall represent to them how much the interests of England and the United Provinces are one, and how great an influence for good or evil the union or disunion between them must needs have upon the true Reformed Religion.

4. You are to make known to them that the Parliament is very highly sensible of the horrid murder committed upon Dr. Dorislaus, and if any of those murderers or accessories be known or found yet abiding within their jurisdiction, you are to press for justice against them and for all right to be done, and satisfaction given on that behalf to this Commonwealth.

5. If any person shall (in original draft "Whereas there is one Mr. Dowell a Scotchman that takes") take upon him the quality of Resident Ambassador or Agent there from the Scots' King usurping the name of the King of Great Britain, and endeavours to be received by the States-General in that quality, you are to declare how much the same is derogatory to the honour and rights of this Commonwealth, and therefore you are to do your utmost to hinder the same; And if such person shall have audience in that quality before your arrival by the said States-General or any of the Provincial States you are to deliver your protest against the same, when you shall judge most convenient.

6. You are to perform all usual civilities to the public ministers of friendly or allied States there.

7. You shall apply yourselves to remove all misrepresentations of the Parliament and affairs of this Commonwealth, and shall from time to time by writing, printing, or otherwise declare the true state thereof, and endeavour to preserve a good understanding between the two States, and lay open the obstructions that have or may hinder the same, and make demands of just satisfaction for past grievances, according to the instructions you shall receive.

8. You shall have due regard to all such things, as may concern trade and commerce.

9. You are to pursue the present instructions and such as you shall receive, as necessity or advantage shall require, and shall frequently keep the Parliament or Council of State apprised of your proceedings. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 535.) Draft with amendments. [N. XVIII., 71.]

Captain WILLIAM HARDING to Captain GEORGE BISHOP.

1650[-1], February 28. Weymouth.—“I am informed by a gentleman . . . out of France that there are great preparations upon the King’s interest to land soldiers in the West of Cornwall, and that there are 28 sail of ships with 4,000 soldiers near ready . . . who are to come along with Sir [Richard] Greenfield, who is appointed their general, and there is one Harris or Harrison of the West of Devonshire or Cornwall, formerly in the Parliament’s service, their correspondent, that is to give them inlet, and hath made a party in those parts to join with them.” Seal. [N. The MARQUESS OF CLANRICKARD to the EARL OF CASTLEHAVEN.

1650[-1], March 2. Portumna.—“Being upon my way yesterday morning to Athlone as far as the new fort, and having given order for the securing of that passage, . . . I received a despatch from Father George Dillon newly landed at Galway and with him one Monsieur St. Catherine, whom he calleth ambassador from the Duke of Lorraine. They have brought good supplies of money and overtures of large assistance, if we can agree, and a strong fleet at sea, and his letters and others from the Commissioners importuning my speedy repair to Tyrrelawe, I have turned faces about and will go from hence to-morrow to Tyrrelawe, though this weather doth somewhat pinch my teased constitution. This treaty being likely to be of matters of great difficulty and high concernment, it is necessary I should have the assistance of the ablest judgments and rightest affections. If your Lordship have a few days to spare and make a start to Galway it will be much of satisfaction to me, and perhaps your Lordship may thereby purchase a child’s portion to carry back with you.

I have appointed a rendezvous of all my Connaught horse at Clonfert the 22nd of this month, only three troops sent to Sligo to make some diversions that way, and I am confident they will be about 500 effective horse. What posture they will be in then in Leinster to join upon any design, or whether your Lordship will be in a condition to stir about that time I speedily expect to know. The enemy is drawing strongly together about Killbeggan, but I cannot imagine what design they can have with their labour and spoil of horse, the Shannon, I presume, [being] very sure against any attempt they can make, and so having much of trouble and business on me I must hastily conclude.

Postscript.—“I have heard nothing yet of your Limerick ambassadors. I hope they have taken better resolutions.” (See Commons’ Journals, vi. 564.) Copy. [N. XII., 264.]

The ENGLISH AMBASSADORS to the STATES-GENERAL at their Audience.

1650[-1], March [20-30.]—"The Parliament . . . well knowing by the antient and successive treatyes and leagues of amitye betweene England and the Netherlands, as well before their restitution to their libertyes as since, and by the many and notable assistances given unto them, and sometymes received from them against the enemyes of each other that there hath alwayes bin a firme union and constant entercourse of freindshipp and reall affections betweene England and this state.

And withall, considering that the defence and ayde against forreigne enemyes, and the free entercourse of trade and traffick,—the common interests of states—, that first combined them in this happy league, doe still continue with the accession sythence of the profession of the true reformed religion and of the just libertyes and freedome of the people of equal concernment unto both, more then formerly.

And that God, who at first appointed unto all people the bounds of their severall habitations, by situation, likenes of manners and dispositious, commodities arising by sea and land, shippinge and otherwise, hath not only inabled them to bee more usefull unto each for the mayntenance of the common interests then to others, but seemes likewise in those regards to putt a necessity uppon both to desire and effect the good of both.

And finding by long experience that breaches sometymes occasioned through misunderstanding have alwayes produced damage unto both, and likewise regret and impatience till reconciliation, as if made for meet helps they could not bee well alone.

And further, observing that the signall blessing of Almighty God hath ever accompanied the actions of each, undertaken for their welfare wherby great additions of happines have bin derived unto both, for which they are bound ever to give thanks to God, and were noe doubt taken into the consideration of the high and potent lords of Holland, in their late good and acceptable endeavors for the continuance of a freindly correspondency betweene the two states.

As therefore they have cause from hence, soe the Parliament accordingly doe desire that this pious and strickt confederacy and league of amitye, derived from their ancestors unto them, may from themselves bee transmitted unto posterity, if God soe please. And such is the sincere love and good will, which the Commonwealth of England beareth unto their neighbours of the United Provinces, begotten and conserved upon the grounds before expressed, that they are willing to enter into a more intimate alliance, and neerer union with them then formerly hath bin; wherby a more reall and intrinsecall interest of each in other, may bee contracted for their mutuall good.

This, the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England, doth by us, their ambassadors extraordinary, declare and make tender of to you the high and mighty lords, the States Generall of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, and hath given us full power and authority on their part to bring to effect. And they have chosen this as the most seasonable tyme to acquaint your Lordshippes herewithall, when you are mett in this great and extraordinary Assembly to consult, as they suppose, matters of highest importance to your state, and which hath bin occasioned by remarkable acts of Divine Providence, and likewise when the Commonwealth of England, through the infinite goodness of God, is in soe peacable and settled a condition under the present government, and freed in soe great a measure as now it is from enemies abroad.

And although great alterations of government, how good and just soever, have alwayes bin accompanied with various and sinister constructions, tending to the disadvantage of the state concerned, wherof wee know the Netherlands have had experience as well as others, nor can it bee otherwise expected, because those without are not soe fully acquainted with the grounds and causes therof, and by reason of the severall interests, relations and dependeneyes involved therein; yet considering the place and persons where and to whom wee now speake, and the declarations of this state made at Utreect, the 23rd of January, in the yeare 1579, and in this place, the 26th of July in yeare 1581, they thought it not needfull to bee particular upon this subject.

My Lords, in the severall and successive mutations of the affaires and conditions of the Netherlands, the treatyes and alliances betweene England and them, have alwayes bin continewed, and with the greatest expression of affection from England when this state hath stood in most need. And upon the present alteration in England, soe happily by the blessing of God ordered for the common good, your Lordshippes may see cause to continew and improve them to the neerest conjunction, a foundation being therby layd of making them more durable and advantagious then formerly, when they depended upon the uncertayntyes of the life, alliances, change of affections and private interest of one person.

My Lords, yow see the Commonwealth of England—notwithstanding the many discouragements they have found, and just cause given them of laying aside the thoughts of any further motion in this kind—have begun to you and in matters of highest concernment to both, led therunto—such is the mercy of God—not out of necessity but choyce. This, their good will, deserves all acceptance on your part, with whom it now rests, and will, they doubt not, produce resolutions answerable and tymely, and whatsoever issue it shall please God in his wisdom to give, they shall alwayes have the satisfaction of haveing done what befitted them, and what the wellfare of the true reformed religion, and the other great and common interests of both states obliged them to doe." Concerning ourselves we would have you rest assured of our sincere affections to the welfare of this state. We desire that you would with all convenient speed appoint Commissioners to treat with us. i. Colonel PLUNKET to the [Roman Catholic] ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.

1650[-1], January 3. Brussels.—Lord Taaffe sends to you the Abbot of St. Catherine from the Duke of Lorraine, with a considerable sum of money, and promises of future supplies of more and of ammunition, arms, men and officers. None is more willing or better able to defend you than this Duke, who, in the presence of Father Dillon and me, assured Lord Taaffe that he would venture his treasure, his life and his estate, in regaining that part of the kingdom which is possessed by the enemy, if you call upon him unanimously to your assistance he protests that he will settle religion in that kingdom in as ample a manner as it is exercised at Rome. The Abbot of St. Catherine is one of the best gentlemen of Lorraine, and one of the Duke's Privy Council whom he esteems very much. If he return with satisfaction the Duke will effect that before the end of next summer your enemies will be dispossessed of their several holds in that kingdom. The Duke will be able to do it, for he is a wise prince and very rich. He wants neither good counsel nor commanders. He has a good army and the best horsemen in the world. He ordered Lord Taaffe to prepare a good magazine for the muskets, cannon, ammunition, etc. which he intends to send to be in readiness against the Abbot's return. He is also preparing ships for war to be sent with the first mission. If you encourage him, you will have 50 sails before the end of March. Abstract. [N. XII., 260.]

ii. LORD TAAFFE to [the IRISH ROMAN CATHOLIC ARCHBISHOPS].

Same date.—All I advise your Graces is not let slip his offered protection, for no other Prince in Christendom is either willing or able to assist you. You will therefore do well to direct the persons committed to your charge not to neglect so unexpected a blessing, whereby they may secure their religion loyalty and fortunes from their present dangers. I have procured such assistance from his Highness which I send by my uncle George. Abstract. [N. XII., 260 end.]

States-General . . . and do propound that the amity and good correspondency which hath anciently been between the English nation and the United Provinces be not only renewed and preserved inviolably, but that a more strict and intimate alliance and union be entered into by them, whereby there may be a more intrinsical and mutual interest of each in other than hath hitherto been for the good of both.” Read in Parliament July 2nd being No. 5. THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

1651, April 1. (Sic, but not completely drawn up till the 3rd, as it refers to a paper dated April 3-13.)—Order reporting that in pursuance of the Order of February 4th the Council prepared a paper of demands in six Articles containing what they conceived to be requisite to be agreed unto on the part of the Portuguese previous to any further treaty of peace which paper (No. 1) was delivered to the Minister on February the 12th and at the same time a paper (No. 2) was delivered of the charge the Commonwealth had been at (214,640*l.*) in reference to their demands in general made in the fourth Article, as the same was certified from the Commissioners of the Navy.

That at the same time they received from the said Minister a paper (No. 3) containing three preliminary demands. Upon the receipt whereof they signified to him that the Council expected an answer to their six demands before they returned any to the paper received from him.

That the said Minister on February the 13th returned a paper (No. 4) replying to the six demands together with a paper (No. 5) of redemands of the charge of the Portugals (amounting to 900,000*l.*) which his answer to the fourth Article refers to.

That the Council finding therein nothing of satisfaction to their said six demands they sent him a second paper (No. 6) on February the 15th, in which they declared they were not satisfied. And they appointed the same Committee to meet with the said Minister and in conference to give reasons (No. 7) why the said papers were unsatisfactory. And also ordered that the State of fact of all the transactions at Portugal should be drawn up by Dr. Walker upon conference with Mr. Vane and with the Generals of the fleet there, which was accordingly done, and the said State of fact (No. 8) delivered to the said Minister and also the said reasons.

That at the same time the said Minister, after many verbal discourses delivered a paper (No. 9) to the said Committee, which was reported to the Council. And thereupon a third paper (No. 10) was sent to him on February the 25th declaring that the Council was not satisfied with his answer in that paper, and insisted upon their former demands.

That the said Minister on March the 3rd returned to the Council a paper (No. 11) as an answer to their third paper, upon consideration whereof the said Council, not finding satisfaction to their demands to the end no occasion or colour might be taken by him either to make ambiguous or insignificant answers or to draw the business into length upon pretence of difficulties that were not, on March the 6th sent him a paper (No. 12), explaining what might seem dubious to him in the first paper of demands and also showing wherein what he had yet offered was not satisfactory.

That on March the 10th the Council received from the Minister two papers (Nos. 13, 14) for answer to their last, in which there was an agreement in effect to the first, third and sixth Articles of their first paper but conditioned that the whole were agreed within fifteen days. But as to the second, fourth, and fifth—which were of greatest consequence—that to the second was not fully satisfactory, and those to the fourth and fifth to as little purpose as the former.

That therefore on March the 12th the Council sent him a fifth paper (No. 15) showing more at large why his answer to the second fourth and fifth demands remained still unsatisfactory, and gave him also such an answer to his three preliminaries as they conceived them capable of, having hitherto given no answer at all to them.

That on March the 18th the Council received from the Minister a paper (No. 16) in answer, containing at last an answer to the second Article of their first paper as explained in the fourth paper, but still under condition that the whole was agreed unto within 15 days, but as to the fourth and fifth offering nothing that was yet satisfactory.

The Council thereupon on March the 22nd sent him a sixth paper (No. 17) and received one (No. 18) on the 25th containing expostulation and not satisfaction.

They have therefore thought fit to report the whole to the Parliament, and to offer in one paper (No. 19), the first, second, third, and sixth demands with his answers that seem to have given satisfaction unto them, and in another paper apart the fourth (No. 20) and fifth (No. 21) demands with all his answers to them which considered in particular or in any result to be drawn from them all do not offer to the Council the satisfaction which they have thought fit to insist upon. All which they submit to the consideration and judgment of Parliament.

The report being prepared April the 1st the Council thought fit to signify their intentions herein to the said Minister (No. 22), that if he had any further matter to offer before the Report it might with the former be offered to the consideration of Parliament. As answer to which the Council received to day a paper (No. 23) dated April 3-13, the copy whereof is also herewith presented, with the Council's opinion that he hath not yet satisfied the fourth and fifth demands, and that as to the fifth demand to which nothing is said of further satisfaction in this paper there are many cases of great losses of many persons of the best affections to the Commonwealth which fall within that Article, which deserve very much commiseration, and which the Council is of opinion ought to be satisfied by the King of Portugal, to which he hath yet offered nothing satisfactory. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 556, 558.) (All these papers except No. 8 are in this volume numbered thus 1 = 130, 2 = 127, 3 = 131, 4 = 132, 5 = 128, 6 = 133, 7 = 146, 9 to 18 = 134 to 143 respectively, 19, 20 and 21 = 129, 22 = 144, 23 = 145. The articles (No. 1), the explanations (No. 12), and the conclusion of No. 15 are printed in full in Commons' Journals, vi. 558, 559, from the last of which the three demands of the Portuguese Minister appear.) DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1651, [April 24—] May 4.—In answer to the paper of the Council of State brought to me on May 3rd, new style, I declare that the state of the treaty is now such as allows at present neither of the name nor nature of a Truce for as much as Truce or temporary Cessation of Arms is only agitated in the commencement of treaties, at the end of which we have arrived, as far as relates to disputed points therein, since I have finally satisfied all the demands and conditions of the Parliament by my consent to and approval of all and singular the six articles. It remains therefore that the treaty thus concluded be completely finished, and be confirmed and subscribed by both parties, which I am ready to do, and this done, I undertake, in the name of my King that on the day when it shall be made known at Lisbon by the Parliament's care and diligence—if they so please—the first and second of the said articles shall begin to be put in execution, and shall be completely carried out in a few days, from which day in like manner shall begin the complete cessation of arms which by this peace shall be illimited and perpetual. The remaining four articles shall be put in execution within such necessary and reasonable space of time as may be agreed upon between the Parliament or Council and myself by an amicable agreement to be inserted in the treaty. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 568.) In Latin, with English translation. [N. XVII., 126c, 151.]

DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

[1651, April 30–May 10.]—The Council of State having given me to understand that the Parliament expects from me a more clear and positive answer, I answer that having understood that the Parliament was pleased to vote all my answers to the six Articles were satisfactory, and that there only remained to declare in what time and manner those promises should be fulfilled which I had made to the Parliament I now further say, that if it shall please the Parliament by our mutually signing these six Articles to conclude a peace by adding thereunto the Articles of Commerce I shall by all means endeavour to give the Parliament content in these particulars of the time and manner wherein full performance is to be made, and shall in the interim pawn my head and person for his Majesty's putting in execution all and every of the six Articles, as I have already promised and do now again promise, which I trust may be a sufficient encouragement to send away to Portugal some prudent person with the news of a peace signed by the Parliament and myself, the conclusion whereof may fill all the Englishmen there and all the Portuguese with a huge joy. As for the other Articles of Commerce or Trade—which mutatis mutandis may be the same or the like as those agreed upon in 1642, whereunto it seems to me the Parliament hath said they will add some few more—in regard these are not properly Articles of Peace but only of Commerce I am now prepared to confer about them with the Parliament or Council of State, and shall not easily dissent from their opinions knowing the propension of the King and myself to favour the English merchants therein, and I am not ignorant that his Majesty is desirous with affection and industry to promote their trade by all honest and possible means. Now as I have heard that some are of opinion that these Articles of Trade do appertain to those of Peace also, I therefore easily assent that we proceed to treat upon them, being ready to sign as we shall agree, before any ship go hence with the tidings of peace to Portugal, that the absolute and perfect certainty of peace may at once and altogether not by intervals of time arrive there, since it was for a peace I was sent hither expressly. For should any messenger arrive in Portugal with tidings of a cessation of arms for six months only, leaving his Majesty in suspense, although neither he nor myself can have any doubt of the sincerity of the Parliament, yet if I should stand blamed for having proceeded in that manner how I should clear myself I know not. And whereas it may be pretended by some that trade would flow in the interim of a six months' cessation as a pledge of peace between us, those six months would rather serve the merchants to draw away all the goods they have from Portugal, than encourage them to send any more thither, which would do more hurt than good unto the trade that would follow the peace. This I remit to the prudence of the Parliament and Council, and therefore beseech the Parliament to depute some chosen members to treat with me upon this particular of Articles of Commerce, which may be done in few days and signed by both parties together with the six Articles of peace already agreed upon. DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES TO THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

1651, May [11-]21.—“ I confess ingenuously that I had a great desire to be able also to assent to all those things which are contained in the last paper of the Parliament . . . as I have amply and without exception consented to the six articles. . . . But since in earnest I dare not do this, though I am most willing, it is not without sense of grief that I forbear to do it, and that I am compelled in this case which hath happened beyond my expectation to recur unto the pleasure of the king my master, assuring myself his Majesty is so propense to peace and to the Parliament that he will very speedily send me his last commands to satisfy those last desires of the Parliament, wherunto as I dare not fully assent so neither do I dissent. And for this purpose I earnestly beg time to certify the king . . . in what state the present treaty stands and to receive his Majesty's answer." . . . In Latin, with English translation. [N. XVII., 159a, 155.]

The SAME to the SAME.

Same date.—“In regard I cannot be certain whether I shall obtain the leave I ask of the Parliament to recur unto the pleasure of the king, . . . I thought it best to send in this my second paper, that thereby it may clearly appear unto the Parliament I have done as much as in me lies.

For love of Peace and of the Parliament . . . I answer clearly and expressly to the point above this second way. That I do give my consent to all the Particulars that are contained in the last papers of the Parliament and Council of State, for as much as concerns the execution of those things which are comprehended in the first and second Articles, and the six months' Truce; provided that the persons who shall be set at liberty or to whom shall be made restitution . . . shall give a convenient caution to the king my master of surrendering their persons and all their goods restored in the same state they were in before such restitution in case peace be not concluded within the time prefixed. And that this condition . . . may yet be more subjected to the judgment of the Parliament I leave it to their arbitrament whether they will by any private writing—if they so please—secure me this shall be done or whether it shall be inserted into the treaty of the Six Articles. I ask moreover, that from the day these Six Articles shall be subscribed trade may flow freely on both sides, and the truce of six months begin from that very day wherein we shall begin to make restitution according as is agreed in the two first Articles.” (See Commons' Journals, vi. 573.) In Latin with English translation. [N. XVII., 159c, 156.] (This and the previous paper are both dated May 21, vct. styl., but this must be a mistake for new style, as the translations are endorsed as read on May 13th.)

The COUNCIL OF STATE to DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES.

DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1651, May [15–]25.—Understanding that the Parliament was not satisfied with my two last papers, because there is nothing more desired by me than that I may make an end of this difficult affair, “I have resolved to go in person to the king, my master, that I may give him an exact account of all that hath been done hitherto in this affair, and that I may personally allege unto his Majesty the weight and moment of those reasons whereby his Majesty may be moved to finish this peace and to assent unto the Parliament's desires,” . . . as “it may be necessary that his Majesty's counsellors hear from me by word of mouth what I can be able justly to oppose and reply if they shall allege any reasons to the contrary. . . . For this purpose I thought it necessary to make my mind known unto the Parliament and Council, and at once to desire their safe conduct for my going into Portugal and for my return, which I hope will be speedy.” . . . (See Commons' Journals, vi. 575.) In Latin with English translation. [N. XVII., 159b, 158.]

DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES to the PARLIAMENT.

[1651, May 20-30.]—Desiring that if the Parliament cannot grant his requests, they would at least allow him a longer time for preparing for the journey and voyage. In Latin. Seal embossed. Endorsed “Opened May 28, 1683, per me Jo. Nalson.” [N. X., 6a.]

MARY [LADY] AYSUCE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

[1651, May 22.]—Enclosing petition. Seal. Enclosed :

The said petition.

Stating that her husband Sir George Ayseue had petitioned against the Bill for making the river Wey navigable from Guildford to the Thames, that the matter had been referred to a Committee, to which Sir George was summoned, but public business had him prevented from attending and he had now sailed in command of the fleet to Barbados, and praying that consideration of the matter be deferred till his return or else a committee be appointed to hear evidence on his behalf. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 577.) There is also a proviso written on parchment apparently to be added to the bill for compensating Sir George for any damage to his wharf at Chertsey. [N. VIII., 52.]

DOM JOÃO DE GUIMÃRAES to the PARLIAMENT.

1651, [May 23-]June 2.—“When I asked a safe conduct to go for Portugal and to return . . . I thought I had done the Parliament a service, but receiving my Passport for going only, without leave to return . . . I am afraid that I have either expressed myself ill, or that I do not well understand the Parliament, and for this reason I beg leave not to make any use at all of the said passport, but rather to continue and to conclude the treaty of peace, for which purpose it seems to me precisely necessary that I have an authenticated copy of such votes as the Parliament hath passed concerning peace . . . and to the end I may consent to what the Parliament demands my best ground must be a certainty of a future peace, which happily may be found in the votes aforesaid. If so, the Parliament shall not doubt of having what they ask about the execution of the two first Articles and security for the exact performance of all the other four. Wherefore I beseech the Parliament also to vouchsafe me a copy of their other intended Articles of Peace, for if they be only such as were formerly about Commerce—mutatis mutandis—I hope we may immediately conclude a peace, or that I shall accept of cessation offered for six months, being then assured there can nothing hinder a happy peace to follow.” (See Commons' Journals, vi. 578, 579.) In Latin with English translation. [N. XVII., 160.]

The Examination of JAMES, DUKE OF RICHMOND AND LENOX.

1651, May 24. Whitehall.—“Being demanded whether the Letters now produced unto him of these severall dates viz. 16 June 1646, 5 July 1646, 4 August 1646, 1^o October 1646, 8 October 1646, 15 October 1646, 2 November 1646, all of them dated at Newcastle, the first word in every of them beinge Richmond, and each of them signed Charles R. were sent to him the Examinant by the late Kinge, for answere sayth that hee doth thinke they were the letters of the late Kinge to him this Examinant, and doth thinke that they were sent to him, and that they were found in a box belonginge to him this Examinant. Upon the letter dated 4 August 1646, beinge demanded whoe that trusty bearer was and what were his instructions spoken of in that letter sayth that hee nether remembers the bearer nor his business. Upon the letter dated 1^o October 1646, wherein are these words: ‘I am very well pleased with any new friendshipps which you have, or can make, for it may make mee have a better opinion of them but not worse of you, as hopeinge that you might convert them in case they were not right and knowinge that you cannot bee deboished by them,’ the Examinant beinge demanded what those new friendshipps and whoe those persons were ther intended, sayth hee conceives it to bee intended of some civillities the Kinge might bee informed that this Examinant might have received from the Scottish Commissioners here.

The Examinant beinge demanded to decipher the cipher in that letter sayth that he cannot readily doe it, and beinge demanded whether ther were a cypher betwixt the late Kinge and him or noe, sayth that he remembers not, and beleives that there was none. Upon the letter dated the 8 October 1646, beinge demanded whether he had not sent the late Kinge a letter, and what that letter did concerne, sayth, that hee beleives by the remembrances in that letter that hee the Examinant might send a letter, but cannot certainly say hee did. Upon the letter dated 15 October 1646, beinge demanded whether William Murry was with him, the Examinant, and the substance of his despatch to him sayth that hee doth not remember that Mr. Murry was with him, and beinge asked whether William Murry did not bringe him that letter sayth that hee doth not remember whoe brought it, and sayth farther that he doth not remember or beleive that anythinge was imparted to him by or from Mr. Murry. Upon the letter dated 2 November 1646, beinge demanded what that freedome was for which the Kinge ther thanks him, sayth, that hee cannot say positively what the Kinge might meane by it, and beinge asked whether hee did impart any advise or opynion to the sayd Kinge, which might occasion that expression of thankinge this Examinant for his freedome to him in the letter beleives he might speake his sence to the Scottish Commissioners in generall concerninge either what was then in agitation or like to bee, to this purpose wishinge that the Kinge would enlarge himself as much as might bee to give satisfaction to what might bee desired in very greate condiscentions.

Being shew'd the letter dated at the Hague 9-19 September directed thus, For my deare Cosen, the Dutchess of Richmond, and signed Elizabeth hee beleiveth it to bee the letter of the Queen of Bohemia, but sayth hee saw it not till yesterday that the same was shewed him before the Councell, saveinge that hee thinks hee might have a sight of it by the officer whoe came to search his house att Christmas last.

Havinge heard the examination of Mr. Cooke read to him and beinge demanded whether Mr. Cooke was with him aboute the latter end of July last or any time the last summer at his house called Cobham, sayth, that hee remembers not of Mr. Cooke's being ther then or at any other time, and beinge demanded positively to make answere whether Mr. Cooke was with him or noe, sayth that he was not with him, nor did impart to the Examinant any such thinge as is mentioned in his information. Beinge demanded whether hee was acquainted with the intention of the risinge in Kent 1648, and moved to bee a generall for the Kinge ther before the same risinge sayth, that he was not knowinge of the same risinge before the same was, nor was moved to bee generall for the Kinge in those parts.

This Examinant beleiveth the letter dated 9 June 1646, and sign'd John Ashburnham now shew'd unto him and directed to him was a letter directed to him by Mr. Ashburnham and found amongst his this Examinant's papers.

Beinge demanded whether he hath a pardon under the Greate Seale of England, sayth that hee doth not knowe, and beinge demanded whether hee hath taken the Engagement appointed to be taken by Authority of Parliament desires to bee excused at the present from givinge answere to it." Signed "J. Richmond & Lenox." [N. XVI., 73.]

The following papers contain the several examinations and confessions of THOMAS COKE of Drayton in Shropshire made on March 31st and in April and May 1651, the whole of which were reported together from the Council of State on May 28th. (See Commons' Journals, vi. 579.)

They are here entered under that date and numbered according to the numbers in the Journals and are given the titles under which they appear there. All those mentioned in the Journals are here except No. 7, the Duke of Buckingham's letter, and No. 9, the King's Instructions. The letter with a decipherment is in the Tanner MSS. vol. lv., Nos. 88, 89; and is printed in Cary, Memorials of the Civil War, ii. 418.

The several examinations and confessions of THOMAS COKE Esquire, taken in the month of April 1651, containing 18 leaves and one page.

THOMAS COKE to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1651, March 31.—Petition. Showing "that your petitioner having not long since voluntarily and foolishly made an escape out of a messenger's custody, and not rendered himself according to the time prefixed stands now by Act of Parliament attainted of treason, and ought thereby to suffer and forfeit as in case of treason. Neither hath he anything legally to plead for himself why execution should not be laid upon him according to the said Act. He doth humbly cast himself and all relations that can belong to a person of his quality at the feet of the Parliament, humbly begging that by the intercession and mediation of this honourable Board . . . the Parliament, who are masters of their own acts, may be induced to suspend the execution thereof, until . . . this Board shall be fully informed of your petitioner's state and condition. He confesseth he hath formerly adhered to an interest in opposition to this Commonwealth, not out of any malignity but according to the principles which he had received, for which he perfected a composition, and since it hath pleased God to cast upon him some fortune by the death of his elder brother he hath desired to spend his days in quietness and submission to the Government under which God hath put him, and to that purpose he hath prosecuted another composition with effect for his delinquency according to such rules as are prescribed by parliament. And if this honourable Board shall think him a fit subject for mercy and pity he doth not only promise all future fidelity and submission to the present government, but will give all obligations that are possible for the true performance thereof. And as an earnest of his service he offereth herewithal an ingenuous discovery of his own condition, and of his whole knowledge at present of public affairs, desiring that his clearness therein may make some sort of expiation for his past crimes, and may be accepted as some testimony of his future intentions . . .

He doth therefore humbly implore your mediation for a reprieve of that sentence passed upon him by the Act." Copy. [N. XVI., 72, No. 1.]

Second Paper.

1651, April 1.—Concerning the Western Counties. "About a twelvemonth or more agoe there was a meeting at Salisbury by two gentlemen of each of the sixe counties, concerning an association in the King's businesse. I thinke Sir Humphrey Bennet was there and Sir — Courtney for Hantshire. Colonel Strangways one for Dorsetshire, Sir John Arundell for Cornwall, Sir Henry Carey and Sir Edward Seymor I think for Devon. The names for other places I cannot tell. There they agreed upon an association, and wordes or some other signes of sending from one to another are agreed upon. The Lord Beauchamp was designed for some commaund, and one Jonathan Trelawny, a Cornishman, to bee major generall. Other officers he cannot name. Cornwall then offered to furnish three thousand foote, if the other five counties would provide fifteen hundred horse. That body to meete at a rendezvous in Devon and so to march. But they all desired to have some forein force landed if possible for encouragement, and to that purpose, sent Mr. John Seymour to the King; who was sent by the King out of Scotland to the western partes againe before Christmas last. This deponent knowes all this not of his owne knowledge, but by relation from the said Mr. Seymour only, who further told this deponent upon his returne to London, that if the King should fortune to give any discountenance to the present army and they should heare from him, they would speedily bee in armes in the west, but without perticuler orders from the King they would not stirre. This gentleman lay in Middle Row in Holborne when I was in towne last terme, but acquainted me with his discourse att my chamber. The Scotch commissioners at Breda desired the Lord Roberts might be lieutenant generall of these western counties. They surmised some hopes of Plymouth by that meanes. The sayd Mr. Seymour told this deponent likewise, that the sheriffe of Barkes,—as I remember, his name was Boys,—and the sheriffe of Wilts would endeavour their interests as sheriffs to raise the Posse Comitatus if there were occasion for that purpose.

One Captaine Canes, a Dorsetshireman told this deponent in Michelmast Terme last, there was some designe upon the garrison of Poole. The Duke of Bucks sent word out of Scotland in wryting, and by word of mouth. Doud—who brought it—told this examinant that one Captaine Stanley had beene there with him about some designe upon Langhor (Laudguard) Fort in Essex, and was come into England againe. But this deponent knoweth him not. Hee wrote further that they were all united in Scotland, and the army would consist of twenty-five thousand men well officerd, that they would take each souldier forty dayes' provision, and make ther way into England or else fight the English army. If they had any succes they expected some part of England should rise and appeare speedily, especially about London or the southerne partes for a diversion of the parliament's army. This was the effect of the paper with that formerly related, which paper Doud brought out of Scotland, about February last. This deponent knowes no more of the businesse wherein the Lord Chandos was mentioned then what was written last night. He beleeveth Sir Henry Lingen hath some interest therein because the Lord Chandos when he was with him asked this deponent whether he knew such a man. There is one Colonell Worden in towne expecting to engage with the first opportunity in the King's service. He did ly nere the Palsgrave's Head in the Strand, and with him Colonell Vernon and Colonell Crumwell upon the same score. They lodged sometimes in Milford Lane at one Mr. Ainsworth's house, and also where this deponent was taken as he hath hearde.

The same day the rising was in Norfolk, one Curtis, Colonell Blake's man, came to this deponent's chamber, and told him of that rising. He, being angry at him, desired him to goe downe againe to appease it if he could. Which I thinke he did for I never saw him since. This deponent knew not any person engaged in that commotion. He heard from that Curtis that Sir Henry Felton and Sir Raph Skipwith were forward men in the King's service there, but he knowes neyther of them. There is one Mr. Cob in Yarmouth, a great confidant of Colonell Blake's for delivery of that towne. In Cambridgeshire Mr. Ayliffe, Mr. * and Mr. Chicheley looked upon as persons that prepare and will engage in the King's service upon occasion. The later is only knowne to this deponent. In Staffordshire, Egerton, Worsley, Bagot, and Bowyer. One of them—hee thinkes Bagot—hath some designe upon Stafford and upon Coventry, in both places upon the affections of some persons within the townes. Hee had intimation hereof from Colonell Worden not long since. In Derbyshire, Mr. Shalercrosse will bee the forwardest man to appeare if there bee occasion, Mr. Fitzherbert, Sir Wolston Dixie, Mr. Eyre and perhaps Mr. Gell with the high sheriffe. These two last counties should have assisted Lancashire and Cheshire upon any rising when the King or any army should appeare. Mr. Shalercrosse hath good interest in the miners where he lives, and would speedily get men together, lives in the borders of Cheshire.

Mr. Henry Howard, the Earle of Arundell's sonne, Mr. John Russell, and Sir William Compton he beleeveth are engaged in the Lord Gerard's designe for Kent, Surrey, and Sussex.

In Sussex, Mr. Middleton looked upon as a person that will engage, as also Mr. Lenknor, Sir Edward Ford and Mr. Gunter.

In Berkshire, Mr. William Hinton hath manangement of affaires.

The westerne men expect the parliament should withdraw their forces, or a great part of them, northward.

They waite for that advantage to get into a body.

Lord Belassis was designed generall of the horse for the northerne counties, and lookt upon as a gentleman very able and forward to serve.

* Blank in MS.

The wiser and lesse rigid part of the Scots at Breda did privately agree to receive in all interests as well papists as others and to that purpose this deponent beleeveth have emissaries in England, but he knoweth them not.

Sir Abraham Shipman came as this deponent beleeves from Scotland to the Lord Beauchamp. I met him since he came to towne at the Swan on Fish Streete, and he told me he was to goe into the west and was returned before his taking.

When Doud went into Scotland, being in Michaelmas Terme last, I gave him seventeene pounds and ten shillings, as I remember to buy him a horse and to beare his charges to the water's side at one Mr. Pennington's house in Lancashire. But Mr. Booth was the man that was to see him conducted in those partes, to whom I directed a letter to that purpose by the name of Francis Blith, and Doud at his returne told the examinant, he had bene with Colonel Booth and had his helpe in the busines.

My Lord Chandos desired to know where he might send to mee. I desired him to leave letters for mee at one Stanton's house, a barber in Ivy Lane, by the name of Thomas Dutton and I would send thither for them. He sent a note to mee by that name to come to his lodging to speake with him, but I never met him since, for I came not to towne in a fortnight after he sent the letter."

Endorsed "Mr. Cooke's second paper delivered in from the Tower by the Lieutenant to me 1^o Apr. 1651 in a letter and paper sealed up." Marginal summary of each clause in same hand. [N. XVI., 72, No. 2.]

Third Paper.

1651, April 2.—"The letters showed to mee on Sunday night [March 30] at the Committee of Examinations, directed out of Holland to Mr. Glew or such name to Doude's House were I beleeve sent from my Lord Byron to Colonell Worden or some other of his correspondents here. You may by this discover it. They are written in a water which appears not till it bee held to the fire neere warme coles, and then may plainly bee read. What is written in inke signifyeth little or nothing. I know intelligence is weekely conveyed in that manner from thence and betwixt those persons. If the letters bee still there it may speedily be tryed. I once received such a letter so written from the Lord Byron to have procured some money from hence for the Duke of Yorke's subsistence at the Hagh, but I returned no answeare nor ever had a penny of money upon any publicke account, nor endeavoured the procuring any. There was a little glasse full of the same water in my studdy att Gray's Inn upon a shelve.

One Doctor Lucy, a divine living in Hantshire, was in towne here last terme, solliciting for money for the Duke of Yorke and did the like in the countrey, I beleeve, but what he got I cannott tell.

The paper written in cypher and shewed to mee the same night as from the Duke of Bucks, if the same were intended for mee and Captaine Bishop may bee sent with it to shew mee, I shall tell him and direct him how it may bee opened and discovered, and allso where he may have some other cyphers and papers if he thinke them materiall, which have layne hid a long time, yet perhaps may bee usefull.

The presbyterians had not long since a designe upon Hull to bee effected by the meanes of Mr. Stiles who was minister there and kept much correspondence with the ministers of London. Hee, upon Sunday in the afternoone, should have drawne all or most of the soldiers to church over the water,—he being a person much followed in the towne and preaching at that church on purpose in the afternoone—. During the sermon time with connivence and assistance of some in the towne the gates should be surpris'd and opened for a party ready without to bee let in. This I receaved from Alderman Bunee.

Upon discourse with Tomlinson, I found he had a great opinion of this Stiles and of the affection of many people in Hull, though wee had no talke of the particulers. But perhaps it may bee a discovery worth the prevention if it bee not allready prevented. It was intimated to me from Bunee, as if the Lord Fairfax should have some hand in disposing the men without.

There is one Mr. Weston, a papist, which I did not remember yesterday, engaged in the surprise of Langhor Fort with Captaine Stanley as the Duke wrote mee word. Hee lives in Surrey. And there are some soldiers now in the fort in pay by them against the time of surprise to bee then upon centery, but how many I cannott tell.

Curtis, Colonell Blague's man, told mee upon the last rising in Norfolke there would fifteen hundred foote and fifteen hundred horse appeare, which were in readinesse, and that they had one hundred barrells of powder, and much money att commaund, and that he receaved this information from Captaine Kitchinman, who was an actor therein. I never heard of one hundred men that appeared there yet. What the remainder signified, Captaine Kitchinman best knowes, for I know nothing thereof. The mention of so large a number betrayed mee into this miserable snare by sending toward Scotland to give the advertisement. Whether the remainder bee in any condition now to rise is wholly unknowne to mee, being totally a stranger to all persons there, and to all affaires others then what I have expressed. When Blague came over with mee, he brought blanke commissions under the King's great seale for sheriffs of those two countyes of Suffolke and Norfolke, but how hee disposed them I cannott tell. He spake of Sir Henry Felton for Suffolke and one Mr. Paston for Norfolke, if he could get them to accept the same. But whether they did or no I cannott tell. The busines of those countyes was wholly referred to him.

For reiteration of the busines concerning the Lord Chandos, hee sent a man, a country fellow living neere Stanes, into Scotland which Doud met there. That man acquainted the King from the Lord Chandos that there [were] four thousand men in readinesse in some partes westward,—it was guessed about Gloucestershire—for his service. The Duke of Buckingham wrote to mee to acquaint my selfe with the particulers from the Lord Chandos. Whereupon I went to his Lordship and acquainted him with what I had received. Hee seemed very shy, not acknowledging nor altogether denying any such thing, I being a stranger to him, neyther did I presse him hard upon it. Hee desired only to know how and by what name he might send to mee. I gave him Thomas Dutton, to bee left at the barber's in Ivy Lane, whether he sent a note for mee to come to him shortly after. But I, being then out of towne, receaved not the note untill a good while after. Was since at his lodging in Covent Garden, but could not meeete with him." Signed. Endorsed "Narrative of Mr. Tho. Cooke sent to me by the Lieutenant of the Tower 2^o Apr. 1651 at night." Annotated like the last. [N. XVI., 72, No. 3.]

Fourth Paper.

1651, April 3.—"In one Mr. Hardie's chamber in Coney Court in Gray's Inn . . . if a loose boord bee taken up under the window, there will bee found the instructions that I receaved from the King att Breda, wherein how the designe was then layd will appeare. And I shall give an account of what hath beene done by mee in every particuler or by my knowledge.

There bee also some cyphers, one with the King himselfe, another with Duke Hamilton, and with Dr. Frazer in folland. Another with the Duke of Bucks. By these cyphers you might know weekly, if I were in a possibility to bee thought to act any thing, the secret intelligence of all designes whatsoever, for I know they would all write mee word.

I employed one Major Hall att Royston to sollicite the people in those partes to joyne with the King, if there were occasion. He hath layne there and sometimes in towne here ever since I came over, and assured mee hee could have one thousand men in those partes att three dayes warning. They only want armes and ammunition, whereof they have little, especially of the latter. The designe is to seize upon the publique magazines on occasion att Hartford and Cambridge; but the countrey people have very many armes in their houses. Hee was to bee made lieutenant-colonell to Mr. Ayliffe, I mentioned yesterday. There is one Squire Caesar, Mr. Gulston, Mr. Randall, and others I cannott now call to mind, will bee ready to assist in those partes. One Charles Baxton, an inkeeper in Royston that is active in stirring up the people to that purpose and one Thomas Turner, living likewise in that towne, goe up and downe the countrey to that end.

In Northamptonshire I employed one Mr. Kinsman, formerly an auditor of the exchequer, to give intelligence of those partes. Hee lives neere the Lord Mountague and hath assured mee of his great fidelity to the King, and that hee will stirre when there is occasion, but is very cautious. There are armes still left and ammunition in the countrey-men's houses there. Hee hath employed one Col. Griffin, formerly a colonell in the King's army, to sollicite and prepare the people in the countrey and rayse them in those partes upon occasion. Hee did lately reside att Sir Edward Griffin's house att Dingley. Sir John Norwich will appeare.

The sayd Mr. Kinsman hath likewise by my direction employed one Major Knightley in Huntingdonshire to negotiate affaires there, who is there now, as this deponent beleeveth, but hath received no account, only in generall Mr. Kinsman told him as he came up last to towne that the people were forward enough to rise there upon occasion.

The towne of Northampton will bee very forward to declare for the presbyterian interest, if the Scots get any advantage. Sir William Harmer and Sir Charles Compton have good interest among such as have affection to the King in the towne. Captaine Barnard and his brother inclinable that way. Sir William Fleetwood lately come to live in that towne likewise. Alderman Gifford, good interest among the people. I know all the exchanges in Christendome are layd by Alderman Bunce for returne of moneys for the service of the designe now in hand in Scotland, and by correspondence he drawes from all other marts to Roterdam and Amsterdam."

(Then follow particulars about Foreign Affairs to the same effect as in No. 5.)

"I employed one Mr. Rogers in Surrey to try the affections of the people there. He gave me an account of Sir Francis Stidolph, Mr. Hiliard, Mr. Evelyn, [and] others I cannot at present call to mind, that would appeare upon occasion, and that the countrey people are very heartie for the King, but being so neere London could not appeare in a body unlesse they had some garrison. They spoke of Windsor Castle or else somebody to repaire to in Kent or thereabouts. I spake with yong Mr. Bish att my first coming over about the other end of the countrey where his father lives. He told me his father and he could have a 1,000 men in readinesse there upon the least opportunity, and that the people were mad to bee in armes, if there were but the least tumult to give them occasion. There is one Mr. Price of Esher in that countie, a man of good interest among the people that there was hopes of engaging but not actually done. Sir Richard Onslow would appeare fierce upon the Presbyterian score and also upon the King's, but he was thought to be so totally guided by the Presbyterian Ministers that the Cavaliers were not willing to trust him. I went last year into Sussex to Sir Edward Ford to enquire after the said Mr. Ford. I mentioned concerning the Lord Fairfax's business. He told me of the persons I mentioned in my former paper that would engage in that end of the countie, as also my Lord Lumley to my best remembrance, and Colonel Norton formerly Governor of Portsmouth for the other end of the countie. He thought his cosen Ashburnham was able to give the best account with whom I never spake. Before the Lord Gerard had the command for Kent and these counties, I had a perfect list of the modell of an armie in Kent for all officers and members which I received from Colonel Thornhill from Rotterdam, but since he had the command, it is lost and gone. Perhaps upon recollection I may remember many other names. There were set downe the names of all that would assist in person reputation and purse. Duke of Richmond was desired to bee Generall but refused, thereupon Gerard nominated. Lieutenant-General, Lord Hopton or Lord Ashley; Major-General, Colonel Hamond (?); General of Ordinance, Sir William Compton; Colonels, Thornhill, Culpeper, Hardes, Boys, Sir Ambrose Monyngs, Sir Anthony Auger, Crispe in the Isle of Thanet, Sir George Stroud, Sir Henry Penton" &c. Signed. Endorsed "Fourth paper of Mr. Cooke 3 Ap. written in Whitehall." Annotated as before. [N. XVI., 72., No. 4.]

Fifth Paper.

[1651, April.]—"I was . . . about February last att the Palsgrave's Head, where I met with Colonell Worden, Colonell Vernon, yonger son of Edward Vernon of Sudbury, Colonell Crumwell, Capitaine Fitzherbert and Mr. Doud. Mr. Shalerosse should have beene there, as Vernon said, who said Shalerosse would engage. There it was agreed that Worden should goe into Cheshire, Vernon and Fitzherbert into Derbyshire and also Shalerosse, Crumwell into Staffordshire, and should stirre up the gentlemen mentioned in my former paper, the King's friends in those parts, to get what armes they could privately and to bee in a readinesse to joyne with Lancashire upon opportunity. Every of the counties was to meete at a rendevouz the night appointed with such horse as they could make, and to surprize the Cheshire countie troope if they could, and the next night to meete all att a rendevouz upon an heath neere Warrington, there to joyne with the Lancashire forces. 'Sacrifice' was agreed to bee the word to passe from one to another in the meane time, and likewise till they met at that place.

Severall pistolls and powder in barrells have beene sent downe by carriers in boxes and barrells, under the name of sope and other goodes, and are still, as this deponent beleeveth.

There is one Smith, a servant to Mr. Withering's at the posthouse in Bishopsgate Street, who hath often taken out letters directed to Doud and other persons, and not brought them to the Councill of State, though the whole letters were seized if the maile were but once opened. Mistress Doud knowes this very well. There came severall letters to mee the last yeare by the name of George Edwardes and other names. There lay a warrant at the posthouse a long time to apprehend such person as came for those letters. Notwithstanding this, Smith severall times sent those letters to mee by Doud. I perused them and sent them backe againe to the same place. I have been told Allibond would doe the like or some courtesies of the like nature at the other office, but I know not of my own knowledge.

The Lord Culpeper came from Russia to the Hagh where he now is, and brought eyther in money or credit a great summe with him for the King's service. The King hath ordered him to issue 1,000*l.* to such purposes as I shall appoint for his service here in England, and sent mee word that hee had so done. But I never yet made use of one penny thereof.

I met once not long since in Covent Garden, at Sir Joseph Seimour his chamber, the Lord Beauchamp, Sir John Arundell, Colonel Richard Arundell, and Sir Joseph Seimour. Att another time with all the last mentioned persons, the Lord Arundell of Warder, and one Mr. Pile, that lives in Hantshire, a chirurgeon, who lookes after some busines of that nature. I told the Lord Beauchamp that the King expected that if he had any succes against the parliament's army, that England should then appeare in some partes for his restitution, and particulerly the westerne counties—wherein he hath commaund from the King to bee generall of the horse—. Hee expressed all readinesse, as the rest did, to serve the King, and all resolved to send downe what armes they could privately, and to bee ready when there was occasion and as they had orders from the King. My Lord Beauchamp sent since to speake with mee but I met him not, hee staying in towne but two dayes. Sir Joseph Seimour went about three weekes since downe to my Lord from this towne with an account that I shewd him out of Scotland of the affaires there, and Sir Joseph is since gone downe into Devonshire and those other westerne counties from my Lord Beauchamp, upon that occasion to prepare those counties to a rising. I drew a commission at Jersey for the Lord Beauchamp to bee generall of the horse for those westerne counties, but whether it were sealed or delivered to him or noe, I cannot tell. I beleeve he acts now by vertue of it.

Cornwall, the most considerable countie in the kingdome to begin a commotion in respect of Syilly behind, and three partes of the county surrounded by sea. The people generally disaffected and full of armes, and some of the smaller portes will assuredly upon the first rising revolt. What men they can procure at Sylley may bee landed any night from thence. The landing place intended for them is the towne of Pensants neere the Mount. There will meeete them att the time appointed foote enough with armes to make a body, the avenues of the towne being easily made defensible against any partie of horse untill the countrey comes in. There is little store of horse in the countrey; their strength consistes all in foote. Another party att the same time will rise about Saltash Trematon and Foye, to get to the borders of Devon, there to make good the passes untill horse can come to them out of other countreys. The first fort aymed to bee gotten there is Hellford. The gentlemen that will engage are Sir Charles Trevanion, a man of great power among the people, Mr. Arundell of Trerice, and his sonne, Colonel Richard Arundell, Sir John Arundell of Lanherne, though a papist yet much beloved, John Arundell of Seyny, Blacke William Godolphin, Mr. Noy, Sir Chichester Wray, Mr. Pendarvas who lives neere Pendennis Castle, and hath an eye upon that place. He [is] now with Sir Richard Greenville at St. Malo. Sir Richard Greenville is much desired there by the countrey.

The people lesse active, but which will immediately repaire to a body are Mr. Edgcumb, Mr. Covinton, Mr. Scowen, Mr. Rashley, Mr. Richard Prideaux, Mr. Tremaine, Mr. Polewhee, Mr. Bassett and many others. The sollicitors upon this designe are principally one Captaine Spry, and Mr. Piper. Mr. Gewen is a man much looked upon there by the presbyterians.

When the King of Scotts was at Breda last before his journey for Scotland, money being the principall want, the designe was to sell the Islands of Sylley to the Hollanders and to deliver them possession. The bayt was faire for the Hollanders as the most commodious place for trade in this part of the world. The ends of sale were first for money, secondly, to keepe the Hollanders out of the English portes, having that place of their owne to goe to, thirdly, to set enmity betwixt the Hollanders by that meanes and this commonwealth. Sir John Berkeley and myselve attended the Prince of Orange severall times about it, who endeavoured to promote the bargaine on the King's behalfe, and tol'd us that he thought it would bee effected, the Amsterdammers being very desirous of the accomodation of the place. The occasion of my comming for England when the King went for Scotland left the negotiation with Berkeley. What issue it had, I cannot tell.

When I came over into England, I brought with mee severall letters to bee directed to severall persons for lending money. Sir Richard Page had one to deliver to my Lord Coventry, but he refused to receive it. Captaine Mewes had another to the Bishop of Rochester who lent him thereupon fiftie pounds as hee told mee. The account hee gave mee of the money was that hee had disbursed it in armes and ammunition, which he had lodged in and at a village neere Oxford, against a time for the surprisall of that place.

In Devonshire, the townesmen of Exeter are looked upon as generally well affected to the King, and waite an opportunity to take an advantage of the garrison. Potter, Walker, Colston and Shapcote are leading men amongst them, all for the royall interest.

In the countie, Sir Hugh Pollard, Sir Edward Scimour and all the Scimours, Sir Amcas Ameredith, Sir — Forteseue, Sir Henry Carey, Sir Francis Fulford, Sir — Courtney, Sir James Smith, Sir Thomas Heale. Earle of Bath is endeavoured to bee engaged, and Sir John Christopher neere Barnstaple, etc.

In London, the designe is eyther upon a suddaine tumult or rising to repaire to Whitehall and destroy the Councell of State or parliament, or else if any body appeare neere to repaire in numbers speedily to that. Every house hath armes, and the apprentices and servants are apt enough upon the least commotion to doe any mischeife. The Cavaliers, officers and others, will bee apt to incite them and assist them in the execution of such a designe upon the Councell. It was in designe the last yeare to my knowledge. Sir Richard Page when he was here was looking after some soldiers for that purpose. Captaine Garraway offered to assist. A designe much pressed at the King's court, if ever any rising bee in England, to repaire immediately to Westminster to destroy the fountaine. I have often heard it, and my Lord of Holland blamed extremely for not doeing it when he rose about London in the yeare 1648.

The presbyterian designe is most carried on in London by some of the nobility and principally by the ministers, Calamy, Vines, Jenkins, Crauford, Love, Cawton, Gouge, Case, Fuller.

These correspond with all other in England, as with Dr. Burges att Wells. Ball at Northampton, Angell and White at Leycester, Swetnam at Derby, Cooke late of Ashby, Stiles at Hull, Clegate at Bury, Fowler in Gloucestershire are diverse others. I cannot now remember in all partes. They preach to their congregations according to their intelligence. They are very close in their transactions. They have an intelligencer att Yorke, one Swinburne—I thinke his name is—that main-taines from thence correspondence with Scotland. Titus and Banfeild were lately sent out of Scotland to come for London. They came into France to my knowledge, but whether they bee yet arrived or noe, I cannot tell." Signed. Endorsed "Fifth paper of Mr. Cooke." Annotated as before. [N. XVI., 72, No. 5.]

Sixth Paper.

[1651, April.]—"In London the designe was layd in generall as was mentioned in the last paper, eyther to surprize the Parliament and Council by a suddaine tumult, or else to reparaire to such body as should first appeare neere at hand. The persons imprisoned in Windsor lookt upon, as cheife heads for countenance. The ministers mentioned in the last paper with some others to stirre up the people for them by preaching, praying and intelligence. The citizens to furnish money and assist, that I can call to mind, were Langham, Whitmore, Adams, Pride, Ashwell, Viner, Cropley, Richard Eliab Harvey, or his brother. Sir David Watkins lookt upon as a presbyterian, but not confided in. These and many other names I received from Alderman Bunce who told me that some of these had furnished money, his brother Langham as I remember for one. But Mr. Hougarden, who was sent over on purpose to sollicite the citizens for money, was intrusted for that point. What monies hath beene raysed or returned I cannot tell. He told me he had private tokens from Bunce to goe to many citizens for money, and particularly that he went to Whitmore, but what money was gotten I cannot say.

When Titus came over to Jersey, have brought (sic) a catalogue of many citizens that authorized his negotiations thither, and shewed them the King. I was told there were neere eighty of them, but never saw the list. He then offered the King from them that if he would agree with the Scots he should want neyther men nor money. The intent of his journey being to persuade the King from the presbyterians in and about London to that agreement.

Denzell Holles wrote a long letter of advice to the King at that time, to agree with the Scotts as the only meanes to restore him to his crowne of England, sent it by his cosen Gervas Hollis.

After the agreement, the King wrote to him to invite and require his attendance into Scotland, offered him any place of advantage, particularly the Secretarie's, but he refused to goe.

The ladies lookt upon as active in the presbyterian designe are the Lady Carlisle, the Lady Peterburgh, the former, though in prison, yet kept weekly correspondence by cyphers till the King went into Scotland, with her brother, the Lord Percy, who allwayes acquainted the King therewith, and sometimes mee with his intelligence. His secretary—Mason—hath beene often in England upon that occasion. Hee is now coming out of Scotland as I beleieve. Hee was designed a good while since:

When Doud came last out of Scotland, he brought a letter from the King of Scotts in his owne hand to the Lady Peterburgh. Hee shewed mee the paper sealed, but whether it was delivered or noe, I never since asked Doud; but I verily beleieve it was.

When I came into England I desired letters from the King to the Lord Manchester and Lord Roberts. The secretary told mee the King had written to them already by other hands.

There was one Major Wood, as officer under Massey, that was an emissary into England and out againe for that partie. Where he is now I cannott tell."

(Then follows a passage about Mr. Pryn and his brother-in-law Clarke to the same effect as that in No. 4 below.)

"Tomlinson had bene at Frankfort Mart in Germany, for bookes as he sayd, comming backe through Rotterdam, stayed with Alderman Bunce, who sent by him into England some letters from the King to the ministers of London. Bunce afterwards recommended mee to him by this token: that those letters were crossed at the bottome. He acknowledged the markes, and thereupon entertained discourse with mee most upon the subject of the Lord Fairefax, who was a little before displaced and Rushworth who was then gone downe with the army, and upon some division which might probably happen in the army, upon that occasion. Rushworth, by that discourse, appeared to bee a great confident of his, but the particulers, being now nine moneths since, I cannot certainly depose. Since that time wee were both shy one of another."

(Then follow statements about Mr. Potter, Sir Richard Page, and Mr. Povey more fully given in No. 10 below.)

"This examinant since met the sayd Mr. Povey at the Countesse of Devonshire's house in Bishopsgate Streete att dinner, not long before Christmas last, amongst much other company. Where after dinner, the said Mr. Povey discoursing with this examinant, hee tooke notice to him of a letter formerly brought by Sir Richard Page from the King of Scotland to the ministers of London, alledging as this examinant remembers that these ministers were not to bee blamed that they gave him no better satisfaction in that businesse, and that it was not want of affection in them, or to that purpose." Signed. Endorsed "Sixth paper of Mr. Cooke." Annotated as before. [N. XVI., 72, No. 6.]

Seventh Paper.

[1651, April.]—(The substance fully given in Nos. 3 and 4.) Endorsed "Seventh Paper of Mr. Cooke." Annotated as before. [N. XVI., 72, No. 7.]

Eighth Paper.

1651, April 8.—(The substance of the commencement is fully given in Nos. A, B, and C. It continues):—"Before I came into England I had a designe in writing delivered to mee for the surprize of the garrison of Boston in Lincolnshire. As I remember the forces were to bee brought up in long botes by water in the night, and to bee landed in the middle of the towne, and so to have surprized the maine guard. One Mr. Booth living neere Grimsby was lookt upon as a person to have acted in it. But the Command of that countie being then otherwise designed for the Lord Willoughby the paper was taken from mee againe. The Earl of Lincoln and Rossiter were then lookt upon as persons that would freely engage upon the Presbyterian score." Endorsed "8^o Apr. 1651. Eighth paper of Mr. Cooke." [N. XVI., 72, No. 8.]

Ninth Paper.

1651, April 11.—"The discourse mentioned . . . in the examination of George Thomazon now prisoner . . . betwixt him . . . and this examinant and the manner of their acquaintance—so much of the same examinacion being now read unto him, this examinant—is in substance and to the best of this examinant’s remembrance true. And this examinant saith he comming forth of Holland and arriving at London upon the Munday before the end of Trinity Terme last, went within a weeke or thereabouts to the shop of the said Thomazon and asked for a booke called Tholosanus De Republica of about 12s. pryce, but quicklie after made himself knowne to the said Thomazon by the token mencioned in the said Thomazon’s examinacion, who readilie acknowledged it, and they spent in discourse about an hower in which the examinant made knowne to the said Thomazon the substance of the King of Scots’ agreement with the commissioners at Breda, and their promise of assistance for the restitution of him to his rights here, and that they expected that their brethren of England should joine with them upon that interest, and told him that himself was imployed into England, and entrusted both by the King and commissioners and particuarlie by Alderman Bunce to negotiate their affaires here and to setle a correspondence betwixt England and Scotland. And did intimate to the said Thomazon that the King did looke upon the ministers of London as persons that might doe him a great deale of service upon that interest, and did expect that they should stirre up their several congregacions to joine with him. And thereupon the examinant desired the said Thomazon to acquaint the ministers with the effect thereof. To which the said Thomazon then replied in effect that he thought the King needed not to doubt of the ministers’ good affections, giving this examinant good encouragement that way, speaking likewise of the fasts which the ministers had for the good success of that busines, and spoke particulerli[e] of Mr. Jenkins, the minister, how gallantlie he had behaved himself before a com[mittee] verie latelie and was hum’d up and that himself was behind Mr. Jenkins’ backe al[1] the tyme and that he was banished twenty miles out of towne, and to the examinant’s best remembrance, Thomazon said Mr. Jenkins intended for Scotland and spoke also of Mr. Cala[ny] and other ministers in and about London, their good affection to the said cause, and did acknowledge that he had delivered the King’s letters to some of the said ministers, and spake of Mr. Vines his good affections. And the examinant further saith that Alderman Bunce did shew to this examinant at Rotterdam the copies of the King’s letters to the ministers, which in substance as he remembreth were an invitacion of assistance and his desire of compliance with them. And this examinant saith he doth not perfectlie remember whether he had discourse with the said Thomazon more then once, but saith it was in the inner roome of the said Thomazon’s shop, and in some of those discourses spake concerning the Lord Fairfax, John Rushworth and the armie to the effect by him this examinant sett downe in his former papers sent in to this committee. And further saith that the said Thomazon blamed the Lord Fairfax for laying downe his commission at that tyme. And the examinant conceived by that discourse which he had with him, the said Thomazon, and others, that that partie was not pleased with the said Lord Fairfax laying downe his commission, as conceiving if he had continued generall they might have made some advantage, thereby to have wrought a division in the armie and to have drawne some of them over to the King, and that in case a division had bene the same might have occasioned a rising in the citie and theise parts. And the said Thomazon, speaking of the King’s partie, said John Rushworth had done them verie manie civilities and had bene often in that verie roome—where the examinant and the said Thomazon were conversing—upon severall meetings where they had discoursed verie freelie about businesses, and said Mr. Calamy had great power and influence on the Lord Fairfax, as also the Lady Fairfax. And this examinant did acquaint the said Thomazon with his intention of setling correspondences and that himself was to goe down shortlie for Lancashire to settle that correspondence, and that he did expect to heare there forth of Scotland and if he did this examinant would acquaint[t] the said Thomazon with it. . . . At the time of these discourses his brother Sir John Cooke was living, but dyed shortlie after." Taken down or copied in the same hand as the endorsements and annotations on the other papers. [N. XVI., 72, No. 9.]

Tenth Paper.

1651, April 11. Whitehall.—

“Cornwall :

Colonel Buller in the yeare 1650 in February being then exchang'd publiquely said that hee would never serve the Parliament againe, and did offer to serve the King. Sir George Carteret informed this Examinant.

Major Hammond Arundell of Cornwall, a man that will bee very active upon occasion.

Sir Peter Courtney, Lieutenant-Colonel to Sir Bevill Greenfield, one that is ready to serve upon any insurrection.

Charles Roscarrock, Lieutenant-Colonel, one ready for new action, and one that was formerly in the old service all alonge.

Devon :

Parson Mervin of Okehampton, parson heretofore, a very active man, and now engaged, being mostly a solliciter in the King's designes.

Sir John Acland, a very active man, forward for any engagement, observed by the Kinge to bee his greate friend, and was soe recommended lately to the Kinge by some of the Agents.

Roger Mallock of Exeter, very active and lookt upon as a friend to these designes.

Captain Pinchback was at Jersey with the King of Scotts and Mr. Windham.

Sir Francis Fulford, or his sonn were look'd upon as freinds.

Dorset :

Mr. John Tregunnell, junior, and Mr. Thomas Tregonwell were recommended to the King at Breda as friends, whom he might make use of and who would appeare upon occasion, and since in England. Mr. Nappier, one of Dorset, told this Examinant that they were very good friends for the King's designes.

Sir John Lawrence, the same that is sayd of Tregunnell, a man of much violenee formerly.

Sir John Wilde is lookt upon as a friend to the designes of the Kinge. He turned from a Protestant to a Papist. Dorsetshire generally lookt upon a country well affected to the Kinge.

Sommersett :

The Marquess of Hartford and his sonne are lookt upon as persons of greatest interest for the Kinge in the County of Sommersett; and left to their care, and those whom they should employ as their agents by reason of which hee hath little lookt into that business.

Sir Charles Berkly of Bruton } persons affected and as he con-
Sir Edward Rodney } ceives employed by the Marquess.
Captain Rodney, Sir Edward's brother, came to the Kinge whilst at Breda, and tendered to the Kinge service together with some recommendations of the King's friends in that county, and brought an account of the affections of the county to the King.

He conceives that there is a designe on Dunstarr Castle, because he hath heard Mr. Windham formerly Governor of Bridgewater speake of some hopes of men in that part of the country and hath agents thereabouts. He hath heard somethinge of the Holmes Islands in the river neere Bristoll to serve some designe in those parts, but remembers not anythinge more concerning it att present. For Bristoll, being masters of the field they thought that place would not stand out.

Sir Edward Berkly looked upon as hearty for the Kinge.

Colonel John Tynt was at Jersey with the Kinge of Scotts.

Wilts :

Mr. George Hide was at Bredagh, when the treaty was there, and constantly with the Kinge.

Colonel James Longe, nephew to Secretary Longe; a very active man formerly and depended upon to engage these designes. Secretary Longe told this Examinant oftentimes . . . that the said James would engage upon occasion.

The Seymores generally sway in those parts, especially the Lord Seymore and the Marquess of Hertford.

Sir John Oglander of the Isle of Wight and his sonn John were lookt upon as great friends to the Kinge at the treaty.

Younge Worsely Esq. was in a designe for the escape of the late Kinge out of the Isle of Wight, when he was prisoner in Carisbrooke Castle, and prepared horses to receive him, as soone as he should come over the werkes. Captain Titus layd [horses] on this side of the water by Tichfield for his conveiance. Mr. Dillington told this Examinant that younge Oglander, Sir John's sonn and most of the gentlemen in the Isle of Wight were engaged in the then designe of the surprize of Carisbrooke Castle, and the late King's escape and blamed very much the revolted shippes for not appearinge before the island to give them an opportunity to rise for that purpose.

The Lord Commissioner Lisle's brother was sent from the island to the revolted shippes to come before the island and to land some men in order to the riseinge and escape aforesayde; as he remembers the said Mr. Lisle or Mr. Dillington did acquaint this Examinant with this particular.

Sir John Mewes was alsoe in the same designe, and is now looked upon as a friend for the King's service." Endorsed "11 Apr. 1651. At Whitehall. Mr. Tho. Cooke's further information touching several persons." [N. XVI., 72, No. 10.]

Eleventh Paper.

1651, April 24.—"This Examinant was directed by the Lord Byron and Duke Hamilton att Breda to goe to . . . Mr. John Booth as to a person that had power and interest in the partes where he lived, and as to one they thought had good affections to serve his Majesty, and should be useful for settling a correspondency with Scotland. This Examinant . . . after his coming into England about August last went downe into Lancashire to meete with a person who should have come to him out of Scotland, thinking he should there have met also the sayd Colonel Booth. But this Examinant did not see the said Colonel Booth during his stay in Lancashire he being not then in the country—as this Examinant was informed—. Colonell Worden—as he told this Examinant—afterwards meeting Mr. Booth . . . by accident told him that this Examinant had been in the country to look for him. And thereupon Mr. Booth coming afterwards to London about Michaelmas last one Thomas Doud brought this examinant to the sayd Colonel Booth att the Holy Lambe taverne neere Clement's Inn, where they had some discourse; the particulers this examinant doth not now remember, but there was mention of a passage to bee had for some person to bee sent into Scotland through Lancashire. And, as this examinant remembers, hee did, in the presence of Mr. Booth, aske Doud whether hee would undertake a journey into Scotland, if there were occasion, the sayd Doud consenting thereunto, the sayd Mr. Booth did, to this examinant's remembrance, expresse his willingnesse to doe the King service, and after desired that if this examinant had any businesse or newes to impart to him, that hee would direct his letter to him into the countrey, whither he was then going, by the name of Francis Blith. And when Doud was after sent towards Scotland, this examinant did send a letter by him to the said Mr. Booth, directed by the same name, desiring him in generall,—to this examinant's best remembrance—, to give Doud such assistance in anything as hee could with conveniency, and what moneys hee should furnish him withall, this examinant promised to repay. Doud, after his returne from Scotland, told this examinant that hee had beene at Sir George Booth's house to looke the sayd Colonell, but hee being not there, his sister, Mistress Elizabeth Booth,—to whom, it seemes, Doud had directions from the Colonell to repaire in his absence—, told him that hee was at Warrington, where Doud told this examinant—that hee the next day did meete the said Colonell; who did cyther direct or guide him to one Mr. Bradshawe's house about ten miles beyond Warrington. From whence the sayd Doud went, as he told this examinant, to one Mr. Pennington's house by the water side, with whom one Mr. Shakerley dwelt, that had formerly served the late King in these warres. And that from thence hee went to Workington in Westmorland, and there tooke shipping for the west of Scotland. But whether he had any directions or helpe from Mr. Booth in any of those passages, the said Doud did not relate to this examinant, neyther doth he know anything thereof.

And as concerning the design now said to be discovered in Lancashire and these parts this deponent acknowledgeth that he heard since Christmas last out of Scotland that the Earl of Derby was designed to come into those parts with some forces out of the Island of Man, that Sir Philip Musgrave was sent out of Scotland into Cumberland and Westmoreland to stir up those counties, and that Massey should come in with 2,000 horse out of Scotland to joyne with them and with such other forces as should have been raysed in Lancashire and the partes adjacent, and the design was by that meanes to have completed a perfect body of an armie, and to have given opportunity to all those adjacent partes of England to have resorted to them. Preparations were designed likewise out of Derbyshire and Staffordshire to have come into their assistance. And this Examinant further sayth that the said designe was layd in generall upon the agreement between the King and the Scotch Commissioners at Breda, and hopes and encouragements were then and there given as well by the Presbyterians as the King's partie that some forces might be raysed in those counties, and a messenger was despatcht away from thence to the Earl of Derby in order to preparations for that purpose.

Having been permitted to read the Examination of George Thomazon of Aprill 23^o I well remember that Alderman Bunce told mee att

Rotterdam that he had sent over into England the substance of the Treatie agreed upon att Breda with the Ministers' letters as is mentioned in that Examination." Signed. Endorsed "24 Ap. 1651. Mr. Cook's 11th Examination at Whitehall. Speaks of Col. Jo. Booth and of the Lancashire designes &c." Annotated as before. [N. XVI., 72, No. 11.]

No. 2.

Concerning Colonel John Booth.

(The same in substance and almost in words as the first part of the last paper.) Signed. [N. XVI., 72, No. 12.]

No. 3.

Concerning the Levellers—Dorislau's Death—Colonel Layton—the Lord Finch.

"During the time of his attendance att Court and especially since John Lilburne was acquitted upon his tryall, there came severall overtures from the people that goe under the notion of Levellers, to the King of Scotland, both in France, Jersey and att Breda. The same were transmitted usually in letters from Sir Sackville Crow to the Earle of Cleveland, by him to bee communicated to the King. It was the examinant's fortune sometimes to see some of the letters. But the particulars hee cannott now call to mind, it being so long since, but to his best remembrance, they did containe a demaund from the King of some assurance for a full and generall libertie, or to that purpose, and an offer upon those termes to give him assistance for the suppression of the present power. There was the number of two thousand men mentioned in one letter, as this examinant remembers. It was conceived that John Lilburne had a hand in the letters, and that the intelligence came from him to Sir Sackville Crow. Mr. Martin and one Wildmore,—as the examinant remembers his name,—were lookt upon as persons that together with John Lilburne had influence upon the spiritts of those men. This examinant further sayth that about the conclusion of the treatie betweene the King and the Scotch commissioners at Breda, there came thither one Marston, sayd to bee a leveller, who had escaped out of England after the slaughter of two or three men. Hee was carried to the said King by Secretary Nicholas or the Earl of Cleveland. The King conferred with him privately neere halfe an houre or thereabouts, to what purpose this examinant cannott tell, but the King tooke him along with him afterwarde into Scotland. And this examinant before his departure met the sayd Marston at the Hagh, where, upon discourse, hee sayd that the King had now the hearts of those which hee called the free people of England; that they would fight for him—against the people that reigned here—upon a cleere score, without talking of rigid termes or propositions, or to that effect. But hee did not then appeare to the sayd examinant to bee a person of any great judgment or consideration. And since this examinant's coming into England, hee hath heard nothing more then common report of any persons that drive on that designe.

Concerning the death of Dorislau, the examinant sayth his name was Whi[t]ford that committed the fact, and that he was told by one Robinson, an English preist, who was then confessor to the Portugall ambassador att the Hagh, that the sayd Whitford, being a papist—as the examinant conceaves,—came to him to bee resolved in point of conscience beforehand, whether he might lawfully comitt the fact or noe.

What resolution he gave him, the examinant cannott tell. But the fact ensued. The said Robinson told this examinant moreover that the Portugall embassadour shewed his affection much to the King in that case, for that he was privy to the fact, and caused his doores to bee set open on purpose that hee might repaire thither for sanctuary after the deed done; whither the said Whitford did repaire, and had shelter untill his passage was prepared into another province. From thence hee got to Bruxells, and where hee hath beene since the sayd examinant cannott tell.

Concerning Colonel Layton, this examinant sayth that hee came from Bruxells to Jersey, pretending some businesse from the Duke of Loraine, but what the particulers were the examinant cannott tell. The said Colonell, during his stay there, did make applications to all men of businesse concerning the affaires of England, and seemed very busie and active in discourses and arguments upon all occasions. Some suspected him because he had beene an enemye, others treated him with more confidence. He went from thence to Breda where he was very sollicitous to promote an agreement with the Scotts upon any termes. And this examinant did not observe any person to expresse so much joy and content att the accord as hee did. Very few were satisfied what religion he was of, or rather, whether he professed any at all. He went along with the King into Scotland, and is there now, a very great confident of the Earle of Argyle. Hee keepes the King's signet and is in nature of a secretary to him for dispatch of affaires relating to England, and is the only man that transmitts businesses betweene the King of Scotland and the Earle of Argyle upon all occasions, as Thomas Doud informed this examinant when he came last out of Scotland.

Concerning the Lord Finche's applications in any kind, this examinant never observed that hee did intermeddle in any publicke busines cyther for councill or action. The reason was conceived because hee was not admitted to the King's privy councill after the death of his father, which the Lord Finch expected. But Sir Edward Hyde, who had then great influence upon the yong King, thought his spirit incompatible with their way of councills, and upon that score it was thought the said Lord Finch was rejected. After that time he came seldome to court, unlesse it were for ceremonie, or formall service." Signed. [N. XVI., 72, No. 13.]

Concerning the Treaty with the late King at the Isle of Wight, and Sir John Gell, Mr. Pryn.

"The sayd examinant being required to set downe his knowledge concerning any passages att the treatie . . . att the Isle of Wight saith:

The propositions and answeares together with all publicke transactions are upon record.

For any private driftes or aymes. In generall, as hee remembers, the presbyterians, upon the opening of the treatie, pressed the King without dispute to give in two or three dayes an implicite consent to every proposition, and thereupon they pretended presently to have him up to London, to the parlement before the armie could come southward, which was then eyther in Scotland or upon the borders. And, upon his presence att London and his passage thither, they would have made him beleve that the city of London would rayse an armie under the command of Major Generall Browne, and that other partes of the kingdome would rise for their assistance under the name and authority of the two houses of parlement, which had given life and power to that treatie. And by this meanes they contrived to have settled their owne power, and to have given what law they had pleased to the armie still in the north. The King had as little affection to the presbytery or to the yoke of those propositions as he had to the armie. Some things hee alledged hee could not doe in his conscience, and therefore would not encline to that councill, but drew up concessions of his owne, as large as hee then thought fitt to condescend unto, and sent them up to the two houses by Captaine Titus and upon those concessions offered to come to London. But neyther the commissioners for want of power, nor the two houses would receive these propositions, and thereupon that contrivance fayled and came to nothing.

After the armie was drawne neerer London to St. Albons, the presbyters still deluded themselves with a beleife that the name parlement bore such a sway in the kingdome, and the two houses such authority, that together with the countenance of their owne partie in the city, they should yet bee able to give the law. Neyerth would they beleve the contrary, though the armie had then published a very high remonstrance.

The King foresaw the contrary, knew the spirrits of the cittyzens, and that a rude giddy multitude could not subsist against a formed armie, apprehended equall danger to himselfe in their handes, as where hee then was. Thereupon some about him advised him to attempt an escape. Others of highest ranke, and those which were most neere him dissuaded it altogether. So that in diversity of opinions, the councill was quickly discovered and made impossible, and the King having no other twig left to hold by but the credit and name of the two houses of parlement, was glad to lay hold on that reed which deceived him in the end."

(Then follows a paragraph concerning the design of the Presbyterians to the same effect as No. 6 below.)

"For particuler persons and passages att that treatie which occurre at present, the examinant sayth :

That the Lord Say was of all the parlement commissioners the most inward man with the King, and undertooke most on his behalfe with his interest in the houses. The Duke of Richmond and hee were very intimate, and by him the Lord Say conveyed his intelligence still to the King. Hee was so confident of the successe of the treatie that hee had bespoke himselfe to bee Lord Treasurer, and places likewise for his sonnes and many of his kinred. One Mr. Thomas Temple, his kinsman, had there upon his instance a promise to bee made groome of the bed-chamber to the King.

Mr. Hollis was intimate with the Earle of Lyndsey, and by him conveyed all his opinions and projects to the King. The office of Secretary of State was designed for him; another great office for Mr. Pierrepont. The King was often in conference how he should dispose the offices to please them all.

Mr. Browne had gained himselfe into a very good opinion there with the late King, and was designed for his solicitor in the first place or to such other place of advantage towards the law as should fall. Sir Harbottle Grimstone was lookt upon as one heartily affected to the King, but expected not any preferment that the examinant heard of. Mr. Vines was lookt upon by the King as a person wen to his interest.

Sir John Gell sent thither to tender his service and to desire a pardon from the late King for his former actions. The King gave him something to that purpose under his hand and signett. One Bowring, a servant to the Lord Commissioner Lisle, came downe to sollicite the businesse. What money was given for it, he best knowes.

There was one Clerke, brother-in-law to Mr. Prin, who came thither also to offer his brother's service to the King, if it might bee accepted, which was done accordingly, as the said examinant was told by Sir Edward Walker, to whom hee applyed and who carried him to the King. The same man came afterwarde to the King of Scotland upon the same errand to Breda, and had a letter from the said King to Mr. Prin to invite him into Scotland, as the said examinant was told by Secretary Long. The examinant confesseth hee saw the sayd Clerke at the Isle of Wight and also at Breda, and that hee heard him speaking at Breda what service his brother Prin was both able and willing to doe the King if hee might bee employed, or to that purpose.

When the parlement commissioners departed all from the Isle of Wight to London, the Governour Hammond undertooke to preserve the King's person there against all opposers, but only such as should come with a particuler order from the houses of parlement. Accordingly, when the governour was sent for to the armie, hee left orders and directions in writing to that purpose with the captaines of the trained bands, and with the captaines of all the fortes and other the officers in the Island. The day before the King was taken away, the examinant went to the captaines of the regiments of the trained bands, viz. Sir John Lee and Mr. Dillington, to know whether they and their regiments should defend the King's person in that place in case of opposition. They shewed the examinant the governour's orders to that purpose, and sayd they would, and did also undertake for their regiments, that the greatest part of them should dy in his Majestie's defence. They had appointed a rendezvous to that purpose the next day. But in the morning, the King was surprized and carried away to Hurst Castle." Signed. [N. XVI., 72, No. 14.]

Concerning Foreign Affairs.

"There is one General Carpe—so called—who was with the King of Scotland at Breda, and is now att Bruxells, who did offer,—and he beleeves doth still,—to furnish four thousand men to land in any part of England, if money and shipping might bee provided for their transportation. Money hath beene much pressed from the Duke of Lorraine for that purpose, but he refuseth upon that account, and prosecutes the interest of the papists in Ireland. My Lord Taffe and Mr. Brent are still with him, solliciting for men and money for their assistance. The said Duke did offer to advance 20,000*l.* for that service, and the examinant beleeves hee hath done it. Hee was a principall person that pressed the King to confirme the toleration of religion and the other large priviledges and demaunds which were granted to the papists in Ireland. And when the Scotch commissioners afterwards at Breda pressed the sayd King to declare that toleration and treatie with the Irish voyd, the said Duke wrote a long letter of advice to the King with many arguments to agree and condescend to the Scotts upon any termes and to sticke att nothing. Hee did likewise formerly att his owne cost and charge rayse many men with a designe to have compassed the redemption of the late King's person from the Isle of Wight, whilst hee was. in Carisbrooke Castle, and one Monsieur Romecour, an officer and commander in his armie, partly for his forward diligence in that designe and partly to engage his fidelity to advance the King's service with the Duke of Loraine for the future upon all occasions, was gratified with the patent and title of an English baronett att Breda. Whilst the Duke of Yorke was lately at Bruxells, the sayd Duke of Loraine was dayly with him, solliciting him to goe into the kingdome of Ireland into the hands of the papists there. But his brother sent him a positive commaund out of Scotland to the contrary, and that hee should discharge Sir George Ratcliffe, Sir Edward Herbert, and Secretary Nicholas, who promoted that desigae, from further attendance on him, and that hee should repaire to Paris and abide there with his mother. He pretends that he cannot remooove now out of the Low Countreys for want of moneys, his principall subsistence being the profitts which come by the tenths and fiftenees of such prizes as are taken at sea by such persons as have commissions from his brother and himselve as Lord Admirall under his brother, and who harbour att Sylly, Jersey and Dunkirke where the French King hath given leave to set up an Admiralty Court for adjudication of such prizes and tryall of maritime causes arising thereupon, by English judges and officers to bee named by the said King and Duke of Yorke in such manner as was formerly practiced in the Admiralty of England.

The sayd examinant further sayth that there came to Breda one Duke Wolmar,—as hee remembers his name—, base brother to the King of Denmarke, and delivered to the King of Scotland a proposition in writing which the examinant saw, wherein he proposed to furnish the sayd King with an armie of eight thousand men, horse and foote, out of the upper partes of Germany or thereabouts, all armed, with a traine of artillery and ammunition fitting, to bee brought readie to the water side and to land them in any part of the King's dominions where hee pleased to appoint and afterwarde they should shift for themselves, if threescore or but fiftie thousand pounds might bee advanced, and shipping provided for their transportation. The Lord Hopton, the Lord Gerard, Secretary Nicholas, and generally all those that were enemies to the Scotch interest, were very eager in the prosecution of that desigae, but the money and shipping were not then to bee had, and principally the Scotch commissioners opposed the bringing in of such a great forein force, which then retarded the desigae. But the Lord Hopton is now att Colen very earnest upon the same desigae and courtes all persons he can in those partes to engage. And Secretary Nicholas is as earnest at the Hagh.

One Mr. Armourer, a query to the King, was sent not long since out of Holland into Denmarke to sollicite supplies for the King of Scotland. Three hundred Danes were sent by the King of Denmarke into Scotland with a recommendation to bee of the lifeguard of the King, but the Scotts would neyther entertaine them nor permit them to abide there, whereupon they were sent to the Island of Jersey where they now are.

The Queene of Sweden did mediate very hard and interpose very earnestly betweene the King and the Scotts for an agreement by letters which the sayd examinant saw. Shee sent likewise one Sir William Balladine, a Scotchman, to the King for that purpose. One Captaine Mead was afterwarde sent to Sweden to acquaint the Queene with the progresse of affaires and to sollicite supplies. But the sayd Sir William Balladine resides there, and is very active upon the Scotch interest. He is a servant to the Queene, of her privy chamber. The Scotts are very confident of supplies from that kingdome when they desire it and have lately renewed their ancient league with them." Signed. [N. XVI., 72, No. 15.]

The Design of the Presbyterians, &c.

“The designe of the Presbyterians is if ever they get power into their haudes to set on foote the concessions made by the late King at the Isle of Wight which were afterwards voted in both houses to bee a ground and foundation for a peace, and to restore the parliament to the same condition and members as it had the day of their seclusion, viz. 4th December, 1648. The examinant doth beleve the same to bee true, for that the Scotch commissioners at the treatie at Breda did on behalfe of the English, there presse a consent from the King to confirme ail ordinances of both houses of parlement, consented unto by his father, which did include those concessions, and upon debate of that proposition did expresse themselves at large, that though neyther they nor the English presbyterians did owne or esteeme the present assembly at Westminster to bee a lawfull parlement, yet neverthesse that the former parlement was still in being, not dissolved by the late King’s death by virtue of the Act which did prohibit the dissolution of the same without consent of both houses. And though the members, the 4th of December, 1648, were by force remooved and secluded from meeting and acting att Westminster according to their duty, yet, that force being taken away, they might lawfully come together againe to their places and proceed upon the former session. That the body remained undissolved though the members were scattered. The examinant had many debates with the Lord Libberton and other Scotch upon this point, and did urge the same stiffly as the sense of the presbyterians in England. But because it was not a thing proper for commissioners from Scotland to take upon them to determine the lawes or parliamentary constitutions of this kingdome, thereupon they were contented that all matters relating to England should bee referred to a free parliament to bee called by the King’s writt, when the condition of the kingdome would permit. The examinant sayth that he hath understood the returne of the secluded members to the parliament to bee the drift and opinion of most of the presbyterians in England as a thing avowed by them, from diverse persons whose names he cannot now call to mind. And that since the late King’s death he had once a debate with Mr. Waller of Gray’s Inn, a secluded member, who did upon the like grounds and arguments maintaine the same opinion.”

Information against the Duke of Richmond.

“About the latter end of July last he arrived from Holland att Gravesend on Saturday night . . . —being brought over on a Holland man of warre, commanded by Captain De Liuda—. That on Sunday following in the afternoone he went from Gravesend to Cobham to . . . speake with the Duke of Richmond, where meeting at the doore with a gentleman, whom he supposed to bee an attendant upon the said Duke demanded to speake with his Lordship. The sayd gentleman was of a middle stature, a blacke complexion, with a locke on one side, as the Examinant remembers, and he thinkes he heard him called Washington, who taking notice as if he knew the Examinant, and had formerly scene him in the Isle of Wight, did thereupon carry him into a lower parlour of the sayd house, where after some stay the said Duke came to this Examinant. And after salutations, and some discourse of civility the Examinant to his best remembrance did acquaint him that he was lately come out of Holland where the Scotts and King were agreed upon a treatie at Breda. That the King was gone into Scotland, and that the Scots had given him some assurance that they would assist him in the recovery of his rights in his other kingdomss. That the Examinant was sent into England, to negotiate the raising of forces to joyne with the Scots to that purpose, and that he did repaire to his Lordship by direction from the sayd King and his Lordship's brother the Duke of Buckingham, to know whether he would undertake the command of such forces as should be raysed for that end in the counties of Kent, Surrey and Sussex, to which command the King had designed his Lordship as Generall, if he would accept thereof, and that he, the Examinant desired to know his answer, to the end that the King might bee acquainted therewith. His Lordship to the Examinant's best remembrance seemed strange that the King should have any such opinion of him or should have him in his thoughts for any such employment, who was no soldier nor ever meddled in busines of that nature. That though he had received much kindnesse from the late King, yet that he never had anything to doe with his son or to that purpose, and did desire to bee excused from meddling therein. The Examinant further sayd, to his best remembrance, the gentlemen of Kent, which were beyond the seas, as Col. Thornhill and Mr. Heath, did likewise propound his Lordship to the King as the fittest person and whom they thought the countrey people did well affect. His Lordship sayd he meddled not in any countrey affaires and did desire but to live quietly amongst them or to that purpose. And that Col. Thornhill had come to him upon the last rising in Kent upon the same errand, and that he then likewise refused to entermeddle therein. When the Examinant did presse his Lordship for his particular answer that the King might be acquainted with it, he did positively refuse the same, and did seeme to decline all discourse to that purpose. Admonished the Examinant the danger himselfe would bee in, if he should negotiate or act anything of that nature against the present governement, and what a severe eye there was upon all endeavours of that nature.

The rest of the discourse was concerning newes, the acquaintance that this Examinant's brother and his Lordship had at Cambridge in the University and the Examinant's and his being together att the treatie in the Isle of Wight, and other matters not material to busines. This is substance of all, as neere as the Examinant can possibly call to mind, that passed betwixt them. After halfe an houre's discourse or more the Examinant departed, and never saw or heard ever from the said Duke since, neyther doth he know or hath heard of any correspondencies that hee hath kept up with the King or his brother the Duke of Bucks, or any other since the late King's death, neyther doth the Examinant beleave he ever had any." *Signed. Mr. Thomas Coke's further Information touching several Persons.

"About two dayes after that this Examinant had beene with Mr. Thomazon . . . he repaired to the house of one Mr. Potter an Apothecarie in Blackfryers, to whom Mr. Alderman Bunce at Rotterdam had commended this examinant, as to a very active man in the cittie of London upon the Presbyterian interest, and one that had much acquaintance and correspondencie with the cheife ministers in London, and would transmit all affaires to them as there was occasion. The sayd Alderman further told this examinant that hee need not looke after any other persons in the city of London, for the manngement of affaires there, more then the sayd Thomazon and the sayd Potter for that they knew the affections of most of the citizens and also of the ministers, and which of both would bee most forward to engage upon the Scotch interest. His further expression was—they were both very right men—. The sayd Alderman further gave this examinant a token, whereby he should repaire from him to the sayd Mr. Potter, and he doubted not but the sayd Mr. Potter would thereupon communicate freely with him and give credit to him, this examinant. The token was, as this examinant remembers,—that Mr. Ratcliffe's or Alexander's letters were come safe to his handes—, or to that effect. By which Ratcliffe or Alexander was understood betwixt them,—as the sayd Alderman told this examinant—, one Mr. Drake who had formerly received subscriptions from severall persons in London, for sending of money to the King. And this examinant sayth that he did about the time abovesayd repaire to the sayd Potter from Alderman Bunce by the sayd token, to his house in Black-fryers, where the sayd Potter did acknowledge the token mentioned to him by this examinant ; and thereupon tooke him into an inward room within his shop and entertained discourse with him neere halfe an houre, to his remembrance, the substance whereof was, to this examinant's best remembrance, that he acquainted him, the sayd Potter, with the agreement betwixt the King and the Scotch commissioners at Breda. How that the Scotts did intend to assist the King in the recovery of his other crownes, and how that this examinant was sent over by the King to negotiate some assistance to bee given here in England, and particulerly in London, to the Scotts in their intended designe for the King's restitution ; as also for settling a correspondence betweene London and Edenburgh by private stages, for conveying of intelligence betweene Scotland and London ; and that this examinant was to goe speedily into the cuntry for that purpose, or to this effect. The sayd Potter expressed some backwardnesse in opening himselfe upon the first sign to this examinant, as being a stranger to him. But, to this examinant's best remembrance, did expresse the affections both of the citizens in generall and of the ministers to the King upon the interest hee was now upon. And that the ministers did fast and pray for him in private meetings and for the succes of the businesse, though they durst not in there pulpitts. He did also, to this examinant's best remembrance, expresse his owne discontent and the regret of very many of the city att the present governement, and seemed desirous to have a way of correspondence settled, whereby they might both heare and send from Scotland ; and that this examinant would let him knowe when the same was settled, that letters might bee sent and received. And this examinant promised so to doe, and to come againe to him within a short time to acquaint him with such newes as hee should heare out of Scotland, from whence this examinant then expected to have met a messinger. And this examinant went shortly after downe into Lancashire, but never spake with the sayd Mr. Potter since. But this examinant further sayth that before he went out of this towne he acquainted one Sir Richard Page, —who came over with this examinant out of Holland upon the same businesse—, with what had passed betwixt him, the sayd examinant, and the sayd Mr. Potter, and desired the sayd Sir Richard Page to speake further with him in this examinant's absence, if he could with conveniencie, and get further information concerning both ministers and citizens in particular. And after his returne to London againe, the sayd Sir Richard Page told this examinant, to his best remembrance, that he had at large spoken with the sayd Mr. Potter, and that one

Mr. Hougarden, a Dutch merchant who came likewise over with this examinant out of Holland, had brought the said Potter to the sayd Sir Richard's lodgings at the signe of the Death's Head in the Old Baylie, —where the said Sir Richard then lodged by the name of Mr. Smith—, and that the said Potter had given him great assurance of the affections both of the citizens and ministers of London to the King and to the Scotch designe now on foote, and had likewise spoken very confidently and largely that hee did beleeve there was not one citizen of fiftie in London, that was pleased with the present government, but that they wished the King here againe in their hearts, and the King should find that to bee true if ever there were occasion. But the said Sir Richard did not acquaint this examinant, to his remembrance, with any further particulars of the discourse that passed betwixt them. Only that the said Mr. Potter desired the sayd Sir Richard to conferre with one Mr. Povey of Gray's Inn about the said businesses, whom the said Potter offered to bring unto the said Sir Richard's lodging, alledging that hee would bee able to give full satisfaction in matters of that nature. But whether Sir Richard did ever discourse with the sayd Mr. Povey thi[s] examinant cannott say, for that the said Sir Richard went shortly aft[er] out of the kingdome. And this examinant further sayth that when hee and the sayd Sir Richard came into England, the King sent a letter by them to the ministers of London, directed to Mr. Calamy, Mr. Crauford and Mr. Love and to Mr. Jenkins, as this examinant remembers, to bee by them communicated to the rest of the ministers in or about the city of London. The substance of which letter was, to this examinant's best remembrance, to acquaint the sayd ministers with his Majestic's agreement with the Scots, and with what hee would doe for satisfaction in settlement of religion and presbyterian government here in England; that confidence of their assistance was one motive that induced the agreement; that they would now joyne with him and with the Scots in the endeavour of his restitution; and that they, haveing influence not only upon their parishes but other parts of the kingdo[me], would stirre up their severall congregations, and other places where they had inte[rest] to joyne likewise with his Majestic to that purpose; and that they wou[ld] privately pray for him and his good successe, or to that effect. And this examinant further sayth that the said Sir Richard did after his arrivall here endeavour,—as he told this examinant—, to deliver th[e] said letter according to the direction, and to that purpose sent to one Mr. Cawton, a presbyterian minister who was formerly in prison with him, the said Sir Richard, in the Gatehouse, and desired him to acquai[nt] the said ministers that the King had sent such a letter to them and that it would shortly bee brought to some of their handes. And the sayd Sir Richard further told this examinant that the sayd Cawton had acquainted the said ministers therewith, and that he had received some general assurance of their affections thereupon, but they conceived the sayd letter was nothing but a complement, and could containe nothing but wh[at] they had formerly understood. But whether the sayd letter was afterwarde delivered to any [of] them or noe, this examinant cannot tell, for that he went presently downe into Lancashire, and upon his returne heard of his brother's death and thereupon desisted any further prosecution of that businesse, and the sayd Sir Richard departed out of the kingdome without leaving any account to this examinant thereof.

This examinant further sayth that at such time as he was at Mr. Thomazon, his shop in Paul's Churchyard, he met there with one Mr. Edward Bish, who was formerly knowne to him, this examinant, and after he had discoursed with Mr. Thomazon, hee entertained some discourse with the said Mr. Bish and did likewise acquaint him in generall that this examinant was lately come into England to negotiate some assistance to bee given to the Scotts, and to the King in order to his restitution, or to that effect, but did not acquaint him with any more particulars, as farre as this examinant now remembreth. He told this examinant the great hazard and danger of acting anything here of that nature, and how severe an eye there was over all endeavours to that purpose, or to that effect. This examinant replied, to his best remembrance, that hee was neverthelesse come hither for that purpose, and in the discourse desired to know of the sayd Mr. Bish what his opinion was of the affections of the people in generall to the present government, and particularly in the countie of Surrey, where hee had an interest. Hee replied, to this examinant's best remembrance, that he thought the people about London were generally disaffected to the present government, and would embrace any occasion of rising for the change of it, and particularly that in the part of the countie of Surrey where he lived the people were so distasted and forward to rise, that upon any tumult or insurrection hee and his father could undertake to bring together a thousand men in a very short warning. . . . He hath since several times seen the sayd Mr. Bish but never spoke to him about any publicke businesse."

A. B. C.

(Three papers concerning correspondence and intelligences marked in pencil A., B., and C. Of these B. is the latest in date, but C. is the fullest and is therefore given below with supplementary matter in brackets from A. and B. Of these A. is the "paper given in to the Council this 28th day of May 1651," B. and C. are the "two papers concerning Correspondencies and Intelligences.")

"Being required to set downe what correspondence he hath knowne to bee held betwixt any persons professing to bee of the Parliament's party and those on the other side, or what intelligences or applications have bene made or given to the King of Scotland or any of his party during these late troubles &c. saith:

It is not to bee thought that since the change of Government here, any members should immediately send eyther intelligence or supplies to the sayd King, but if any such thing hath bene the same was done cautiously by third Handes which must bee driven out by relations and circumstances.

The Lord Herbert, now Earl of Pembroke, was since his father's death recommended to the sayd King by Dr. Morley for a person both of affection and will to serve him [A. B. as the examinant was told at Breda by Sir Richard Page the last year]. The recommendation of the sayd Doctor came not without the sayd Lord's privity—as the Examinant beleeveth—. He was thereupon designed to bee Generall of South Wales [A. and of such forces as should be raised there] in this present Scotch Enterprize. But whether he have any such command or authority at present the Examinant cannot tell. Upon discourse at Breda none was thought so fitt. And thereupon the Examinant was directed when he came into England to make an addresse to that purpose, but never could have opportunity. His late forward appearance in the Parliament's service,—as the Examinant hath heard—may perhaps to judicious persons not at all diminish the suspicion.

Sir William Russell of Worcestershire and Sir Gilbert Talbot did use—as the Examinant hath heard—to transmit intelligence to the Court under other names. They are both very great with the Lord Powis, who is inward with the sayd Lord Herbert, perhaps he might tell what he knew, and some of their intelligence might come that way. [B. Sir William Russell was wont to write to the Lord Jermyn, Sir Edward Walker and Endymion Porter, when hee was abroad.]” He “was formerly likewise a great freind of the Chief Baron of the Exchequer. Though they have lately very much differed seemingly, yet it hath bene thought some intelligence might come that way.

Sir Sackville Crow did use to transmit intelligence [to the Lord Cleveland] from the Levellers, as was mentioned in the former paper.

Mr. John Hall, now living at Richmond, formerly a servant to Mr. Secretary Long, and, as the Examinant thinks, to Mr. Cornelius Holland also was not permitted to attend in his place of Clerk Comptroller of the King of Scotts’ house upon suspition of giving intelligence hither. [A. B. Hee was put away when the King went to Jersey.] How justly the Examinant cannot say. But he prosecuted Secretary Long’s Composition here at Goldsmiths’ Hall, where it was finished about a year since by the assistance of Mr. Holland and other freinds, whilst Mr. John Ash sat in the chair, though Long at the same time and also before and since acted as Secretary to the King beyond the seas. [A. B. Mr. William Loving, who is now Register of the Admiralty Court att Dunkirke for adjudication of English prizes taken by such as have Commissions from the King of Scotts’, told this Examinant that he sent some of the money towards the payment of the said Composition.] Perhaps persons that would further his Composition here would probably send him intelligence beyond the seas. Truth may sometimes be discovered out of discourses and conjectures of this nature.

Mrs. Wheeler likewise, laundresse to the late King, was wont to bring letters to him to the Isle of Wight, but from whom the Examinant cannot tell.

There is one Mr. Ogle, a kinsman to Dr. Smart, who was very zealous for the Parliament at the beginning of those times came after to Oxford, where everyone supposed him an enemy, only the Lord Digby, then Secretary of State, tooke him into his particular care. He staid not long at Oxford, but came back to London, from whence he hath been thought to give intelligence ever since. Hee came privately to Breda, staid there not above a day or two, was carryed to the King, and returned again speedily for England. He was supposed an intelligencer, and is now in England. It may bee easily discovered to which of the Parliament or Councill hee makes applications.

There is one Colonel Hauley, formerly of the King’s partie, who hath some neere relation to Mr. Chaloner, a member of the Parliament or Councill. Hee lives much about Whitehall. The Examinant hath heard, as if some intelligence should sometimes come out that way.” [A. B. While “the Examinant was in Jersey there came thither about Christmas last was a twelvemonth one Carter and with him a Chirurgon living in London, whose name the Examinant cannot remember, who were it seemes employed from hence upon some designe concerning the islands of Sylley. So soone as they landed at Jersey they were immediately apprehended and imprisoned, the King having formerly received intelligence both of their names, their qualities and their employments. The intelligence came—as the Examinant there heard—immediately to the sayd King himselfe from some person with whom he kept correspondence by cypher, but who the same is the Examinant cannot tell. In the like manner when one Mosse was employed from hence into France the last yeare, and from thence backe into Scotland, the sayd King had intelligence both of his negotiation and intentions before he arrived in Scotland and of all circumstances necessary, as one Thomas Doud informed this Examinant who came out of Scotland in February last. But from whom or in what manner the said intelligence came, or any other certainty concerning eyther of the same this Examinant doth averre that he cannot further expresse it. He hath heard Secretary Nicholas boast of the good intelligence he had from Derby House, when the Committee sate there, but from whom he never heard him speake, nor knoweth anything particularly therein.]

He heard the Lord Lautherdale say in Holland that he or Duke Hamilton had correspondence with Mr. Henry Darley, a member of the House.

The Earl of Denbigh and the Lord Howard were lookt upon att Court as freinds to the King's interest, and averse to the present way of Settlement, but doth not know of any particular correspondencies kept by either of them with any at Court. Hath only heard that the Earl of Denbigh should keepe correspondence with his mother at the Queene's Court. And hath heard private intimations at the King's Court as if the Lord Howard should have done very good service but knows nothing in particular.

He hath heard much talke likewise of summes of money that should bee sent by the Speaker to Oxford, but knowes nothing of his owne knowledge, and Mr. William Leg, to whom the late King disposed the profitts of the Speaker's lands at Burford, was supposed to trade with the Speaker for that purpose. He hath heard also Mr. Love esteemed as a person much discontented with the present Government and a wellwisher to the King's restitution, but knowes nothing of him particularly.

[B. Touching the Earl of Northumberland hee heard it credibly reported at Oxford that he had an intention to have come thither soone after . . . the Earles of Holland and Clare came thither, if they had liked their entertainment. As he remembers he had the same from Blague, the governor of Wallingford, who went with a partie of horse to Lord Paget's house, to fetch the sayd lords to Oxford. At Breda likewise the last yeare, when the Earl of Newcastle was designed for the command of the Northerne Counties, he heard the Lord Percy murmore as if his brother or himselfe had more command and interest in Northumberland and those partes then the Lord Newcastle, and yet were passed by which he seemed to take ill. The Examinant remembers nothing else concerning the sayd Earle.

Sir John Hipplesley was a man never in any ill esteeme at Court. He was at Yorke and Nottingham at the beginning of the warre. But the Examinant knowes nothing else of him particularly.

Sir John Danvers he hath heard spoken of as a person weary of the present times, and much come off from the Parliament wayes, and as if some intelligence should come that way sometimes, but cannot instance anything in particular. He heard Sir Richard Page speak as if one Wakeman, who hath relation to Sir John Danvers, were one of his acquaintance, whom he put some confidence in, but knowes nothing more in particular of him.]

The Lord Commissioner Whitelocke, when he came down to Oxford with propositions from the Parliament was lookt upon as a freind, and so treated by those that were neere the King. Sir Edward Hyde and others visited him and conferred with him under that notion. And to this day he is esteemed at the King's Court as a person that complyes for his owne interest, and as one that is apt to shew civilities and curtesies to the King's partie upon all occasions. There was a great contest in the Parliament about two yeares since betweene him and Mr. Martin, about the gardianship of the soune and heire of Sir Charles Blount in Berks, supposed to be a recusant, who had been Scoutmaster-Generall to the King and was slayne by Langston (?) at Oxford. The same was then voted to Mr. Martin, who sent the said Mr. Blount over into Normandie att the same time as this Examinant went last into France, where he is bred up in the Popish religion, as the Examinant was there credibly informed.

Colonel Purefoy hath annuity or rentcharge of 200*l.*—as the Examinant thinks—per annum out of the Earle of Devon's estate granted about two yeares since, upon pretence of arreares due to him to bee satisfied out of omissions or undervalues in the said Earle's composition. But there is a tacite condition therein to doe him all freindly favours and curtesies that shall ly in his power, eyther in Parliament or Councell upon all occasions. All this out of Mr. Hanson's mouth.

There was one Mrs. Whorwood, the wife of Mr. Broome Whorwood in Oxfordshire, that was wont to bring intelligence to the late King as well to Oxford as to the Isle of Wight. She was sent severall times of messages, and came in the last Scotch designe, wherein Duke Hamilton miscarried, from Scotland to Carisbrooke Castle privately to the late King &c.

[A. The Lord Cottington had a grant from the King of Lord Say's estate in Oxfordshire, which he protected from all damage and spoyle, so long as the King had any strength in those parts. The Examinant hath often heard at Oxford that his woods were not suffered to bee felled nor his grounds to pay contribution, but the same was still countermanded by warrants from the late King upon Cottington's procurement. The Lord Say had likewise the Lord Cottington's house and estate at Hanworth from the Parliament, which was generally conceived to bee protected by him upon the same termes by a mutuall consent.]” All signed. A. is endorsed “Mr. Cooke's paper given in to the Councell this 28th of May 1651,” and C. is annotated in the same hand as the former papers. B. was drawn up after C. [N. XVI., 74, Nos. 2, 3, 4.]

THOMAS COKE TO SIR HENRY MILDMAY.

1651, May 28. The Tower.—“I was induc'd to the setting downe of the particular names and matters contained in this paper by expresse order from the Committee . . . and to give satisfaction of my cleere and ingenuous discovery of whatever came within the compasse of my knowledge or understanding I chose rather to set downe hearsayes and conjectures of mine owne without distinction of persons then to omit the expression of any thing that had relation to publicke businesse, the judgment being left entire to the Councell to take or reject as they saw cause. But when I was commanded by the Committee to make a review of those informations in respect of the generality and uncertainty of the same I thought fitt to omit very many of the particulars as conjectural only, and so uslesse, and not fit to bee published. Neverthelessse according to the command of the Councell of State this morning, I have here enclosed sent the same papers to you, submitting both myselfe and them together with all other concernements whatsoever to the favour and mercy of the Parliament.” *Holograph. The Duke of Richmond inform'd against by him and confronted before the Councill.

Many in the several counties have been apprehended of whom he hath informed, and many more yet to bee apprehended, which the narrative will particularly manifest.

The King's Instructions to him, discovered by him where it was buried underground, doe singularly testify the generall agencies of designes, particularly the tradeings of the Ministers and the Presbyterian party with the King.

His general schem of the transactions of the King of Scotts' designes hath much confirm'd what wee had before, and our intelligence hath confirm'd in those particulars what hee hath sayd to bee trueth. We alsoe know how to put together many things, which before were but hinted and brokenly suggested, which may prove of good advantage.

The narrative itselfe will demonstrate what farther use is to be made of his discoveries and how farr hee may be serviceable in things which tyme hath not admitted to aske, or opportunity suggested, is left to your discretion to judge." This is in the same hand as the Duke of Richmond's examination and the paper numbered 10 of April 11th, with corrections in the same hand as the annotations in other papers. [N. XVI., 74, No. 6.]

Major-General HARRISON to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1651, August 11. About noon.—“This morning I had an express from Major-General Lambert dated the 9th about 12 at noon within ten miles of Pe[n]reth, and enclosed several letters, which he had taken, and therewith six of the enemy conveying them, whereof two were lairds. He desired my despatch of the letters to my Lord General, which accordingly I have done, but considering they came from Duke Hamilton, Lord Lauderdale and Lord Wentworth, and that the esteem they have of the Presbyterian party—whom Hamilton calls rogues, and Lauderdale thinks they are well rid of—and the pleasure they take in their present pure Cavalierish composition, may help to satisfy those displeas'd friends, I thought it my duty to transmit you copies of them, till his Excellency can send the originals; I being so much nearer than he is. I am confident the Duke speaks their very heart, not knowing the danger of the conveyance as the other did, who writ accordingly; and we expect day by day the Lord will more open their eyes to see the strait whereunto Himself in judgement hath led them, so as the terror of the Lord will prove a sorer enemy to them than we. Major-General [Lambert] will be this night I hope in their rear and close. I am hastening to get the van, and if possible to recover the middle parts of Lancashire before them, for which purpose I shall . . . be this night at Skipton and so toward Preston or Manchester, as Providence shall direct. If the enemy keep constant motion he might be near Preston this night, lying at Kendal on Saturday, which is but about 35 miles distant, and so may a little put us to it to reach him, but I hope the Major-General and I know he will not let their rear go off quietly, whereby he may reasonably and easily clog their march. My Lord Howard's son commanded a troop at Carlisle, whom ere this I had avoided, but that he was his son. He took off with him but twelve of his troop, as the Major-General and Governor of Carlisle inform me, which would have been cashiered, had we had opportunity, and they stay'd. The riddance of such are no loss to us, nor their accession strength to them.” Copy in Dr. Williams' hand. [N. XII., 267.]

The KING to the EARL OF DERBY, Captain-General of the County Palatine of Lancaster, &c.

1651, August 16. Our Royal Camp at Higher Whitney in Cheshire.—“We by reason of our quick march having not until now had time sufficient to send a particular summons to our subjects of that county, by which we might have expected to receive any satisfactory account, and being now resolved to pursue the enemy, whom—by God’s help—we have forced from Warrington, and made him fly before us in a scattering and disorderly manner, together with such other advantages as may offer themselves, and having sent forth a general summons and invitation to all our subjects to join with us in this our present expedition and having in all places where we passed through that county been received with so great joy and acclamations of our people that we cannot doubt of their readiness to assist and join with us at this time—they having so good an opportunity for it— . . . require you to give notice to all inhabitants thereof from sixteen to sixty to appear at such times and places as you shall direct” with their horses arms and ammunition for the defence of the country, the reducement of the few refractory parts thereof and the recruiting of our marching army. We further command you to make no distinction of persons with reference to former differences, but in imitation of us according to their future carriage. For as we do most heartily forgive and forget and also interpret well the supposed disobligation passed to the Crown in such as shall now by their action make good their former professions, so we shall retain no good memory of those—though appearing at that time well deservers—who shall upon such an occasion as this—having means and opportunity for it—be wanting to us and their country so highly injured, and so miserably oppressed and enslaved in their liberties, their properties, and their consciences. We send our Declaration, our general summons to the kingdom and the brief state of our affairs before, at the time, and since we left Scotland, all which—together with this—are to be dispersed and published in all churches, chapels and markets within that county, particularly the towns of Manchester, Preston and Wigan.

And as in our County Palatine of Lancaster, so in the rest of the counties comprehended in your commission you are to pursue the same course hereby prescribed to you. Sign-Manual. Endorsed “Papers Reported from the Council of State, 1 Sept. 1651.” (See Commons' Journals, vii. 9.) [N. I., 39.]

[1651, December 19.]—In Spanish, with English translation. (The last is printed in Peck, Desiderata Curiosa, xii. 1.) The original signed. [N. XVII., 73.]

The SAME to the SAME.

Same date.—In the late King's time letters of marque under certain conditions, one of which was that the prizes should be brought to England and appraised at their true value in the Court of Admiralty, were granted to certain of his subjects upon pretence of injuries done to them at sea by those of the King of Spain, but these conditions not being observed he revoked and annulled all letters of marque already granted, issuing a declaration in 1644 of which a copy is inclosed. And the King being dead and this Commonwealth established, the said Ambassador conceives it just that no use be made of the said letters without a new grant from the Commonwealth, but they, notwithstanding it was never granted by this Parliament, have been continued with great disorder in taking Spanish ships without bringing them into England, the goods being taken into France, Ireland, and Holland and sold there, being a notorious breach of the articles of peace. And though both the grant and recalling were derived from the said King they used the former not taking notice of the latter. The Ambassador therefore desires the Council to revoke all letters granted by the late King against any Spanish subjects, and not to grant new ones without notice to himself or other the Spanish Resident pro tempore; and that the Judges of the Admiralty may be ordered not receive any informations or to examine any witnesses upon any injuries pretended to be done by Spanish to English subjects without acquainting such Ambassador or Resident, whereby a combined remedy may be applied against the great disorders and abuses that may happen hereafter in such cases. In Spanish, with English translation. The original signed. [N. XVII., 74.]

Same date.—Again demanding satisfaction in the matter of the Santa Clara. In Spanish, with English translation. (The last is printed in Thurloe, State Papers, i. 130, where it is wrongly dated 1649.) The original signed. [N. XVII., 75.]

The SAME to the SAME.

Same date.—The King his Master intending not only to maintain a good correspondence and amity with the Parliament but also to make it more strict upon all convenient occasions hath commanded him to endeavour the begetting of it by all possible and convenient means, and being conceived that the conjunction with one accord in some operation of mutual convenience to both nations in Spain, France, Portugal, or Flanders is a point towards the said strict amity the Ambassador desires that some few persons of the Council may be authorised to receive his addresses, which must be frequent and of different subjects and therefore unfitting the whole Council therewith to be troubled, who after debate on the propositions may conveniently report thereon to the whole Council. And though in all State matters the members of the Council observe secrecy yet in particular he desires that such secrecy may be kept in these points as the importance of the business deserves. In Spanish, with English translation. The original signed. (For all these four papers, see Commons' Journals, vii. 64.) [N. XVII., 76.]

JAMES CATS' Speech on behalf of himself and his colleagues to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

165[1-]2, January 1-11.—Whereas on December 29th we delivered to the Parliament the sum of the matters with which we are charged by the States-General we thought it needless to repeat the same. But as our Powers are demanded, we now present them, both the original and the copies. And in virtue thereof we earnestly desire that Commissioners be appointed to whom we may fully deliver all our charge, that so not only the ancient truces may be renewed, but also a closer bond strengthened. That so laudable a work may have a happy end we require of you according to the special commandment of the States-General that all intercourses between the two nations shall remain in the same state as they were left by the Ambassadors of the Commonwealth at their parting from the Low Countries, and that thereupon the Statute of this Commonwealth which was to be brought in practice on December 1st be abolished, or at least suspended, till an order shall be settled for the ensuing treaties between us, that such an excellent business should not be wronged with an ill prejudice in the beginning, but the sooner and happily be brought to a desired end. In the meantime we cannot pass over in silence so many complaints of our merchants and sailors from day to day delivered to the States-General and also to us here, because some of yours assault and rob their ships, taking away their merchandize, and bringing their ships into your havens under pretence of some letters of marque decreed against ours and the French, which the States-General no further with a good mind can behold, unless they would also suffer the undoing and perishing of all intercourses. We therefore require a speedy remedy, and the restoration of all the ships so taken with reparation to the sufferers for their damages and losses. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 64.) In Latin, with English translation, the first signed by the three Ambassadors. [N. XVIII., 122.]

The PARLIAMENT to the GRAND-DUKE OF TUSCANY.

[1651-2, January 2.]—The Parliament desiring to satisfy the Grand-Duke concerning the matters specified in the document delivered by his Resident Amerigo Salvetti on July 3rd, 1651, namely relating to Edward Hall the Admiral of the Mediterranean fleet, because after the said Admiral's return an investigation of his conduct in the port of Leghorn was instituted in the Court of Admiralty both as regarded himself and several others who were examined on oath, and their answers in so many important respects disagree with the allegations in the said document, that the Parliament can as yet arrive at no certain answer to return to the Grand-Duke and considers that the further discussion of the matter does not conduce to the friendship they are desirous of maintaining with the Grand-Duke—they therefore have decided that it is improper to examine into the matter more accurately at present, but rather to take care that all causes of offence for the future be provided against. The Parliament therefore returns this answer: that, as they ask and expect of the Grand-Duke that their ships which shall touch at his ports shall be saluted by his ports and castles in as ample and honorable manner as the ships of any Republic or Prince are, so they will give orders to the commanders of their ships whenever they touch at the Grand-Duke's ports not to do or attempt anything there that may hinder trade, but to behave there in so peaceful a manner, rendering due honours, as to give no just cause for offence or a rupture of the friendship between the Parliament and his Highness. EDMUND LUDLOW, JOHN JONES, MILES CORBETT, and JOHN WEAVER to [the COUNCIL OF STATE].

1651[-2], January 8. Kilkenny.—“The Parliament have in Ireland above 350 garrisons which at present must be continued being placed in port towns, walled citties and towns and in castles upon passes and in the other places of advantage for the keeping of this country in subjection, annoying the enemy and preventing—as much as may be—their conjunction there. Although the Parliament have now in pay in Ireland and in view as ordered already to come over upwards of 30,000 foot, yet in respect of the numerousness of the guarrisons now maintained and of the number of about 100 guarrisons more that must bee placed in the counties of Wicklow, Longford, King's and Queen's Counties in Leinster, Kerry in Munster, Galway, Roscommon, Mayo, Sleigo and Leitrim in Connaught, Tyrone, Cavan, Fermanagh, Monaghan and Armagh in Ulster, as these places shalbe reduced, the said number of forces must for some time be held up and the charge continued. The enemy now in armes are conceived to be noe lesse in number then thirty thousand men, all which—except those in the guarrisons of Galway, Sleigo, Roscomon, James Towne, and some other few small guarrisons—live in woods, boggs, and other fastnesses, yeilding them many advantages in order to their security and livelyhood, wherof they cannot easily be deprived, viz. :—

1. First, The country being almost every where in the counties above mencioned interlaced with vaste great boggs in the midst of which there are firme woody grounds like islandes, into which they have passes or casewayes through the boggs where noe more then one horse can goe a breast, which passes they can easily mainteine, or suddainly break up soe as noe horse can approach them, and being inured to live in cabbins and to wade through those boggs they can fetch prey from any part of the country to releive themselves and prosecute their designes which are to robb and burne those places that yeild our forces subsistance.

2. Secondly, Those fastnesses being unpassable for horse, and into which foote cannot goe without some experience and hardship to wade in water and tread the hogg; such of our forces as attempt to goe are subject by cold to get the country disease which wastes and destroyes many of them and being gott into those places their unacquaintedness with the passes through the woods etc., renders them incapable to pursue and subject to surprises.

3. Their ea to t of strength then because [hes]eiged in them Because they their strength to act their designes without hazarding the losse of the place.

4. Fowerthly, They have exact and constant intelligence from the natives of the mocions of any of our forces, and of opportunities to act their designes upon us. But our forces have seldome or never any intelligence of their mocions from the natives, who are possessed with an opinion that the Parliament intend them noe tearmes of mercy, and therefore endeavour to preserve them as those that stand betwene them and danger.

For the speedier breaking of their strength it is humbly proposed :—

1. First, That such of the contrymen now in proteccion as shall goe out into armes against the Parliament be declared to be excepted from pardon for life or estate.

2. Secondly, That such persons of the enemy's party as are now in armes—except preistes, Jesuites, and other persons excepted from pardon by any rules or qualificacions held forth by the Parliament—and shall, by a set day, lay downe armes, disband their men, and deliver up their armes in soone of our guarrisons, and ingage themselves to live peaceably and submitt to the authority of the Parliament, shall have liberty to make sale of their horses, and to live under the protection of the Parliament, and shall have the benefit of such termes as the Parliament shall hold forth to persons in their condition. And if the Parliament shall hold forth any termes to their prejudice, which they shall not be willing to submit unto, or if they desire to serve any forreigne prince or state, they shall have moneths time for to transport themselves into any of the partes beyond the seas, and shall have liberty in the meane time to transport—and to that end to treat with the agentes of any forraigne prince or state in amity with the Parliament and Commonwealth of England for the transporting of—such regimentes and companies as they can raise to carry over with them for the service of such prince or state and for their continuance in the command of them, being transported.

It is conceived that such termes as these would move most of their leading men to lay downe armes and carry away most of their fighting men which would add much to the security and peace of the inhabitantes here.

3. Thirdly, That guarr[isons] [m]ay be to their fastnesses to disturbe take away their preyes, and that the said fastnesses and [the parts n]ext adjacent to them be layd waste and none to inha[bit them] upon paine of death, to the end that releef and intelligence may be taken from them.

4. Fowerthly, That some thing may be held forth to such of the inhabitantes—as desire to live peaceably and are not guilty of bloud and murther—in order to the security of their lives and encouragement to follow husbandry if it be thought fitt.

For the more speedy lessening of the charge in maynteyning the present forces.

1. First, That the Adventurers upon lands in Ireland doe cast lotts where their lands shalbe assigned them according to the proposalles in the annexed paper, to the end they may presently beginne to plant notwithstanding the warr is not ended, and may plant together, and thereby be strengthened which the Act doth not provide for them, and to the end the Parliament may more freely dispose of the rest of their land to publique advantage.

2. Secondly, That a Pale be made by secureing all the passes upon the Boyne and the Barrow, and the space of ground betweene them making those two rivers one intire line for the better securing the inhabitantes to plant and follow husbandry within the said line—the same being once cleered of the enemy—which wilbe effected by planting a strong guarrison in the fastnes of Wicklowe, and the like for the county of Waterford lying betweene the Sewer which falles to Waterford, and the More which goes to Youghall and many other places—which may be done without much charge and kept without increasing the number of the forces, inland guarrisons being lesse usefull when these lines are made—. Such lines being made, the countrey within them will in a short time be inhabited, and yeild more security to the people then now they have within a mile of the best guarrison wee possesse, and probably more profit to the Commonwealth then all the landes in Ireland now doth; whereas now while the countrey is open, the enemy have libertie upon the approach of our forces to fly out of one fastnes into another, and soe avoid engaging, and weare out our men and destroy those places that yeild our forces subsistance.

Thirdly, that all the forces may be fixed to their respective guarrisons and quarters, and may have landes assigned them as well for their arreares [as part] of their present pay to the end they may be [encouraged to follow hu]sbandry and to mainteine their owne intereast as [well as that of] the Commonwealth. Provided that such of them as marry with Irish [women] shall loose th[eir] commands and forfeit their arreares and be made incapable to inhabit landes in Ireland." (Turn and partly illegible.) Signed. Enclosed:

The following paper signed and dated as above. The first lines are illegible but apparently propose that the allotments to the Adventurers be as follows:—

1. "The first allotment to consist of the Counties of Limerick and Kerry in Munster and the Counties of Clare and Galloway in Connaught.
2. The second allotment to consist of the Counties of Kilkenny, Wexford, Wicklow, and Catherlogh (Carlow) in Leinster.
3. The third allotment to consist of the Counties of Westmeath and Longford in the province of Leinster, and the Counties of Cavan and Monaghan in the province of Ulster.
4. The fourth allotment to consist of the Counties of Fermanagh and Donegal in the province of Ulster and the Counties of Leitrim and Sligo in Connaught.

And although it be conceived that there is in any one of these allotments more forfeited lands than will upon admeasurement satisfy the Adventurers according to the Act, yet that it may appear that not only full satisfaction is intended them but also an advantage of strength and security in having their several proportions assigned unto them together, which the Act did not provide for; It is further proposed that, if the first allotment chance to fall short upon admeasurement of giving the satisfaction intended, that then in such case the one moiety of such defect be supplied out of the forfeited lands in the County of Mayo, next adjacent to the Counties of Clare and Galway.

2. That the second allotment proving defective be supplied out of the forfeited lands in the Queen's County and King's County in Leinster next adjacent to the said second allotment.
 3. That the defect of the third allotment be supplied out of the forfeited lands in the County of Fermanagh in Ulster next adjacent to the said third allotment.
 4. That the defect of the fourth allotment be supplied out of the forfeited lands in the County of Mayo in Connaught and of Cavan in Ulster next adjacent to the said fourth allotment."

DOROTHY, COUNTESS OF LEICESTER, to the PARLIAMENT.

[1651-2, January 8.]—Petition, showing that "the Lady Elizabeth and the Duke of Gloucester . . . having—by order of Parliament in June 1649—been committed unto the charge of the Petitioner, and after by order removed to the Isle of Wight the Lady Elizabeth—before she went from your Petitioner's house—deposited in the hands of your Petitioner's husband . . . a jewel of diamonds declaring her will how the same should be disposed in case she should die, which at her death she confirmed giving the said jewel to your Petitioner, which although thus disposed of by the said Lady and having never belonged unto either King, Queen, Prince, or Crown, but was given unto her by the late Prince of Orange at the time of his marriage with her sister.

Yet your Petitioner's husband . . . as well as herself taking notice of the late additional Act . . . for sale of the goods belonging to the late King, Queen, and Prince, and being both of them very scrupulous and fearful of any failing on their parts, the said Earl did—within the time limited by the said Act—make discovery thereof unto the trustees appointed by the said Act desiring your Petitioner might retain the same according to the gift and will, of which the Probate under seal was produced unto them: Notwithstanding which the said trustees upon the 23rd of December last . . . have valued the same at 2,000*l.* being at least twice the value thereof, and ordered . . . your Petitioner's husband to pay the same within 7 days" . . . And praying that "her just interest and right in the said jewel may be considered by yourselves and allowed, or that she may be admitted to make further proof thereof before such persons as you shall be pleased to appoint." Signed. [N. DON ALONSO DE CARDENAS to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

[1651-2, February 17.]—After quoting part of the last paper delivered by him on December 19-29 (ante, p. 620) it proceeds thus: "Being desirous to manage that strictness by such means as I esteem most convenient for both nations, before I descend to particulars it seemeth just and reasonable that first . . . your Honours will be pleased to declare likewise to me, whether the will and intention of the Parliament be in this point conform and corresponding to that of the King, my Master, for the knowledge thereof is necessary for me that with the greater confidence I may proceed in proffering to your Honours what I do conceive most conducing to that end.

Secondly I desire" you "to let me know, in case the intention of the Parliament be conform to that of the King, my Master, in this particular whether they intend likewise to come to a treaty and a conclusion of some adjustment of union and interest for the common utility and convenience as well of his Majesty as this Commonwealth because upon the assenting to those two points as preliminary I may proceed to declare what I have to offer further." Reasons for the Dissent of the DEPUTIES OF GLASGOW.

1651[-2], February 24.—1. "We who have had all divine and human rights to properties and to a self disposing power of our own government, and also have had the government of our Church settled. . . . Let it be considered if we can actively consent to such a tender by which all these . . . may be destroyed, and so make ourselves guilty of all the blood and treasure has been spent . . . if . . . we return by our own consent to put it without government, Covenant or what has followed upon them.

2. Because our acceptance of the Incorporation . . . involves us . . . in the approbation of the Parliament of England's disposing of all that's near or dear to us and of the grounds upon which they go in relation thereto.

3. Because it doth . . . establish in the Church vast and boundless toleration of all sorts of error and heresies without any effectual remedy for suppressing the same notwithstanding that there be moral and perpetual obligation upon us to suppress and extirpate heresy no less than profaneness. Like as these Declarations do allow diverse ways of worshipping God under the name of Gospel ways.

4. Our consent is sought to an incorporation, and yet no time or way propont, when such a thing may be made effectual, nor any plot or draught of it holden forth, but we engaged to approve we know not what as also to give obedience to the Commonwealth of England . . . whereby we have no access to desire either the privileges which may be supponet to come by this tender, or to have any hand in framing the mould thereof if it should come, but bind up ourselves from having any government at all but what shall be derived to us." 2. That not only forfeitures and confiscations be taken off, but an Act of Oblivion passed and all prisoners released.

3. That all merchants and traders may enjoy full liberties by sea and land, the same as those in England.

4. That the Boroughs may enjoy their ancient liberty of convening yearly by their Commissioners.

5. That such public judicatories as may be erected and their judges may be made and chosen by the Commissioners with the advice and consent of the Deputies of the shires and burghs.

6. That to relieve the country as many of the forces be removed as may consist with public safety.

7. That Manufactories of all sorts may be erected in the several shires of such commodities as each shire best produces. And to that effect that well qualified workmen may be induced to come from England and join with those of this nation in these undertakings, and that all encouragements privileges and helps may be tendered to such as shall undergo the same. Speech of LEON DE AISSEMA, public Minister of the HANSE TOWNS, to the COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO RECEIVE HIM.

[1651-2, March 2.]—The Hanse Towns were persuaded to send an ablegation by the example of other nations, although such as follow a monarchical form of government, and in their heart hate all poliarchies and republics, but were dissuaded for want of an occasion, it being unnecessary to acknowledge the Republic like a thing newly acquired as it never was lost, it being clear the people were before the Prince. I shall therefore only touch two points. First as to trade. The ancient commerce between England and the Hanse Towns is to see by the houses constructed to lodge the Hanse merchandises so in London as elsewhere by name of the Steelyard in lieu of which places at Hamburg and elsewhere the flourishing companies of this nation enjoy such rights and privileges that we also hope the restitution of the old rights and privileges in times past granted to the Steelyard House, being by those deprived of them who formerly directed all to the arbitrary power, an enemy to those that embraced a poliarchy manner of government. The second is the same love of liberty with unity of inclination which is the strongest tie to friendship. Who knows not the wars which the Hanse Towns have had with their neighbour kings and princes for their liberty and the liberty of trade? Lübeck only once durst and could defend their liberty as well as that of Gustavus, a little afterward King of Swedland. I add to this the liberty in religion abhorring all monarchical Hierarchy, which with this nation we have so common, as can be said, that here it took its beginning from Saxony. These things being so well known it would be superfluous to make congratulation at least in the same manner as others. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 100.) In Latin, with English translation, the first signed. [N. XVIII., 158, 152.]

The doubts and scruples of the BURGESSES and NEIGHBOURS of the burgh of LANARK.

1651-2, March 2.—While professing themselves willing for a Union they desire to be satisfied in these particulars:—"First we conceive ourselves bound by the law of God and the oath of Covenant . . . to endeavour the preservation of the liberties of this nation and just fundamental laws thereof, which we judge to be altogether infringed by the form of the now demanded incorporation which, though carrying along with it a change of the whole fundamental form of government . . . is not presented to the full and free deliberation of the people in their collected body, but first concluded without their advice and knowledge and now offered in a divided way without a previous condescension in what might preserve from the dangerous consequences that may follow so great a change if not carefully guarded against. But secondly, though we could be much denied to cut and carve in what concerns our own interest yet we dare not add to or diminish from the matters of Jesus Christ dearer to us than anything earthly, which is so far from being secured by anything offered for that effect that it is in diverse ways prejudiced and a foundation laid down in general and doubtsum terms of a vast toleration. We are far from the approving the persecuting of any of the truly godly, but how should we be exonerated in the day of our wakening to give our full and sure consent to anything which opens a door to many gross errors contrary to sound doctrine" . . . OLIVER ST. JOHN, SIR HENRY VANE, ROBERT TICHBORNE, RICHARD DEANE, RICHARD SALWAY, and G. FENWICK, being the Commissioners for Scotland to the PARLIAMENT.

1651-2, March 3. Dalkeith.—“The Commissioners . . . having according to the Instructions to them given from the Parliament by conferences with the Deputies of the respective sheires and burroughs of Scotland that have beene choasen, and attended according to the summons on that behalfe, as also with divers other persons of the Scots' nation as by sundry other waies and meanes informed themselves, to the best of their power, of the state of things here, to the end that they might ripen their results thereupon for the consideracion of the Parliament, doe accordingly humbly offer, as followeth :

That the Parliament would likewise declare—if they thinke fitt—that the respective sheires and burroughes who accept the tender of Union, be authorized to elect the same number of persons as upon summons from the said commissioners they have lately done, with power to the said deputies—each of them having first expressed their consent to the tender of Union in such manner as the Parliament shall thinke fitt—to meete, and out of themselves to elect fourteene persons to represent all the said sheires and seaven persons to represent all the said burroughes: which one and twentie persons or anie seaven or more of them are to repaire to the Parliament of England by the day of with full power on the behalfe of Scotland to effect the premisses. And it is humbly offered that the charges of the said persons in comming upp to London, and attending that busines may be defrayed by order of the Parliament of England out of the revenue of Scotland, or otherwise.

3. It is humbly propounded that the Parliament would more particularly ascertain the persons whose estates shall incur the penalty of forfeiture and confiscacion: and that by an Act of Grace all others which accept the tender of the Parliament for the said Union, and expresse the same by the day of in such manner as the Parliament shall thinke fitt, be secured in their persons and estates; so as the same extend not to hold upp bondage services, which shall hereafter be found needfull to be taken away. As also that it be declared by the Parliament that all confiscated lands in Scotland shall be lyable to the payment of debts, in such manner as other lands are by the lawes of Scotland.

That persons formerly desired for administracion of justice in Scotland be with all possible speed sent downe.

That twelve or more ministers be speedily sent down to reside in the severall guarisons and other convenient places in Scotland." Signed. [N. XVI., 112.]

they had therefore thought it best by this letter sent by Daniel Lisle Esquire to signify to her Majesty how acceptable her letter and minister were to the Parliament, and how eagerly they expect her friendship. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 103.) In Latin. [N. XVIII., 34.]

165[1-]2, March 13. Carlingwark.—Commission to William Gordon to repair to the English Commissioners to declare their dissent from the tender of Union because :

1. “The government of that nation by King and House of Lords was conceived by the Kingdom of England in 1643 to be the ancient government of that land . . . which that whole nation together with this did solemnly engage to maintain. . . .
2. That we cannot without manifest perjury willingly accept that tender . . . may be sufficiently demonstrate from the third Article of the League and Covenant where we are tied to defend the person of the King in the defence of the liberties of the Kingdom. . . .
3. Because the government we are required to accept . . . leaveth a latitude for superstition heresy and profaneness together with whatsoever may be contrary to sound doctrine, the extirpation of which we are bound to endeavour by the second Article of the League and Covenant.
4. Because by the second Article of the League and Covenant we are bound to preserve the Reformed Religion in the Church of Scotland in doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, all which shall be destroyed by this liberty which is granted to such as shall serve God in other Gospel ways, which we humbly conceive as a way which the Scriptures of God never knew of.
5. We are bound by the sixth Article of our League and Covenant never to suffer ourselves . . . to be divided from the Union then made.”

The effect of the Conference between the ENGLISH COMMISSIONERS and the EARL OF ARGYLL.

1651[-2], March 18. Dumbarton.—“The first thing his Lordship desired was, that, if we had anything of prejudice against him to object he might know the particulars, and thereby have opportunity to give satisfaction therein. It was answered; We were sent to receive such desires as his Lordship had to make. He replied; that he was prevented in what he [had] to desire, in order to the settlement of [the] nation, and the good of the whole island, by the positive resolutions of the Parliament, expressed in their declaration, which he had no knowledge of, when he first desired [an] opportunity to communicate his mind, nevertheless, though he believed the Commissioners might not go contrary to what the Parliament had expressed, yet he thought it might be worthy consideration in order to the very ends propounded by Parliament that a number of select persons, who had in Scotland constantly with England opposed the common enemy might be permitted to convene and meet together for receiving and giving mutual satisfaction.

It was answered; That the Parliament . . . had declared their intentions concerning the settlement of Scotland by the union proposed, and that their Commissioners by their authority had given the people of Scotland opportunity to express their acceptance of the tender . . . declaring withal, if they accepted of that union, that then they would be ready to receive such overtures from them as might make the said union effectual and with best satisfaction to the people of Scotland. He desired to know what was expected from him, and how he might demean himself touching the premises, and what was intended concerning him. It was answered; That we were present to receive his desires and not to tender propositions to him, the Commissioners . . . not having thought meet to do anything of that nature to any individual persons in Scotland, and therefore must refer him therein to the Parliament's declaration; yet since [he] insisted so much upon these particulars that if [he] pleased in writing to express them to the Commissioners we doubted not but they would be taken [into] consideration by them. That as he desired to be at some certainty concerning the premises so he had not resolved [to] demean himself otherways than peaceably towards [the] authority of the Parliament . . . exercised in Scotland. And that if it should be found convenient for the settlement of Scotland that any places should be fortified in the Highlands, where he had interest, that upon notice given him—which he desired—he should be so far from opposing the same that he should be ready to give his advice and assistance therein. He farther declared that the shire of Argyle would with all possible speed send Commissioners to Dalkeith with full power and authority according to the Commissioners' summons . . . and that although that shire was very unable to pay any cess by reason of the great devastations made by Montrose for their affection to the Parliament of England, as he alleged, and that the authority of Scotland found cause not to lay any burthen upon the said country; yet to show how willing they were according to their ability to do anything that might express them with other shires to be under the protection of the Parliament . . . they should be ready beyond their ability to pay towards the said Assessment." M. DE BARRIERE TO SIR OLIVER FLEMING.

[1652, April 6.] Tuesday. London.—Requesting him to present the last two papers to the Council of State. In French. [N. XVII., 31.]

M. DE BARRIERE to the PARLIAMENT.

[1652, April 6 (?).]—"The Prince hath sent me to the Parliament . . . to give them all assurances of his earnest desire to establish a good and sincere correspondence with them . . . his hopes being also to find" in them "a disposition to the same. His Highness gave me order to representate to them the true condition wherein he is and the reasons which made him to take up arms, which are so just that he is confident they shall be approved of by them, and that the justice of his cause shall procure him the help and assistance . . . he demands . . . and the rather because his Highness is persuaded it is not contrary to the interest of this estate to assist him against those who ever opposed this Commonwealth and are still of the same mind when they shall be in paoure to do it. Therefore I do hope that I shall with no great difficulty obtain what in that name we have already both by word of mouth and in writing demanded and do now demand again That the Parliament will be pleased to afford unto His Highness such succour of men and money which may enable him to oppose himself unto the attempts of his enemies to which he can very hardly resist if he be not speedily assisted specially in Guienne where he or in his absence the Prince of Conti his brother is brought to a very great strait. And we hope that the Parliament shall not willingly see the poor people of that Province utterly desolated, since the greatest trust of all that country next unto God is in some help from hence and that there is no doubt if the Princes should be totally oppressed that the miserable people shall be reduced under the greatest and hardest tyranny that can be imagined for the Cardinal shall never forgive, and in all human reason their preservation doth only depend of that of the Princes, by whose ruin not Guienne alone but all the rest of France shall be brought to the most hard bondage and slavery that ever was. What a great honour will it be besides for the Commonwealth of England after it hath so happily and so gloriously established the precious liberty at home to send their helping hands unto their craving neighbours for the same, whose obligation for that shall be eternal and the acknowledgment of it real and perfect.

And I do here offer and answer for the Prince that whatsoever shall be in his human paoure to do, and that this Parliament shall desire of him he shall do it in acknowledgment of their assistance. I do also demand in the same name that the Parliament may be pleased to establish the free commerce betwixt the city of Bourdeaux and all Guienne and the Commonwealth of England, as it was heretofore, that Province having never done anything that can move the English to that rupture for they had no part in the piracy . . . which the Cardinal Mazarin brought in, they refused to admit those declarations which forbidded the receiving the cloth and all other manufactures of England, but contrary to that they have always received and used the English merchants and do still as their best friends, and are yet ready to receive all sorts of merchandises, which from England or other foreign parts shall be brought in the English ships, of which the City of Bourdeaux offers and is willing to make such public declaration as may be desired.

And by reason that the time of transporting their wine passes away, I had requested the Parliament to suffer that, whilst they shall be about the settling of the free commerce, the Prince may transport 5 or 6,000 tons, by which means his Highness shall receive some small benefit and money, of which above all things he stands in need at this present, having left his brother in that country in great wants, which makes me renew my earnest request to the Parliament for the grant of that speedily." . . . (See Commons' Journals, vii. 117.) Signed. [N. XVII., 23.]

THE ANSWER of the COUNCIL OF STATE to the papers exhibited by the RESIDENT OF THE HANSE TOWNS.

1652, April 13.—The Parliament for the encouragement of the navigation and increase of the shipping of this nation having passed the Act in the Resident's papers mentioned, and the grounds thereof appearing clearly just and no injury to any their good friends or allies, we see no reason yet given for their relaxation thereof. As to the further desires in their papers of having the Hanse Towns included in any treaties between this Commonwealth and others for the better freedom and advancement of trade, and they may not be postponed to any others they may be well assured that the Parliament will do therein what is just and reasonable, and may testify the value and esteem they have of the friendship of such Protestant allies. And we declare ourselves ready to treat with the Resident concerning what may tend to these ends or conduce to more strict correspondence between this nation and these their ancient allies. Touching the abuses of the English cloths complained of by the Senate of Hamburgh, the Parliament have such grievances under their serious consideration, and will remedy them as their other weighty affairs may permit. Concerning taxes and assessments relating to the Merchants of the Steelyard the same is under consideration and care will be taken that right be done therein. Touching the cases of the two ships belonging to the Hanse Towns and another to Stettin now depending in the Court of Admiralty, to which a recommendation is desired for speedy justice to be therein done, the Council of State, taking notice that these businesses are in a way of a legal determination doubts not that right will be done without delay. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 119.) In Latin, with English translation. [N. XVIII., 159.]

Considerations to be offered by Mr. WEAVER to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1652, May 4.—Concerning a supply of clothes &c. to the soldiers and the payment thereof.

“To consider with the Spanish Agent of a course to be taken for conveying the Irish for his master’s service and to take care that such Irish as are raised may continue under their respective commanders sent with them.

Touching a Great Seal and others less for Administration of Justice.

To resolve of a convenient number of able physicians to be sent over to be placed in such garrisons and other places, wherein they may be most serviceable to the soldiery and the English.

To desire the Council to consider of encouragements to be held out to planters.

To endeavour the settlement of a constant monthly pay of 20,000*l.* &c. to be sent over to Ireland—without defalcation of any part for clothes or other provisions—for that notwithstanding the greatest part of the enemies’ forces may submit yet there will be a necessity for some time to continue between 3 or 400 garrisons in Ireland for better securing the country and beating the enemy out of woods and mountains.

To endeavour the Parliament’s assent—by the Council—to the particulars mentioned in our letter from Kilkenny of January the 7th 1651[-2] viz. :

For planting garrisons near the woods and fastnesses of the enemy.

That the Adventurers cast lots where their lands shall be assigned them.

That a Pale be made by securing the rivers of Boyne and Barrow and other places.

That all the forces may be fixed to their respective garrisons and may have lands assigned them, as well for their arrears as part of their present pay to the end they may be encouraged to follow husbandry, Provided that such of them who marry Irish women have no benefit &c.” [N. XXI., 100.]

M. DE BARRIERE to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

[1652, May 4.]— . . . Will not reiterate the propositions several times already made. I now only beseech you “to consider that the time doth extremely press and that the season doth come on, especially for the transporting of the wines of Bordeaux, for now we enter into the hot weather, which is a great deal sooner there than in this country, and which may hinder the transporting of the said wines. And as it is a thing which is profitable and necessary to all the world I hope the Parliament will grant this proposition . . . And as it was objected that the wines of Bordeaux could not be had without ready money I answer . . . that those of Bordeaux are ready to receive all kinds of merchandises whatsoever, so that it is not to be feared that any money should go out of the kingdom. Further the said city . . . and the rest of the provinces of Gascoigne which are under the . . . authority of . . . the Prince of Condé do concur with his said highness, and earnestly desire to have a good and true correspondence with the Parliament . . . which the said city conjointly with his highness will perform and maintain against all declarations that may be made to the contrary by the King of France. I . . . humbly beseech that if the Parliament will not establish this comerce suddenly to . . . permit that in the meantime a certain quantity of wines may be transported.” Duplicate in French and English. HAROLD APPELBOOM to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

[1652, May 12-22.]—As Her Majesty's "subjects have as well through the Northern as Western sea in several places hitherto been accustomed freely to have their commerce and navigation" she "undoubtedly hopeth that they shall henceforward likewise be free from being any way disturbed or infested by the subjects of the Parliament, and especially that the Parliament will permit them securely and without molestation to continue their aforesaid commerce in England and in the countries and lands thereunto belonging with their wonted free use of coming in and going out of their harbours." And she is confident that they will every way be courteously entertained there and that it shall be free for them to refresh and provide themselves of victuals and other necessaries for navigation, not only when they are directly bound for any of the ports of this Commonwealth, but also when, being bound for some other place they shall by tempest or otherwise be forced to run into the same. She declares that she on her part will ever in her dominions and harbours be ready to permit as much to the subjects of the Parliament. In Latin, with English translation. Signed. [N. The COMMITTEE OF THE ADVENTURERS to the COMMITTEE FOR PROPOSALS.

1652, May 14.—They dare not accept the proposals because “1. That albeit they resolve to use all expedition they safely may to plant, yet considering the various dispensations of Divine Providence to root up and to pull down and the great disappointment which God hath already given to their hopes for a more speedy reducing of Ireland to peace that it might become a quiet habitation, they hold it presumptuous and a tempting of God to undertake to plant fully such a quantity of land absolutely within 3 years or within any certain time.

2. That, although they shall gladly attempt to their utmost endeavour to come up to the pleasure of the Parliament publicly declared, yet they cannot admit of such a tie upon them to plant all in such a manner as shall be directed by the Parliament for that there is no such direction given to them whereupon they may consider whether they be able to do it or not and for that they humbly conceive that the land—when set out—being their own by a dear purchase they may plant and build for their own convenience at their own discretion, and that it is their liberty and birthright so to do.

3. That albeit they neither do nor can plead for the Irish, yet for that the Parliament hath not declared their pleasure touching the natives, whether Protestants or others, the Adventurers can say nothing to the exempting or admitting of the Irish until the Parliament hath disposed of them.

4. The Counties propounded and sorted as they are for the Adventurers to make their election are so situated by reason of bogs woods and mountains so intervening that the Adventurers cannot plant together in a body to assist and guard one another in case of assault or danger, as was propounded . . . and will therefore prove very prejudicial to the managing of the work and safety of the workmen, nor are the Adventurers satisfied . . . whether there be forfeited lands sufficient to satisfy the Adventurers in those counties, nor when or how they shall be cleared of the multitude of Tories that yet swarm in them, nor what protection the planters shall have during the worke or upon what terms.

5. The first proposition also mentioning an allowance of so much land only as their present Adventures amount unto, it is not clear to them whether it be meant only of what is due in Munster and Leinster alone, or of what is due to them in all the four provinces; and whether that which is due by Ordinances, as well as by Acts, seeing in the close of your Propositions mention is made of Acts only . . .

6. Although the addition of 500,000 acres be a large favour and is so acknowledged, yet to be tied to such building and planting and in such manner as the Parliament shall appoint . . . and not to have the same addition in the same provinces and yet to plant it also within 3 years from September next or to forfeit it all then not so planted and inhabited and all the said lands to be still subject to the several and respective rents reserved in the Acts of Parliament notwithstanding that this is upon a new contract. These are such conditions that the Adventurers dare not embrace were the addition much larger than it is. And as to that of the reserved rent they cannot yield unto it upon a new Contract for the reasons laid down to back their 5th proposal formerly tendered to be presented to Parliament."

7. (Of this clause only a few words are legible, the paper being here much torn and the ink in many places totally gone. It is apparently in answer to the 3rd Proposal concerning the demise of houses to the Adventurers.)

8. "The liberty of exporting commodities there, doth not thereby take in agents (?) without which they can neither plant or live in Ireland, nor doth it discharge Excise or other imposts as the Act of Parliament doth now grant the like immunity from Custom and imposts for goods being native commodities of the country from Ireland to England and the want whereof will make bad markets render their commodities cheap and the Adventurers poor, while in foreign plantations the Planters, who pay nothing to the State for the land, have greater liberties and privileges than was propounded by the Adventurers in their former proposals.

9. Although the proportion of land limited in the first proposition might be borne if all other things were granted which the Adventurers propounded, this safe there shall be so only a necessity to continue them; yet seeing there is an intimation that a greater proportion may be required after ten years, and that this will not be granted for ten years but on accepting all the other propositions, and that all must be planted conveniently, inhabited, and husbanded, as the Parliament shall appoint within three years or forfeited, and the old rents also continued, they dare not undertake to pay so great a proportion.

10. Lastly observing that the three years allotted for the planting and full finishing and inhabiting of the same, as the Parliament shall direct, or to forfeit all which by that time shall not be so inhabited, planted and husbanded, and that the exemption from Customs for seven years are all to commence from the 29th of September next, and no assurance given or propounded that all or any of the Counties named in your Propositions shall be before that time cleared of Tories or of other Irish, which by the Propositions may not be admitted to be in the Plantation, although Protestants, and that there is no hint of any course to be taken for declaring and surveying the forfeited lands where they lie and of what quantity and quality they are, or for clearing up their estates who have not forfeited their lands, or how so many persons and families shall be provided for of any tolerable habitations while they are at work upon the plantation—which cannot be performed within three years by 40,000 men, who must also have their families with them—without all which no plantation can now be carried on; The Adventurers humbly crave leave to say that it lies in their apprehensions as a thing no way feasible or possible to effect what this Honourable Committee propounds unto them, although not only all these Propositions, but all the Adventurers' own proposals and much more should be granted freely to them, and they are of opinion that, if they should attempt the work on such terms, they must inevitably ruin themselves and destroy the plantation as to any considerable fruit which it might otherwise yield to the Commonwealth and render all that part of Ireland very mean poor and contemptible, and so they should, instead of promoting, extremely hinder the public interest strength and honour of the Commonwealth.

Wherefore if the Parliament shall think fit to grant their proposals formerly presented, the Adventurers shall readily enter upon the Plantation, so soon as the country shall be so far cleared of Tories and Rebels that the planters may sit down to the work in safety, and so soon as by Acts of Parliament it shall be declared what lands are forfeited and where they lie, and the same set out unto them, and that all men's estates not forfeited may be cleared and known, and that after all this done the season of the year shall be proper to begin the work which being begun they resolve with God's assistance to proceed in it with effect and with all possible speed and expedition." 1652, May 24.—Certifying "the state of the business betwixt us and the Dutch fleet. Upon the 19th . . . we had intelligence that they were off the South Foreland consisting in the whole of about 42 sail. We paid up with our ships as fast as possible, and being off Foulston (Folkestone) espied the Dutch fleet to ride at anchor near Dover. As soon as the tide presented we plied towards them, whereupon they weighed and stood to the Southward three leagues to the windward of our ships We, thereby imagining they had not any intent to engage with us, laid our ships about, and within half an hour Vantrumph with all his fleet bore up upon us, and being near, our general gave orders to fire at the Dutch flag to strike, which they refusing, we shot again. They still refused to strike, but shot a piece at our flag, and shot it through, we then being within musquet shot one of the other. Then the third time we fired a gun at his flag, which was no sooner done, but he fired his whole broadside at us, and so we engaged and went on fighting from" half past four in the afternoon till nine, "and then we anchored to fit our ships in a posture for the next morning, the Dutch fleet being to the Southward of us three leagues next morning directed their course for France, whereupon, seeing them do so, we plied up to the Downs." Copy. The COUNT OF PENIGUIÃO's Speech to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, September 30.—After enlarging on the ancient friendship between England and Portugal, and the present state of Europe it continues: Between these two nations only can peace be firm, being grounded both on past successes and present interests. As to the complaints and offences which have happened I would rather pass them by than repeat them, but since this course might imply a consciousness of error, while a plain narrative of the facts will disclose the cause of the injury, I will not hesitate to say that such events and accidents happened as to free us from the least blame as far as our intentions were concerned. The errors of commanders on both sides hindered the demonstrations. The dispute originally related to the Princes, and then it took the turn of satisfaction being demanded from us for the ships that were detained, thus making us parties to the issue where we had been judges thereof. Then followed the attack upon and the plundering of our fleet, which so enraged the people that they could not have been restrained by either reason or force without the compensation that was demanded. Hence what appeared a wrong was really a remedy.

The imprisonments [of the merchants] and sequestrations of their goods prevented the murder of the one and the robbing of the other. As soon as time permitted satisfaction was made them for their losses and injuries. João de Guimãraes was sent to England to settle the remaining disputes, and though received less cordially than we expected, as soon as the King saw any hopes of peace he immediately confirmed the Articles which regarded its commencement. The English in Portugal enjoy their liberty, their freedom from taxes, their privileges, and their property, and have been restored their ships and goods. I have been now sent as Ambassador to propose in the King's name what may be required to effect a peace, and considering your wisdom doubt not that you will approve the justice of my cause, which I trust will be recommended by the fact that I have always been a friend to your nation. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 188.) In Portuguese, with Latin and English versions, neither an exact translation and the last occasionally unmeaning. The above represents the general effect of the speech. [N. XVII., 165.]

The DANISH AMBASSADORS to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, October 20.—After they at the Conference yesterday had declared in reply to the Commissioners' questions about the stay of the English ships that they were ignorant of the fact and circumstances but were convinced that when the cause of the said stay is known it will be found to give no ground for a breach of the amicable relations between England and Denmark, the Commissioners in the name of the Parliament demanded what security would be given for the safe return of the ships. To which the ambassadors reply it is not in their power to settle the question, and that they do not perceive their persons could be bound to give security. They promise however what lies in their power namely to use every effort that nothing be omitted that might conduce to the preservation of the friendship between their King and the Parliament. They therefore earnestly ask the Council that there may be no further delay in granting the permission to depart they have already requested. THE GRAND-DUKE OF TUSCANY TO THE PARLIAMENT.

1652 [November 27–] December 7. Pisa.—From my care that the English vessels should not be molested by the Dutch vessels, which are at present stronger and more numerous I received them within the mole of Leghorn taking a reciprocal engagement from both parties that neither would make any attempt on the other when within cannon-shot of the fortress, and after they had been discovered from the lighthouse, yet while this act of my goodwill has been accepted by Parliament with discreet courtesy, on the other hand a bad return was made for it by Captain Appleton, by whose command the frigate taken by the Dutch in the fight off Monte Christo has been surprised by night and carried off from them by an armed force, while they were in possession of it in good faith under my word, and in addition the said Appleton has used violence to the sentry posted at the end of the mole, with other accessory circumstances, which will be better represented to Parliament by my Resident. I have therefore been obliged to call on him to give account of his actions and to imprison him in this fortress, of which I immediately apprised General Bodoel (Badiley). I doubt not but the Parliament will approve of my resolution. I shall always continue to pay due regard to the Parliament, and will serve them on every occasion and will treat all English vessels courteously. It remains that Parliament who can easily imagine the arguments and clamour of the Dutch should give me the means of freeing myself from these troubles and giving them satisfaction, which I would much rather receive from the Parliament than by other methods. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 244.) In Italian. Signed. Seal embossed. [N. X., 26.]

1652, [November 29–] December 9. Pisa.—At the request of Signor Bodoel (Badiley) I have placed Captain Appleton in his hands, wishing to show my respect to the Parliament, and hoping that my indulgence towards him, as far as concerns the offence to myself, should deserve that the Parliament should have regard to my engagement with the Dutch, not considered as such, but as persons who under my word have been defrauded. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 244.) In Italian. Signed. Seal embossed. [N. X., 25.]

1652, December 8.—Approving of the six Articles except the fourth concerning which he offers to the Council the annexed paper. [N. XVII., 169.]

ii. The LAST-MENTIONED PAPER.

Since the Commissioners have delivered a single paper containing a mixed sum amounting both from the ships seized and those taken, I do not think it the mind of the Council that I should altogether consent to what is contained therein, but only that I should certainly know of the goods which were confiscate.—(Arguments then follow to show that the true values of the Brazil and Pernambuco ships and cargoes were much greater than as shown in the paper, the cargoes having considerably depreciated during their detention.)—I therefore propose that the Commonwealth and the King should each appoint a person to inquire into the condition of the ships and wares, whose arbitration shall be final. And lest it should be believed that I would burden the Commonwealth for those losses, in the name of the King I desist from that which—the Commonwealth being satisfied—by virtue of judgment given may be owing, and I will pay whatsoever shall be certainly found owing thereof, and in obedience to the Commonwealth I offer 25,000*l.* though nothing be owing, which the peace being made shall presently be restored. [N. XVII., 169.]

iii. The AMBASSADOR to the COUNCIL.

1652, December 13.—As to the sum demanded in the Fourth Article, I refer the decision thereof to the arbitration of the Council, and if they cannot change the resolution of Parliament I remit it to their judgment desiring that by them regard will be had to equity and justice. As to the manner of payment, I propound three ways (which are then specified). [N. XVII., 170.]

iv. The SAME to the SAME.

Same date.—“I have satisfied the preliminary Articles in general, which were offered me by the Lords Commissioners. But having received from them that the Council wishes peace might be speedily confirmed, and that being signified in the last papers delivered to me, that answer being given to the papers the treaty shall begin, there remains nothing but that the day and hour be appointed me for the performance thereof.” [N. XVII., 170.]

The CONSULS, PROCONSULS, and BURGOMASTERS OF LÜBECK to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, December 14.—Asking for the restitution of six tuns of Spanish wine the property of their citizen John Lembke, shipt by his kinsman at St. Lucar for delivery at Hamburgh on board the St. Michael, which was intercepted by the English fleet and brought into London. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 252.) English translation. [N. XVIII., 153.]

DON ALONSO DE CARDENAS to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, December 14–24.—Demanding the release of the St. Salvador and St. George of Hamburgh and the Sampson of Lübeck with their cargoes. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 229.) In Spanish. Signed. [N. XVII., 82.]

The COUNT OF PENIGUIÃO to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, December 16. Speech.—Peace being so preeminent an advantage, and the mutual alliance of our nations so much to the interests of all Europe, I considered it more important than all considerations which might have made me doubtful about the preliminary Articles or caused me to delay giving my decision on them. I have therefore given satisfaction to the Articles propounded to me.

I have however hesitated at the fourth; because in the account received from the Council no mention is made of the Customs' duties paid in this port on the goods; 2. No allowance is made for the ships, though it be not less just to restore the ships than the goods which were in them; 3. No inquiry is made into what was unjustly seized. Though these points are so clear and so important, rather than delay the peace I preferred to leave them to the judgment of so prudent a senate, and the generosity of such a magnanimous Commonwealth.

As to the time of payment may I hope that the Commonwealth will be contented with my proposals.

With regard to the complaints of certain of his Majesty's subjects I negotiated with the Council that their goods should be released, who replied that orders had been given to the Admiralty to look into the matter and stop the sale, but I found that that Court could not obey on account of an old order of Parliament made before the restitution in Portugal of all goods of the English to their lawful owners. I am therefore obliged to apply to Parliament, being ready to prove, according to the laws as administered in that Court that the goods demanded belong to the King, my Master's, subjects, that they may be restored to them. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 230.) In Portuguese and Latin, the first signed. [N. XVII., 171.]

The ARCHDUKE LEOPOLD WILLIAM to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, [December 18–]December 28. Brussels.—Asking that the three ships, the St. Salvador, the St. George, and the Sampson might be restored without litigation, especially as in consequence of their detention the bills of exchange drawn by Spanish on Belgian merchants were not paid, which caused inconveniences to the King's army. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 243.) In Latin. Signed. [N. XVIII., 173.]

The PROCONSULS and SENATE OF HAMBURGH to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, December 20.—Letter of Credence to their Resident Joachim Petersen. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 252.) In Latin, with an English translation. Seal embossed. [N. X., 83.; XVIII., 150.]

M. DE BORDEAUX, French Ambassador.

[1652, December 21.]—Speech at his audience.—The King has sent me to salute the Parliament on his part and to assure them of his friendship, being confident that he will find here a mutual correspondence to his good intentions. The union which ought to exist between neighbouring states does not depend on the form of their government. This kingdom can from a monarchy become a republic, but the geographical situation is not changed; the nations always remain neighbours and always interested in each other; commerce and the treaties between them bind peoples more than princes, having for their chief object their common advantage. Wherefore it appears that those at the head of two such powerful states ought to use the greatest care to obviate the inconveniences which might alter in any way the ancient alliances.

This consideration, which concerns your honour, your advantage and your repose as well as ours, has obliged the King to acquaint you by my mouth of the means of preserving so necessary a union by conveying to you his just complaints of the capture of his vessels, which he was sending to the assistance of Dunkirk, on the pretext of reprisals.

His Majesty has so scrupulously observed the treaties made by his predecessors with this Crown, and has forbidden his subjects under penalty of such rigorous punishments to carry on depredations on those of this state and his Council have done justice so uprightly to those who have demanded it, that he does not believe he can have given cause to grant with reason letters of reprisals against France. If some merchants, in consequence of decisions which were not in accordance with their desires, have sought and obtained from this Parliament permission to use them, this gives them no lawful title to capture and keep the vessels of the King of France. This right has been introduced and reserved by the treaties of peace in order to redress the loss of those to whom justice has been denied, by permitting them to revenge themselves on the property of private persons, but hitherto it is a thing unheard of, that any nation has extended it to the property of an allied Prince, or employed the forces of the state to put it in execution—otherwise there would be no difference between a declaration of war, and Letters of Marque.

This maxim being generally received, and neither the King of France nor his subjects having undertaken anything against what belongs to this Commonwealth, and further the principal result of the loss of his vessels being turned to the advantage of Spain, his Majesty is willing to attribute the cause only to the secret influences of that common enemy. You ought to regard him as a common enemy, since, considering the interests of the Parliament, he divides you from your ancient allies and tries to engage you in war with all your neighbours, in order not only during that war to repair his affairs, but also to reduce you to the necessity of depending on his assistance. The designs which at various times that nation has engaged in against England, their political maxims and counsels of conscience so contrary to your welfare and religion, ought to make you suspect the great zeal with which they have affected to seek your alliance.

If the King of France now demands redress of the wrong that has been done him by other means than those that have been employed by those in his position, it is not from fear of increasing the number of his enemies, but solely from the desire of preserving those whom he has believed to be his friends. It requires only to look at the history of past centuries to be convinced that France has nothing to fear except her own strength. Your divisions, in which she has not intervened, though she was in a position to foment them, and many reasons impelled her to do so, have made you acquainted with the frankness and sincerity with which his Majesty has been accustomed to treat his allies.

He has already given you marks of his entire acquiescence in the change which it has pleased God to introduce in those kingdoms, when in the most flourishing condition of his affairs after that famous battle of Rethel, he sent you proofs of his friendship. I can confirm to you these same sentiments now, when he has extinguished the fire which threatened his kingdom with complete ruin, when he has driven into the territories of his enemies those who kindled it, and when the only city which supported it by its revolt, breathes nothing but his mercy.

His Majesty does not doubt that the Parliament will not be able to reflect on the power of the King of France, on the manner in which he behaves towards the Commonwealth, on the treaties between the two nations, and the advantage of maintaining them, finally on their own interest, without repairing—by restoring the vessels in the same condition in which they were taken—the just grounds for complaint which he has against such a proceeding. This is what I am come to demand of the Parliament on the part of the King, my master, and to assure them that his Majesty who regards justice as the principal support of his sceptre, and the solid foundation of lawful empires, will not fail to do right to those of this state who have just claims against his subjects, and will embrace every means of maintaining a perfect correspondence between the two states. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 233.) In French. Original and Copy the first signed. [N. XVII., 20.]

THE BURGOMASTERS AND COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF ZURICH TO SIR OLIVER FLEMING.

1652, December 24.—The Evangelical Cantons and their allies, having with much grief understood the great dissension between the Parliament and the States-General, whereby not only the said states are like to grow entangled in the great hazards and mischiefs of war, but the whole Evangelical cause abroad must incur the greatest danger it ever sustained since the Reformation, unanimously held themselves engaged by the common bond of religion and the affliction they bear to both the said states to communicate to them their sad apprehensions in this regard. That this our joint address may be presented to the Parliament with all due observance, with the outward circumstances whereof we cannot be so well acquainted at so great a distance, we entreat you to deliver the letter enclosed in the best manner requisite, and most befitting so great a state. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 252.) English translation. [N. XVIII., 163.]

THE CONSULS, SCULTETS, LANDAMANNS, AND SENATORS OF THE EVANGELICAL CANTONS OF SWITZERLAND, &c., as in heading to their letter of April 14th, to the PARLIAMENT.

1652, December 24.—We hope our letter written early in spring (that of April 14th, unopened till 1683) was taken in good part. While we were still hoping that peace would be preserved, we received the sad news of a seafight between the fleets of the two Republics, and that war had begun. Without expressing any opinion on the merits we, with all the reformed churches, exhort you to put an end to this fratricidal war, so prejudicial to religion. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 252.) In Latin. Seal of Zurich embossed. [N. X., 91.]

M. DE BORDEAUX to the PARLIAMENT.

[1652-3, January 4.]—“I see by your answer to the letter of the King, my master, that, persuaded of the advantage there is in maintaining a perfect correspondence and friendship between France and England, you are ready to employ the power which God has been pleased to place in your hands for the preservation of an ancient alliance. That disposition which his Majesty has always expected from your wise conduct and zeal for the welfare of your state obliges him to complain to you and to demand justice in order that, obtaining the satisfaction which cannot be denied him, he may also employ all his authority for the execution of designs so useful to two nations. The evident justice of his demand ought not to meet with any long delay, and to remit it to a long discussion would be in some manner to cause prejudice to the sincerity of your good intentions. Nevertheless, assuring myself that the reasons . . . of his Majesty will make the more impression on your minds the more they are deliberately considered, and that nothing will be capable of hindering the restitution of his vessels, I will willingly meet in a more particular conference those whom the Parliament shall find good, in order to make manifest his just pretensions. . .” (See Commons' Journals, vii. 243.) *Signed. INFORMATION.

Same date and place.—That George Wayte said when the Scotch King marched into Scotland he wrote thanking him for his many faithful services, and that he would have joined him in commission with Sir John Cockram into Poland, had not he begged his excuse considering it would be destructive to his trade, and that further the King had given him a large pass to all foreign Princes in testimony of his faithful services. That he said that he had lately received letters from Major-General Massey from Holland, stating that he had received a new commission from the King, and that he was now busy in transacting his affairs.

That a Mr. Spark had sent him from Hamburgh Massey's letters, and he himself had corresponded both formerly and lately with Massey, and also for the King's affairs with Lord Hopton and Sir Edward Nicholas. He said he must now go and write letters to France, England and Holland, and spoke as if they were intended to the said King and his interest. He further said—seeing a letter of Sir John Henderson's that had some views in it to the advantage of Charles Steward—that it was not good to communicate it to any of the English skippers for they would inform the said Resident of it, and understanding that one Prince had notice of it, he sent charging him not to communicate it to the Resident. He further said that the King of Denmark's non-admittance of the English Resident to his presence was, because the King was a passionate man, who in his fury had killed one man. And this said Resident Bradshaw being of the same name with that Bradshaw that judged the King of England his kinsman, it was feared that the King in his rage should fall foul upon the said Resident and do the like to him as he had done to the man he had killed. He being moved to intercept the said Resident's letters, said it was not worth the while, for the said Resident had nothing in his packet but what he himself had in his, and that the Commonwealth had sent him to undertake a business which nobody else would, his hands being so tied, that they might as well have sent a herald. The said George being told that there was a piece shot at me through a window in my lodgings as I sat at supper and my landlord and landlady said it was English and Dutch, he replied that it would be none but the Resident's servants, and if the Resident were good at that we should be good enough for him. Subscribed by both parties in the presence of Samuel Misselden and Anthony Compton. Copy. [N. XVI., 128.]

The Representation of the OFFICERS OF THE ARMY IN IRELAND against Mr. WEAVER.

1652[-3], February 18.—That even before the Lord Deputy Ireton's death, he had in a letter manifested a great dissatisfaction at a censure given concerning the dealing of an officer with a party of rebels by a council of officers, which letter being intercepted by the Irish in Scilly, where that officer was then a prisoner, was made use of to countenance their intentions to take away his life.

That after the Lord Deputy's death he had laboured to persuade the other Commissioners to keep the command of the Army to themselves, and not to intrust any single person therewith.

The dangerous use he made of an information—we fear set on foot by himself—that there was an Anabaptistical Plot in the Army to bring in an Anabaptist General, whereon he advised the other Commissioners that the persons said to be in the said plot, who were the greatest part of the eminent godly persons in the Army, might be speedily sent for to prevent that design as he pretended, which, if agreed to, would have broken your Army in pieces, and he and his instruments so spread these aspersions that England and Ireland was filled with them.

His strange and unchristian carriage, at the Commissioners next coming to Kilkenny, to many honest men, refusing to pay them their salaries or to own them in their employment, besides his turbulent carriage to officers at the same time taking upon him to judge military actions and question a council of war for discharging their duty, and when Lieutenant-General Ludlow resolved to grant a Commission for Martial Law to the Deputy-Governor of Waterford, he told him that if he intended it from any power he had received from the Commissioners he must declare against it.

We therefore request first that Mr. Weaver be required to fix on particular persons and make good the charge he hath indefinitely laid upon the officers of the army.

Second, that he may not be continued as a Commissioner for Ireland.

Thirdly, that some eminent person be appointed in his stead. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 260, 261.) Signed "Hardres Waller," and by about thirty other officers sent over as a deputation. [N. XXI., 119.]

INFORMATION

1652-3, February 27. [Hamburgh].—Against Mr. Thomas Bellingham and Mr. Thomas Lee. That the former had said that when a Roundhead had refused to drink the King's—to wit Charles Steward's—health in his presence he himself had pulled down the State of England's arms which were in the same room, and again drank the King's health. Mr. Thomas Lee said that Resident Bradshaw understood that I was a Cavalier, and therefore sent to me to come and speak with him and the said Bellingham which I did. Then they told me that the Resident was so base a fellow that if I had not a great care of myself he would put me in chains and send me to England, to prevent which he hired a soldier for 15 stivers to go with me out of the town, that I might be out of his jurisdiction. He wished me to remember him to Charles Gerrard, sometime Lord Brandon, and believing that I was one of Charles Steward's agents, to assist me in my travels he offered me 20 dollars and what else I wanted, and at the same time he drank the King's health. Before this he said he wrote to Mr. George Waite at Copenhagen, signifying that the Dutch fleet was 90 sail, and the English but 60, and that he had received a letter from Mr. Spark to say that Major-General Massey was very busy in transacting Charles Steward's affairs.

February 28.—I have just this instant received from Lee and Bellingham 20 rix dollars to bear my charges to the King as they call him, which money they have mutually charged me not to let a man living know of besides Charles Steward, and further my right hand must not tell my left hand of it, because—as they say—they shall be accused of maintaining Malignants in their agencies. Lee further said that they had certain ships belonging to their company now in the service of the Commonwealth, and that when they were in fight with Sir George Ayscue their Masters saved themselves and received not a shot, but the rest of Sir George's fleet was much torn, and after that fight the said Masters sent their Merchants word in Hamburgh that they walked up and down with their broadswords about their necks and drank sack, but yet they would keep their ships safe. Vera Copia. R[ichard] B[radshaw]. The PARLIAMENT to the CONSULS, &c. OF THE EVANGELICAL CANTONS, &c. (as in the heading to the letter of April 14, 1652).

1653, October 10.—Having acknowledged and thanked them for their letter of December 24th last and complimented them on the early acquisition of their freedom and their excellent government:—whereas with religious affection you exhort us to peace that exhortation ought to us to be of very great moment both on account of the desirability of peace in itself and the authority of yourselves, who in the midst of the greatest wars have both yourselves maintained so long peace both at home and abroad and have been to all others both exhorters to peace and the best examples. Lastly in that you urge that which we ourselves not so much for our own interests as for the general good of the Protestant Religion have by our ambassadors and other public ministers industriously sought, namely amity and straitest league with the United Provinces, but they—especially the Orange faction, adverse to us, always devoted to the royal party, and itself also affecting tyranny at home—how they used our Ambassadors coming to them not about peace but about friendship and strictest union, what causes of war they afterwards gave, how in the midst of a treaty for such a near alliance they assaulted us with a prepared navy at our own doors, when we little expected such salutations from them you will fully understand by our public declaration herewith transmitted. As for us, our serious endeavour is neither to attribute anything to our own strength but all to God alone, nor to be lifted up with any successes, but to retain minds ready to embrace all good opportunities of making a just and honourable peace. You in the meanwhile, whose zeal it is to reconcile brethren at variance, are among men worthy of praise, and shall doubtless receive a blessing from God as peacemakers. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 329.) Drafts in Latin and English. [N. XVIII., 162, 164.]

The PARLIAMENT to the QUEEN OF SWEDEN.

The PROCONSULS and SENATORS OF LÜBECK to the PARLIAMENT.

1653, October 24.—Complaining that five of their ships have been taken by two English men of war in the Narrow Seas and carried into London and Dover, and, though they do not doubt that the Parliament with its usual love of justice and equity will release them of its own accord, asking on account of the approach of winter and the fact that a delay of a day or hour may oblige them to winter abroad being detained by the freezing of the ports, inasmuch as the only ground for their detention is that two Dutch men of war were in their company who probably joined them without their consent, that they may be released and that strict orders may be given to the English captains not to interfere with them on their voyage home, and not to molest any other Lübeck ships. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 350.) In Latin. Seal embossed. [N. X., 87.]

The PROCONSULS and SENATORS OF HAMBURGH to the PARLIAMENT.

ISRAEL LAGERFELDT to the COMMITTEE appointed to hear him on his taking leave.

1653, October 26.—It is now the eighth month since in conference with the Commissioners of the Parliament, I in the name of my mistress urged a peace between England and the United Provinces and offered the good offices of her Majesty as a mediatrix. Since then the war has become yet more violent and sanguinary. It is a grievous matter that there should be so cruel and dangerous a war between two neighbouring nations both of the same religion, and to terminate it is the interest of not only the contending parties but all who profess the orthodox faith. My most gracious Queen pitying so much bloodshed, and influenced by the friendship which has existed between both nations from time immemorial, again and again urges a reconciliation, and offers whatever she can contribute to an object so necessary to Christendom, lest the war should spread and not only inflict greater losses on the belligerents, but also other States should be drawn into it. And since her Majesty has ordered me to return immediately I am bound to acquaint the Parliament therewith, that I may start as soon as possible with such an answer as her Majesty expects from the Parliament, and the ties of their mutual friendship require. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 340.) In Latin. Signed. [N. XVIII., 51.]

The PARLIAMENT to the QUEEN OF SWEDEN.

1653, October 29.—The Parliament has received your letter of January 20th, through your public minister Lord Lagerfeldt, and also a paper from him on April 8th, both showing how your Majesty has been affected by the differences between us and the United Provinces, and your desire for a reconciliation. This we recognise proceeds from your Majesty's desire for peace and the welfare of the Reformed Churches, who will give an opening to the machinations of their enemies, if they break out into slaughtering one another. The consideration of this and of other evils of war has influenced this Commonwealth to use its utmost endeavours both to avert them, and to terminate them on fair terms. The feeling of the Parliament remains the same, and they hope that God in his own time will in like manner influence the heart of the States-General, so that such a peace as shall be for the public benefit be established for the future. Meanwhile let your Majesty be convinced that this war shall on our side be carried on with all due care for preserving trade, especially that between this Commonwealth and your dominions, according to our directions both written and verbal to the said Lord Lagerfeldt, who we doubt not will on his return declare to your Majesty the evident proofs of the desire of the Commonwealth for preserving and increasing their friendship and good understanding with your Majesty, for the mutual benefit of both States. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 342.) In Latin. Draft. [N. XVIII., 52.]

[N. XXII., 122.]

An ELOGY written on the late unhappy accident which befell the LORD PROTECTOR.

[1654, October.]—

"Foreign ill-tutored jades, had you but known
Whom you rebelled against, whom you have thrown,
You would have pined to nothing, loathed the day,
And left the crows a memorable prey.
O Life of three great realms; whose brains did hatch
Successful plots, which no past age could match,
Whose army braves the land, whose fleets the main,
And only beasts did think unfit to reign,
How near to fatal was your error, when
You thought outlandish horses English men.
Had the mild Britons dreamed your Highness meant,
To pass through all degrees of Government,
The all subscribing Parliament that sate,
Would have prevented this sad turn of State;
They would themselves have drawn the coach and borne
The awful lash, which those proud beasts did scorn.
'Twould doubtless be to men free from affright,
A most magnificent and moving sight
To see the brother both of Spain and France
Sit in the Coachbox and the members prance,
To see Northumberland and Kent contest
Which of their Representatives drew best.
Make the slaves pay and bleed, let th'asses beare;
The measure of the power is their base fear."

A. B. to the KING OF SPAIN.

[1655-6, January.]—Seeing that Cromwell hath violated the peace and good correspondence betwixt Spain and England by sending his fleets both to the Indies and the coasts of Spain to intercept the galleons bringing home of the plate, A. B. has thought it his duty to represent to your Majesty how much it may import your service to declare in favour of the King of England, and endeavour to restore him to his Crown as the most efficacious means to diminish the power of Cromwell and increase your Majesty's for the following reasons.

1. Since Cromwell is resolved to make war against your Majesty, he will not fail to do you all the mischief he can, though you should not declare in favour of the said king, the King's loyal subjects both in England and abroad, and likewise many soldiers in Cromwell's own armies, now enforced by invincible necessity to serve under him, seeing your Majesty's declaration, would come over to you daily with a considerable strength, ships of merchandise, and men of war.

2. The greatest and best part of the soldiery embarked for the Indies formerly served the king and is still rightly affected to him, and they were sent out of England, because Cromwell could not confide in them, and should they have mastered any place in the Indies, on finding that your Majesty favoured their king they would easily have been persuaded to have taken arms under your Majesty against the rest who were not rightly affected, and also the rest of the English in the Barbadoes, Bermudas, and St. Christopher's which have stood right for their king, and maintained those islands for him, as long as he had a foot of land left in his three kingdoms. And if necessary your Majesty may capitulate as much with the king before you engage in his quarrel, and he must acknowledge himself infinitely obliged to your Majesty, in tendering such a motion to him.

3. Cromwell is so perfectly abominated in all the three kingdoms, and there is so great division in all his armies, that should they see their king assisted by your Majesty they would universally turn their arms against Cromwell, lest establishing him faster in that Government they should contribute to their own eternal slavery and be deprived of all commerce with Spain.

4. If your Majesty shall give permission to the loyal English to bring their fortunes into your service and dominions, and to live and traffic securely there, provided they bring passports from their king, undoubtedly many rich merchants would come over, with ships of merchandise and war, to avoid the danger they are daily subject to under that usurping government, which has no way but that of force to maintain his armies by sea and land, and all this at the expense of the rich and powerful merchants, which on the interruption of trade with Spain must impoverish the customs, the greatest part of his constant revenues, and they will fail him, and then he must grate upon the subject which must enforce them to revolt.

5. It is the best way to call away all the English, Scotch, and Irish, who at this day in great numbers serve the Crown of France against your Majesty.

6. The King of Denmark and the Hollanders on your Majesty's example would undoubtedly do the like, being both dissatisfied with the peace they lately contracted, and they say that if Cromwell be successful against your Majesty in the Indies, not only they, but all Europe would be ruined in their trade, and therefore in good policy all Christian Princes ought to join against Cromwell's designs.

7. It is well known that in Cromwell's armies and fleets there are very many that have their hearts right for the king, and if they knew whither safely to repair they would bring over a considerable part of the fleet to his Majesty's service, which they would do if your Majesty should only publish by declaration that all ships of war carrying the King of England's colours should freely be admitted and protected in all parts of your dominions with their prizes.

8. Your Majesty might very much advantage the Catholic faith in the three kingdoms interceding with the king that in case God should be pleased to restore him to his Crown he should give liberty of conscience to his Catholic subjects or at least that he should not execute the penal laws against them.

9. The sooner your Majesty declares yourself the better it will be, for Cromwell's ill intention was confirmed sufficiently by the retreat of his fleet from Cape St. Vincent and had he intended friendly he would have expected your Majesty's fleet, which went out of Cadiz, and that he designs taking San Domingo or Cuba, or both, is apparent enough, because he sent back the ships into England, which lately came out of England, to be sheathed, and it will be hard to unnest him, for his purpose is to transplant the English from Barbadoes, Bermudas, St. Christopher's, Virginia, and New England to San Domingo and Cuba, and by the shipping he will continually maintain there he will destroy the commerce betwixt Spain and the Indies, and so he doubts not but to oblige the inhabitants to traffic with him.

I conclude by saying again, that your Majesty can receive no prejudice imaginable by declaring for the king, for Cromwell will endeavour as much to endamage your monarchy, as if you had declared, and your Majesty shall do him more hurt by the very name of the king, than by the expense of millions of ducats, in regard of the great affection his subjects have generally towards him, who expect nothing but such an occasion to declare for his Majesty. [1656, October 4.]—Narrative of the late success against the Spanish West India fleet, and declaration for a day of thanksgiving for the same. (Printed in King's Pamphlets, E. 1065, No. 11.) (See Commons' Journals, vii. 440.) Two Drafts. The second draft contains the following passages which were finally omitted: "Besides the aforesaid narrative the ensuing relation was received from the said Marquess of Badex his eldest son, after he was taken prisoner. The Spaniards having exercised monstrous cruelties upon the natives of Peru—which the said Marquess for 14 years governed . . . having his residence at Lima, the chief city of that kingdom—by oppressing them in their consciences, persons, and estates—even those that are accounted freemen and profess the Romish religion—which made them to groan under their burdens, the cry thereof came at last to the ears of the Lord, for about five months since, presently after the Marquess his departing from Peru, there happened the fearfulest earthquakes and raining of fire from heaven in Peru that have been heard of in the world, insomuch that the whole city of Lima is swallowed up—as is also the island of Callao—in which there perished about 11,000 Spaniards and not above 100 Indians with them, the king of Spain having also lost by the earthquakes a 100 millions of plate in bars of silver ready wrought up. The famous mines and mountains of Potosi are also destroyed, so that there are no more hills to be seen there nor any further possibility of any gold or silver in Peru. This relation, though very wonderful, is affirmed to be true by the aforesaid relator.” And after the words “the fierceness of thine anger:—” “And no less observable are the terrible things which God hath done in Peru—the place where the king of Spain had exercised so much cruelty and from whence he had so great a part of his riches—concerning which it may now be said as it was of Babylon ‘The glory of his kingdom and the beauty of his excellency is as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.’” [N. XVI., 139; XVII., 87.]

JAMES NAYLOR, a prisoner in Bridewell, to the PARLIAMENT.

[1657.]—“That which I have suffered in this nation I complain not of. But that which is set before me to testify to you, who are now in authority, is this. That concerning my faith in Jesus Christ and His sufferings, it is no other than what the saints have witnessed in Scriptures who do confess Him in them, every one in their measure as they have received Him. How is it in my heart to take to myself any of His glory, but what He by His Holy Spirit shall put upon me, which is His free gift and not my desert, and without which I have no good thing in me? And therefore the glory of all I am or have I ascribe unto the eternal Spirit—and not to the perishing nature—of which all the children of light, who are born of the Spirit, are heirs with me, each one in our growth. And to set myself above the least of them I condemn as pride, owning Him alone to be Head over all, Who is in all, God blessed for ever.

And this in few words is the substance of my faith in Christ Jesus without hiding or dissembling, declared to you that none of you may be led by misinformation in this thing. So to the righteous principle of God, who is in you all, I commit you, that therein ye may receive power to answer His will in all things, without Whom you can do nothing, that He will accept you in, that before Him you may quit yourselves of your engagements, as to Him Who is the searcher of all hearts, and looks for truth in the inward parts, for there is great wrath felt against the nation, if God turn it not away for His mercy’s sake.” (See Neale, History of the Puritans, iv. 139-143.) THE LORD PROTECTOR.

1657[-8], January 25. The Banqueting House, Whitehall. — Speech to the two Houses. (Printed in Carlyle, No. 17, with some variations. The most remarkable are p. 105:—Read "satisfaction enough to yourselves of that as a necessary thing" for "enough to yourselves as this;" p. 107, "what is there in all that part? What is there in the other part of Europe" for "all the parts of Europe," and "interest of Europe" for "interests of England"; p. 109, "If these things saved" for "And these things stated," and "I have told you. If you will judge it no danger, if you shall think" for "I have told you; you will judge, &c"; p. 113, omit "that we are got again to peace," and read "let the pretences be what they will, the will" for "what they may"; p. 116, add after "a peaceable people" "an honest people"; p. 117, read "Liberty of the people" for "of the subject"; p. 118, "If these things be not considered—I cannot doubt, but they will be considered—I say, I judge what the state of Ireland is. Should free quarter come, &c." for "If these things be considered, &c.," and "a popish and Spanish" for "the Spanish"; p. 119, "if we have to look" for "while we, &c.," and "How should that man" for "how can any man"; p. 120, "hold to nothing, like nothing, neither &c." for "hold to nothing neither"; p. 121, line 4, after "peace" add "We have had four score years peace," and read "pretend what you will, if we run" for "pretend what we will, if you run"; p. 124, between "Government" and "that every" insert "That thereby liberty of conscience may be secured for honest people that they may serve God without fear." As this is the form in which it was reported by the Speaker (see Commons' Journals, vii. 589), its authority is superior to that of the reports accessible to Carlyle.) [N. XVI., 143.]

[THE LORD PROTECTOR] TO THE SPEAKER.

[1657-8, January 25.]—"I should have imparted a paper unto you, which indeed I have forgot. I have it not here. It is concerning the state of your moneys. You had lately an account of the public moneys, and we have been as good husbands thereof as we could. We have not increased the debt. But some supplies designed by you for public service, that of the buildings, hath not come in as was expected. The Paper shall be ready for you. You shall have it, when once you desire it. I desire you to acquaint the House with it." (See Commons' Journals, vii. 589.) [N. XVI., 144.]

Provided nevertheless that Lieut. Col. Edward Broughton shall not have the liberty upon security granted to the other officers until Lord Lambert's pleasure be further known. Signed and sealed by Col. Robert Broughton, and the other three Commissioners for the Governor. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 769.) [N. XVI., 160.]

1659, September 2. Dunham.—"I hope this Gentleman, your messenger, will give you an account that he hath had free liberty to execute the order committed to his trust, and hath seized upon several papers, and amongst others I delivered to him one paper sealed up, and endorsed on the back with figures, which was given to me at London in the drawing room belonging to our lodging by Mrs. Mordant, wife to Mr. John Mordant, who afterwards presently left me upon the coming in of some other company without saying anything to me of it, which paper as it is now delivered to the bearer I received, and never showed the same to my husband or acquainted him with it." Signed. Seal. [N. Colonel THOMAS CROMPTON to [the COUNCIL OF STATE].

1659, September 14. Stoneby Lodge.—The previous day on receipt of a letter from the Council of State, the Commissioners for the Militia had written to the Council for instructions how they should raise money for paying off the soldiers. This morning I heard that the Commissioners had, the previous night, drawn up an order to disband my regiment and Captain Backhouse's horse from further service. When the soldiers understood it, it caused a high mutiny. The Judge of Assize, Lord Chief Baron Wild, who was ready to take horse, sent for the Commissioners and told them they could not dismiss the men before they had paid them off, and with much pains convinced them of their error. It was concluded that the order should be recalled, and that they should come again on Tuesday and expect an answer from the Council, and that the soldiers should continue to stand to their arms. I, and Captain Backhouse's troop accompanied his Lordship two miles, and returning half a mile from Stafford, saw my regiment drawn up, and the officer told me that the soldiers left in the town had seized on the Commissioners, and would do so to me if I went into the town. But after I told them the conclusion my Lord had had with the Commissioners they promised my protection and the Commissioners' release, and so at the head of them I marched into the town when I understood the trembling condition the Commissioners were in. I suddenly sent an officer to them, and conducted them out of the town very peaceably. I desire that some course may be taken that the soldier may have his pay and be dismissed till further order. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 788.) [N. VIII., 77.]

WILLIAM ILLY and others, Commissioners for the Militia, to JOHN BRADSHAW.

1659, September 22. Stafford.—Describing how they had been seized the previous day by the common soldiers wanting pay and taken to the Shire Hall under guard, and kept there four or five hours, requesting him to procure an order of the House or Council of State for levying the necessary money with all speed, hoping that Parliament will see that they have reparation for the great wrong, disgrace, and danger put upon them, and stating that they had that day borrowed money to pay a great part of the foot soldiers, and engaged themselves to pay the rest in a few days. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 788.) Signed. Seal. [N. VIII., 76.]

EDWARD OXBOROUGH to BRAMPTON GURDON.

1659, September 23. (See Commons' Journals, vii. 793.) [N. XVIII., 147.]

Colonel JOHN WARREN, Colonel SIR THEOPHILUS JONES, and others to [the COMMISSIONERS OF THE ARMY at Portsmouth].

1659, December 24. Dublin.—Since our former letter all considerable places in this nation have owned this undertaking for the Parliament, and this, besides the active endeavours of your friends, must be ascribed in a great measure to the common soldiers and inferior officers in the several regiments and garrisons, by whom such of their superior officers as have been disaffected to you, have been for the most part deserted, where such did not at least seemingly comply, finding their being laid aside would otherwise have necessarily followed . . . We have judged it necessary to proceed forthwith to a new modelling of this army, so far only as to remove such as may be dangerous, and put others in their places of whose fidelity to the Parliament we are abundantly satisfied, until the Parliament's pleasure shall be therein declared, or that we shall have your Honours' orders. We ask for a right construction of our acts if we are obliged to lay aside some lately by the Parliament's Commission or power placed in command here, the Parliament being at a distance having been guided by the misrepresentations of those who now act, declare, or practise against them, who laboured to strengthen their party by placing their own partisans at the head of regiments and in places of trust as sheriffs, justices of the peace, &c., and insinuating with Lieutenant-General Ludlow, they had by his means got into their power all the chief cities and places of strength particularly the Castle of Dublin. As for Lieutenant-General Ludlow we cannot but own the Parliament's power vested in him as our Commander-in-Chief, and as being one of your number for ordering the armies of this Commonwealth, yet our jealousies of him grow daily on your behalf, and as to a prosperous government of your affairs here. (The rest of the letter consists of ten heads of charges against Ludlow.) (See Commons' Journals, vii. 803.) Signed. [N. VIII., 83.]

SIR ARTHUR HESLIDGE and Colonels VALENTINE WALTON and HERBERT MORLEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

We entreat” to hear “what your thoughts are concerning the time of the House sitting, humbly conceiving it necessary that letters should be immediately sent to summon the several members.” Signed. Seal. Appendix, No. 77, p. 140.) (See Commons' Journals, vii. 801.) Seal. [N. VIII., 94.]

ROBERT WOOD to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1659, December 31. Stone.—Am sent from the officers in Ireland with letters to the Commissioners for the Army, and the City of London. Could they have understood the Parliament's sitting again they would, I am sure, have directed their first joyful addresses to yourself. I left Ireland (December 25) in so good condition at the Parliament's service that the officers commanded me to tell the Commissioners for the Army that they could, if need be, send over 3,000 or 4,000 men for the service of the Parliament. Seal. [N. VIII., 95.]

Colonel BLACKMORE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1659, December 31. Exeter.—“As soon as I understood there was a likelihood of the restoring civil authority into the Parliament's hands

I visited the foot officers of the three companies of Sir Brice Cockrain's regiment that quarter here. . . and we agreed to draw the foot and horse together. . . and at the head of them, in the presence of 1,000 citizens, I declared our owning, and being for the Parliament's Government, and that we were unanimously resolved to obey all orders. . . from them, rejoicing that the Lord had once more placed amongst us the face and majesty of civil authority in them. Unto all which the soldiers gave most cheerful concurrence by their loud acclamations and reiterated hollowes, which being also attended with some small gratuity from the officers they were dismissed and all things in this place are in much quietness, and the bad blood which was growing between the citizens and soldiers much allayed." Signed. Scal. [N. VIII., 96.]

EDMUND HOYLE and others of the foot regiment lately come from Ireland to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1659, December 31. Beadle in Yorkshire.—“This day the regiment of foot that came lately out of Ireland unanimously declared. . . for the restoring of the Parliament of England lately interrupted. And we are now upon our march both day and night until we are clear of the quarters of the rest of the forces. The Irish Horse and we have quartered at a distance of late by which means we have had no conferences with them, but we daily expect to hear of their declaring the same also. . . Postscript.—We direct our present march towards Tadcaster, and thereabouts do intend to remain until we receive your orders. This day about thirty of the Life Guards came in to us having likewise declared for Parliament.” (See Commons' Journals, vii. 803.) Signed. Scal. [N. VIII., 106.]

Colonel GEORGE PLEY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1659, December 31. Portland Castle.—As I had no order of Parliament for raising the company which in Sir George Booth's insurrection I had commission to raise for the security of Weymouth, and finding the town peaceably inclined I kept myself to my charge here. The town of Weymouth lying on a headland, and very open to any foreign enemy and these parts being much infested by Ostenders, and other enemies of the Commonwealth, I think it my duty to state the necessity, if Parliament think fit, that one foot company be continued there. ‘Yesterday the Ostenders put on shore between Portland and Weymouth . . . where they were out of the command of my ordnance. And though I did what possible to keep them off with small shot, yet by the help of their great guns which they continually fired on us, they got away a ship from the shore, for their shot lighting on a beach of small pebbles, and having no shelter for my men we could not stand to do that execution upon them, as otherwise I might. I am at present in want of powder.” Scal. [N. VIII., 99.]

ROBERT WASHINGTON to Captain JOHN PICKERING.

1659, December 31. Leeds.—“Divers known Cavaliers did yesterday buy furniture of war for man and horse at Cutlery and saddlery shops, and the Cutler . . . told me that one of them said they hoped to be 1,000 horse ere Monday night. Some of them as young Hodshan had persons at his house last night, strangers, which were supposed to be come out of the Country to rise with those here, and by the preparations which [some] of these made of boots, spurs, breast bands for their horses, swo[rd-]belts, holsters all against the evening it was very supposed they intended to go out this night about midnight to the place of rendezvous. One of Mr. Tod's people came to give me warning to secure my money and arms and said it was certain they would rise this night, and that Lord Fairfax is to head them and seemed sorry that he was to have so many Cavaliers in his party. Whether he head them or Buckingham you will hear shortly. One went in the night to York with my letter to Colonel Lilburne or the governor present. We fear their design is upon York."

I write this before day. Seal. [N. VIII., 97.]

SIR HARDRES WALLER to "his kinsman" [WILLIAM LENTHALL].

1659[-60], January 6. Dublin.—“When you were all lost as to the eyes of men there came a Spirit upon the people even as that in the wheel, which turned about universally the whole people here save a very few, as if there had been an enchantment in the word Parliament as those that once cried out ‘Great is Diana of the Ephesians,’ which went throughout the land, so that in a few days the Army, ministry, churches and the whole country save a very few owned the undertaking of a few poor little ones so that I may say a nation was born in a day, and the strong fort of Enniskillen sent me a surrender this night, and we have now no visible opposition, but at Duncannon fort, which is in an obscure nook that can defend nothing but itself, and is easily hindred from doing that. And nothing now hinders the completing of this work but the late arrival of Lieutenant-General Ludlow in this harbour of Dublin, to whom we applied ourselves earnestly that he would not land until . . . the Parliament . . . should make their pleasure known, that they were satisfied with his actings in England because of his late continuance and acting with that army which we looked upon as the Parliament’s enemies . . . seeing clearly that his landing must unavoidably put all into blood, there being so general a protestation of the military and civil interest of the nation against his proceedings, which will further appear in a charge preparing both against himself and the Commissioners of Parliament, which is sent over to be tendered to the view of the House, and therefore I hope his prudence and conscience will direct his return for England, at least until . . . the pleasure of the Parliament be known, though we apprehend he may be gone towards Munster, expecting there a party to join with him. . . . The army have with great willingness and freedom owned me and to be under my conduct and command for the Parliament’s service wherein this hath been and I hope shall be ever my end and aim to have them served by such officers who shall never dare to pull out a Parliament or pull in a single person” . . . I recommend to you the bearers of this. Signed. [N. VIII., 108.]

[WILLIAM LENTHALL] to [General GEORGE MONCK].

General GEORGE MONCK to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1659[-60], January 16. York.—Having thanked the Parliament for their favour expressed in his letter of the 7th, "In obedience to the Parliament's commands I am advancing towards London, and for the securing of Scotland I have sent thither a regiment of horse, and another of foot, which is all I can do at present. I had sent Colonel Clarke, but that I had no money to spare them; if they were furnished they might march presently for Scotland. I have appointed Major-General Morgan to stay here for the present till things are better settled, and if you please to supply us with monies, and send orders to him about it he will give Colonel Clarke orders for the march of his regiment thither. There is 1,800*l.* lies in the hands of Mr. John Ince, Deputy to the Treasurers at War, they are indebted for their quarters and I think as much more, so it would serve their turn to enable them to march and pay their quarters, till they have a further supply; but if you cannot do any more, I desire that 1,800*l.* may be ordered to be paid out by Major-General Morgan's warrant to the forces here for taking them off from free quarter. I have ordered Colonel Fairfax's regiment to lie at York and put one of the companies of that regiment into Clifford's Tower. I am marching myself with four regiments of horse and three of foot towards you with what expedition I may. I have put the command of the Lord Lambert's late regiment of horse into Colonel Bethel's hands. He is an honest and faithful man, and was faithful and active for your interest in appearing for you with the Lord Fairfax. I have put out all the disaffected officers from the head of their troops and dismissed them, and I shall humbly desire that Commissions may be speedily granted for that regiment according to the list sent to your Commissioners for the government of the army, and that they may be sent to Major-General Morgan, and then, I think, all these parts will be well fixed for your service so far as I have gone yet. I could heartily wish the Militia of these parts were settled. I return you thanks for your being mindful of Colonel Saunders, Colonel Lytcott and Major Barton." Scal. [N. VIII., 114.]

[Colonel WILLIAM LOCKHART] to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

ROBERT THOMSON and FRANCIS WILLOUGHBY to the COUNCIL OF STATE.

1659[-60], January 23. Navy Office.—“The Petty Warrant victuallers have, as they inform us, run out so much money that they are unable to proceed any further without a supply, so that we expect their total declining the service every day. We have been necessitated to send some provisions out of the sea stores to the Petty Warrant victuallers lest the seamen, for want of victuals, might have been put upon extravagancies. It is the same case in relation to the whole action of victualling for that the respective persons concerned herein do daily importune for supplies of money . . . Such is the condition of all your stores in reference to timber, plank, cordage, &c. in [the respective yards, that in case of any sudden emergency for speeding away the fleet, we fear it could not possibly be accomplished.” (See Commons' Journals, vii. 830.) Signed. [N. 1659[-60], January 25. THOMAS HILL and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1659[-60], January 30. Shrewsbury Castle.—Upon the 27th this Castle was to be betrayed by a contracted party of Cavaliers within this town as also of several persons out of the country. I had notice of the business about 12 o'clock on Friday last in part, and making some preparation in the Castle for resistance, a soldier of our Company divulged the business to a serjeant, which I then employed in strengthening the lines with materials fit for their reception. I then privately strengthened the garrison with our men that were without, and with a commanded party marched out that night and apprehended some of those concerned in the plot, whom I have sent to our Governor from whom you will receive them. I desire the sense of the House as to the disposal of the persons now in custody. Signed. Seal. [N. VIII., 117.]

I desire also very earnestly that the Gentlemen of the Counties through which I march may have order to meet me upon my march to assist me in gathering provisions of all kinds necessary to the troops, and to advise with me of securing the country from the Rebels' forces, and easing it from our own as much as may consist with the preservation of those forces committed to my charge, and I shall endeavour to give” a becoming “account to the House of my zeal to the King's service and respect to their orders.” Copy. Supplement.

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1642[-3], February 11. Cawood.—“I am very sorry that you should have the least occasion to thinke that I am not mindfull of that freindship which I shall ever soe vawew. I make noe question, but you will still honor me with your good opinion, untill you finde I doe some act unworthy of itt, which I know you never shall. I should thinke it happines enough to me and my posterity that any act of mine might prove an advantage to his Majestie and a settlement to this distracted kingdome, and whatsoever ill hap I have had to be scandald with his Majestie I hope to make itt appeare that his honor and safety are as deare and pretious to me, as to those that have made far greater braggs. For Sir Ralph Hopton’s miracles or Sir Hugh Cholmley’s defeat, they are noe motives to me. I should as soone doe what I thinke is fitt for an honest man to doe after my Lord of Essex had gott a victory as before. I confesse I pin my faith upon noe man’s sleeve, nor will I follow any man’s courses, if I be not satisfied that they sute with honor and justice. I hope to see the endeavors of honest men prevayle soe far, now that the propositions are gone to the King, that wee shall once agayne see truth and peace in our dayes, and I wish with all my hart that which side soever will not condiscend to wave trifles for the settlement of Church and State that his owne side may leave him. For my owne part rather then be a slave to etheir I would live of bread and water in another kingdome. I am of your opinion if we agree not wee shall trouble one another to little purpose. But that I was turnd the wandering Jew you had heard before this from” me. Seal. [N. II., 156.]

The SAME to the SAME.

1642[-3], February 12. Cawood.—“I am glad for the prisonniers’ sake that the time is soe neere. I make noe question but every man will contribute his endeavors to a worke of soe great charity. All things promised shall be really performed by” me. Seal. [N. II., 157.]

The SAME to the SAME.

Same date and place.—“You are pleased still to increase the obligation of him that was before as much a servant to your person and worth as ever any freind you had in the world, and truly itt is a great comfort to me in the midst of these mighty disturbances, which every private and the publicke groanes under, that I have soe noble a freind to rely on in these great exigencies of the Commonwealth. I know your Lordship’s quality estate and good affection in the country where you have lived may make you more happy than anything att Court can, although I well know your Lordship’s great interest there. The cause is playne why those Cesars would fall into the East Riding more then into the West, because they thinke there will be fewer blowes then in the West, for there you shall constantly have their advice to fall on. I know them of old, your Lordship’s respects to me is noe lesse for that, but I would I could meet with a knot of them single to make sport. You may remember Leeds and the Commaunder in Chief.” [N. WALTER WROTTESLEY to SIR SAMPSON EVERS.

1642, April 20. Wrotesley.—Enclosing a particular of the conduct of Mr. Thomas Leveson, and desiring him to move the House for a Ne Execat Regnum, “that the House may be acquainted with his carriages before he goes.” Enclosed :

The said Particular.

1642, April 9.—“The said day Mr. Thomas Leveson sent . . . to John Tanner, . . . an armourer in Wolverhampton to demand his horseman’s arms, who gave them answer he was not to deliver them without command from the Deputy-Lieutenants. . . . Mr. Leveson” then “came himself in person . . . to the said John Tanner’s shop, and spoke these words, ‘Sirrah! why did you not send me my armes.’? John Tanner submissively replied with his hat in his hand . . . that he was not to deliver them without order from the Deputy-Lieutenants, and therefore wished him not to take it ill. Whereupon Mr. Leveson asked, ‘who were Deputy-Lieutenants?’ to which John Tanner told him, Mr. Crompton and Mr. Wrotesley and others; and thereupon Mr. Leveson in a violent passion said that Mr. Wrotesley was a fool and a knave, and he, meaning the said John Tanner, was a stinking rogue, and he would whip him and have him set by the heels; and with those words with a cane which he had in his hand stroke him two or three blows, one whereof hit him on the head and made a great knob in the skin thereof.” (See Commons’ Journals, ii. 554.) SIR NICHOLAS LOFTUS to ROBERT REYNOLDS.

1642, September 16. Dublin.—I find all things here in a miserable condition. All the soldiers are wasted away with sickness, death, and slaughter; all the provisions of powder, match, and ammunition, are spent. If the enemy were to know our weakness, we should hardly be able to hold out for six weeks. Unless some governor be sent having the countenance of the state in England, all things will fall into lamentable confusion. The army is so weak that it cannot do any service or go abroad ten miles from the city. What is done in the provinces of Munster, Ulster, and Connaught, we cannot learn. The rebels here rejoice in the distractions of England. They have divers agents in England, from whom they expect great comfort. If the 28,000*l.* designed to be sent hither do not come, we shall have this small army in a confusion of mutiny. I wish I were out of the kingdom before they hear of the stay of it. I wish that the Parliament had sent a committee to Dublin, as I desired. [N. XI., 131.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1643, April 1. Beverley.—“I am very sorry you should ever harbour such an opinion of me, as to think that any motive whatsoever could ever move me to betray the public trust I have undertaken, unless they had unquestionably fallen from principles of honour and honesty, I could never have satisfied myself but I should have been the scorn and byword of every boy in the street. . . . My particular affection to your person was a motive to me to be glad to serve you if a way might be found out to do it as befitted a gentleman, otherwise I will not serve the greatest Emperor, although reward and punishment were proposed in the highest measure, and therefore for an end of the treaty as you please. I shall speak no more of it at all; but now to give you a taste that all is not as you think at Court I shall freely tell you this, that within this four days some very near her Majesty spoke such words of contempt and disgrace of you as truly for my part I could not hear them repeated with patience, and you will plainly see if they dare venture it, you will have a successor. This . . . is not fiction, and further such offers of grace and favour and honour have been made within this few days to your servants here with a very great undervaluing of you as may be you will not believe; but it shall not be said that an answer shall be returned to any of them. . . . I speak not this for myself, I can shift in any fortune, but for the great esteem I have of your worth, that you be not abused and ungratefully used by the malice of your enemies that envy your virtues. . . . Postscript.—For the Lincolnshire business you know my near relations there, and I confess, at the instance of such friends as I could not deny, and with great importunity, made me seem content they should use my name, which they persuaded themselves would do their business good, standing but then in a reasonable condition.” [N. XI., 209.]

THE SAME to the SAME.

1643, April 3. Beverley.—“I received your two letters, and for my promise that you write of I believe that I might write some such thing, and I am in the same mind still that I should be glad of an opportunity to serve his Majesty, but it must be such a one as not to bring upon me the odious name of knavery; but now for the particular you write of, upon your engagement, which I confess I trust above all, that it shall be made use of as to your private, I shall give you all the particulars. The words were these, ‘that you were a sweet General, lay in bed until eleven o’clock and combed till 12, then came to the Queen, and so the work was done, and that General King did all the business.’ They were spoken by my Lady Cornwallis in the hearing of Mr. Portington, a fellow cunning enough; and this to my father and another gentleman with many other words of undervaluing, which he said were spoken by others; for the great offers that were made, they came from my Lord Goring, the instrument Mr. George Butler, and it was offered that he should meet my father in any place upon his word, and strange things to be really performed. The great esteem that I have of your private friendship leads me to do this, and not anything of the public; and if you think the friendship of a gentleman worth your acceptance you shall have it with as much affection and integrity to your particular as you can expect, and I shall be faithful to you, whatsoever become of the public, and for their Court tricks I value them not, as never intending to be within the reach of them, God saying Amen; for I have taken such course as if the times be bad to me my wife and children have to put meat in their mouths, and if I live I shall shark for meat and drink, and if I be knockt in the head the care is taken, I need not a winter jerkin. For attending you I doubt I cannot, Sir Hugh Cholmeley's business hath drawn such a jealousy upon me and our people talk at large. . . . You can expect nothing at Court, truly the women rule all, and what certainty can be hoped from them he that knows them may easily guess; strengthen yourself with such friends as will not forsake you upon every . . . of the Court . . . Although I am not worthy to advise you, this course all wise men have taken. You have now done great service, that will be forgotten when they think they can shift without you." Blanks in transcript. [N. XI., 210.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1643, April 14. Lincoln.—“It is a part of my unhappiness that I am necessitated by my employment to be so far distant from you, and not to hear of your well-being by a line or two; I have not been idle since you writt last to do his Majesty and your Lordship the best service I could, although to bring that about I was glad to go seemingly the contrary. I have since I came into this town dealt with some of my friends that they would not be so violent against his Majesty's service, and was bold to promise them a pardon if they would retire and give way that this country might be wholly at his devotion, the gentlemen are so considerable that of my knowledge, if they desist, there shall not be a man here to hold up his hand against his Majesty; I was so earnest with them that I am confident it will be done, if your Lordship will be pleased to return me an assurance that they shall have his Majesty's favour and pardon. The gentlemen are Sir Christopher Wray and Sir Edward Ayscough, men as considerable as any in the North, and for myself, your interest in me must wholly guide me. I shall submit to such a course as you shall think fit for him that you were pleased to name your friend; and . . . when this is done I hope it will appear, that none hath done that great considerable service as you have done, and I doubt not but his Majesty's grace and favour will be on you accordingly. . . ." [N. XI., 220.]

1643, April 15. Exeter.—“The last week during our cessation I went to Bristol, where I was in hopes to have found Sir William Waller, but he was then employed upon very good service, and could not have leisure to give me a meeting; so in my return back to this place I visited Bridgewater and Taunton . . . where I have placed some few men to garrison there; and I have given order to make some works in both places, that in short time I trust in God I shall secure those places from all danger. From thence I went to Barnstaple, Bideford, and Appledore, and those places likewise I have taken care of, and doubt not but by God's blessing to prevent by those works and the good affection of the inhabitants . . . all invasions whatsoever . . . either by sea or land. I intended to have come thence as upon Monday last, but meeting with some intelligence from Wales I stayed one day more, I hope to very good purpose, if it shall please God to send favourable winds, for I dispatched out two small barques with 50 musketeers in each, and made ready for the next day three good ships all well manned, and so gave them my commission to ply to and again upon the Severn Sea, for I was informed from very honest men that came from Wales, that the Earl of Worcester with his whole family were come down in very great haste to . . . Swansea, there intending to take shipping, for one of the revolted ships of Bristol did then ride in that harbour, so I gave command that those two small barques, having in them above 14 oars to row if the wind served not, . . . should make an attempt to take that ship; if they failed, the other three ships, being good able ships, might in time and by God's blessing do the work. I have likewise placed both horse and foot upon all the seacoast, that in case any of the Malignants that are fled into Wales should attempt to return home . . . they might be apprehended. The later design hath wrought so good effect that some hath been already taken. I shall give your Lordships a further account concerning our new levies. Our men come in plentifully, especially the seamen, and grow very conformable to our land commanders, being all of them ambitious to be taught the land discipline, which is a thing very rare amongst seamen. I believe that I shall have near 2,000 seamen in my army, so that our foot I esteem shall be about 3,500 men besides our towns well garrisoned, and about some eight troops of horse, of dragoons none at all, for I have found that they serve their own turns by plundering and robbing, but do little service or duty at all. It pleased God to favour us with the blessing of such a prosperous wind that we received from Holland about 1,500 good muskets, of which we stood in great need, so that now we shall be fitted to march into the field within a few days, all other materials being in a good readiness, as tents and ammunition. . . . The gentlemen of the counties of Devon and Somerset take infinite pains and deserve a favourable acceptance from both Houses and the whole Kingdom. I shall not fail on my part to use . . . my best endeavours to deserve the title of a faithful and painful labourer in this vineyard. Postscript.—Our Commissioners at Plymouth now upon the treaty are in expectation of 10 days more cessation, which in all our judgements may advantage us exceedingly, by reason our men understand no discipline as yet.” [N. XI., 221.]

ARTHUR DAKINS to the DEPUTY-LIEUTENANTS OF ESSEX.

1643, April 17. Watford.—Desiring them to take into their serious consideration what upon the general and earnest entreaty both of officers and soldiers I am to present by the bearer. On our march out of Essex by the directions of Lord Grey of Warke we, as far as we could, obeyed all his orders, and we are now quartered at Watford on the edge of Hertfordshire, out of which neither officer or soldier is willing to move, being out of the Association, without some special and authentic order, and such accommodation as may relieve them in their marches, and secure them from the enemy. They expect, and I doubt not, resolve with alacrity and courage suddenly to fall upon the enemy, but the want of the necessaries I shall propound is a main stop and hindrance to their better resolutions. First, the want of close waggons to transport and keep dry our ammunition, next a surgeon, to look to the hurt, maimed, or sick, as we have divers already, and have left some behind not able to travel for want of these conveniences, next an able and religious teacher to apply and administer comfort and courage to our soldiers. We want likewise a sutler, a quarter-master, a provost-marshal, and an armourer, but for these three last we shall not trouble you, because we have partly provided them already. A larger supply of ammunition is also required. [N. XI., 222.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1643, April 18. Lincoln.—“I received your letter and your safe conduct by my trumpet, but with them a message, that I must either come this day to you or not at all, and indeed the safe conduct is only until Wednesday night. I was very sorry to see myself put upon an impossibility, for it was 12 o'clock before the boy came, and then I had to acquaint those gentlemen with it, and ride 26 miles after, which could not be done in that time. . . . If your occasions do at this time call you northward that I cannot for the present attend you, yet I doubt not but to make it appear when I have the honour to wait upon you that his Majesty's service here hath all that time by your means made a very large progress; for I hope to gain my Lord Willoughby and all those that have here either power or reputation. One thing yesterday disadvantaged me much, a letter that I received from some gentlemen at Newark about the exchanging of prisoners, so full of pride and folly, and what is not in a gentleman, that those men of quality here said nothing in the whole business troubled them so much as joining with men of so great folly and little worth; the letter I have sent you; they had an answer sharp enough, and they will never be treated with again by any that understands himself.” [N. XI., 223.]

THE KENTISH COMMITTEE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, April 19. Rochester.—“We find the weekly tax would go cheerfully on, were it not for some obstacles that must be removed. And although there be many branches, yet we find they all spring from one head, that is the Malignant Clergy, who both privately whisper and publickly speak against the unlawfulness of it, and so stagger the minds of their parishioners, for we find not much opposition, but where such are who are as malicious to this as the subscriptions. We shall humbly offer these two cures for this disease; first when any such minister hath two livings, that one be sequestered and put in the hands of some man better affected, when but one, if he persist in instilling such principles into his ignorant parishioners he be also sequestered until these distractions shall have an end. Then that where any shall refuse that some two or three in a parish so refusing be returned up to the House to receive such punishment as will be a warning to others, for it will be a toil to any Collector to distrain for so many petty sums, and infinitely retard the payment which had need to be quickened." [N. XI., 224.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to LORD GREY OF GROBY.

1643, April 20.—(The effect appears from Commons' Journals, iv. 52.) [N. XI., 225.]

The EARL OF PEMBROKE, JOHN PYM, and others, to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1643, April 21.—Concerning the seizure of four horses by Cornet Corbett from Thomas Southol's stable, two being his own, and two belonging to Mr. De Valls, page of the backstairs to the Queen, both Frenchmen, on whose behalf the French Agent had interfered, and suggesting it would be fit to restore them, as the Parliament was likely to send some person into France, for which this act would be but an ill preparation. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 55, 75.) [N. XI., 228.]

WILLIAM PALMER, Mayor, and two Aldermen, to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, April 21. Barnstaple.—Desiring authority to proceed with their fortifications and indemnity for any damage to private property they might thereby cause. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 63, 67; and Lords' Journals, vi. 27.) [N. XI., 229.]

EDMUND PRIDEAUX to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, April 26, past 12 at night. Exeter.— . . . "Our intelligence came just as did from Keinton field, the rogues that ran away brought certain advice that all our army was routed, which put all the city of Exon into a great distraction ; some time after, others came that gave better hopes ; at last we received the certain intelligence. . . . The Major got as much honour by his honourable retreat from Lan-ceston, as by his victory at Okehampton. In his return he lost not one man, nor in the skirmish lost not any musket or any considerable thing, though he slew divers of the enemy in his retreat, and it is confest 100 were slain in the whole whereof Captain Basset of the isle of Scilly was one . . . and he that succeeded him in that command was also taken prisoner, and some others of quality were slain also. One of Chudleigh's field pieces being in danger in the retreat to be lost, and he being resolved to adventure his life rather than leave anyone behind him, and having given command to a prime officer to fetch him off, being danger in it he refused, then the Major himself did it, and had 500 shot at him, yet brought him away clear, drove the oxen himself that carried it and had no hurt. For the business at Okehampton, it was so full of discreet valour and resolution, as if the particulars were related it would be admired how it could be managed by so young a man. The enemy had 500 horse and dragoons and 5,000 foot having 57 colours as the prisoners confess, the work was done by 108 horse without any other help. The thing is almost incredible . . . that 108 horse should . . . defeat 500 horse and dragoons and 5,000 foot, and yet it is most certain true it was done the last night in the night, and he had some advantage of ground. He hath taken some prisoners, three colours, Captain Digbie's standard, twelve drums, some hundreds of muskets and pikes and seven barrels of powder and many other things ; had his foot seconded him, or those horse not gone a plundering he had taken his ordnance and wholly defeated that army. . . . Chudleigh lost not one man . . . had only two hurt. We have taken bags of letters, books of accounts, and other things, which will discover much of their wicked purposes. You will perceive in part what was intended . . . by what was written from the King. . . . The truth for so much as is written is not to be doubted, for I have it from Major Chudleigh and the captains who are all come to . . . Exon this evening, and the enemy with his forces left, not run away nor slain, are returned into Cornwall. . . . The mariners and seamen, to say no worse, were a little too willing homewards, though Captain Chudleigh used them with all civil and winning respects. He hath much won the hearts of the soldiers, in fetching them off so bravely and safely in the retreat from Lanceston." [N. XI., 235.]

HENRY MARTEN to MR. BAKER.

1643, May 2.—(Printed in Commons' Journals, iii. 68.) [N. XI., 241.]

SIR EDWARD AYSOGHE and SIR CHRISTOPHER WRAY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, May 2. Lincoln.—“Necessity inforceth us still to let you know how much those forces with Colonel Cromwell are retarded, which long since were promised to our assistance. . . . 'Tis not fear makes us doubt the defence of this place, for by the great industry and care of Lieutenant-General Hotham it is now made considerable to any force but my Lord Newcastle's whole army.” (For the effect of the rest see Commons' Journals, iii. 75.) [N. XI., 243.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to Major-General CHUDLEIGH.

1643, May 2.—Thanking him and his officers for their services at Okehampton. [N. XI., 245.]

ROBERT KNOLLYS to HENRY JERMYN.

1643, May 3. The Hague.—“I have twice sent unto you, first by my man, whom I have now heard was unfortunately cast away at Hartlepool, the other . . . by way of Scotland. . . . Mr. Strickland is as busy as ever, he hath and continues his going to all the particular States as he did to those of Arnhem in order to their association to assist the Parliament. His information of the Prince of Orange's giving license for 22 Dunkirk ships hath been a great occasion of his being not so well entertained as formerly.” [N. XI., 247.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM to the EARL OF NEWCASTLE.

1643, May 4. Lincoln.—“I am somewhat ashamed that I should make you believe more certainly than I doubt you will find in some gentlemen here. The truth is, they are divided; some, upon the business of the South going high, are off again, others still the same men. I should desire your opinion what to do in it, for my Lord Willoughby hangs most off. I think you are mistaken in my father, for the reason of his standing a little aloof is, that he so infinitely wishes the peace of the kingdom, which he thinks the King's last answer tends not to, that I know it hath staggered him much, and my not having opportunity to speak with him since, and some other that do very ill offices in that place; but I hope to remedy all. There have been those ladies treating that you write of, and they were as well fitted with an answer of nothing, but there is another manner of treatier there than they, and it was said from a good hand, that the Queen thought much you did not enough communicate with her and take her directions, but you were not yet to be displeas'd. . . . For myself I am as much your servant as ever, and twenty such businesses as Reading shall make no alteration, but these tickle people put me to my wits' end, yet there is hope to overcome the difficulty with a little patience, if his Majesty's affairs suffer not too much by it, it may do well yet. Our lying still and not hasting Cromwell to join is, I am sure, some advantage; for he is still kept to eat up the fat clergy at Peterborough, although my Lord of Essex hath writt often to the contrary to him. For what Sir Hugh Cholmeley says it is no matter, it is not the first time he hath scandall'd his friends, and then denied it. I confess I am in a very great strait in these businesses, your Lordship's wisdom can best give directions in it.” [N. XI., 248.]

Captain JOHN HOTHAM, SIR EDWARD AYSCOGHE, and SIR CHRISTOPHER WRAY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, May 5. Lincoln.—“We cannot but hear that some to colour their own fears, others, that the blame should rather light upon others than themselves, have reported that we have not been so diligent to promote the public service in these parts as we ought to have been; to vindicate ourselves . . . we have thought fit to give you a narrative of some particulars; there hath not at any time this three weeks passed one day that we have not writt both to Colonel Cromwell, the Norfolk Gentlemen, and my Lord Grey to appoint a place of meeting, and we would march to them wheresoever it were; their answer always was they would meet, but something of importance was first to be done in those countries they then were in, which hitherto hath been the cause that little is done, only the particular countries where we quarter put to a very great charge without benefit to the public. We have sent you here inclosed the last letter that came from Colonel Cromwell, that you may see we are in no fault. The Committee here is grown to two, all else at London or Hull, and so they may with great ease sit safe and talk of what they please of those actions and particulars they take up at second hand. We shall desire this justice, that those of this county may be sent down, and . . . some soldiers of knowledge with them, and they shall have all here surrendered into their hands to manage, and it shall be delivered to them in as good or better condition than it was yet in Lincolnshire." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 75.) [N. XI., 253.] Enclosed :

WILLIAM LENTHALL to the EARL OF ESSEX.

1643, June [2].—"Yours of the 1st of June touching the various reports of your stay at Causam (Caversham) being read in the House of Commons they have commanded me, in answer thereto, to let you know, that the great care and good affection, with which your Excellency hath constantly proceeded in the management of this weighty and public affair, doth so far supersede all vain reports and vulgar censures, that with them they can make no impression to impute the least unto your Excellency, and your letter rather gives them fresh cause of comfort and acknowledgement that your truly noble and most Christian resolution can freely pass such rumours as these without variation or discouragement which, as it is your Excellency's honour, so it cannot but produce God's glory and the Kingdom's peace." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 113.) [N. XI., 267.]

SIR ROBERT COOKE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 2. Gloucester.—"The success of Sir William Waller's late design upon Worcester was not so prosperous as to hasten an account especially the opportunity of sending it being wanting, yet not so ill as perhaps report may render it. Sir William, finding a necessity of drawing his forces from these parts, was desirous to leave in as good condition as he might this county afflicted on the one side with the Worcester garrison, and the rather because it was impossible for him to march away with a convenient strength, unless he withdrew the garrison from Teuxbury, consisting with officers of near 1,000 horse and foot. In this regard he held it both necessary for this country and of great consequence to the main to attempt the taking in of Worcester; that so the works being slighted it might not remain a strength for the Parliament's enemies and give assurance to their chief body of retreat upon occasion of disaster. Upon Monday morning he presented his forces before it, all that day assaulted it, and especially at two gates, Sudbury and St. John's; the cannon played on both sides all day, the defence was obstinate, yet within less than four hours we had beaten the enemy out of all their outworks and gained the suburb, and lodged our musketeers at the very port, and were in as fair a way in so short a time of gaining the town as could be. But Sir William Brereton's forces not coming in according as was expected, and Sir William Waller being called away by no less than five packets that evening out of the West, exclaiming that all would be lost there, if he did not immediately advance that way; it was held necessary to rise to attend that service, as of greater importance. What their loss was we cannot certify, but are credibly informed, a serjeant-major and a cannoneer, besides others, were slain. We lost the day before Captain Lower, killed by scouts, that day Captain Balls, an ensign, and in all about sixteen. Sir William Waller's trumpeter, after he had delivered his summons, was unsoldierly shot in the thigh by one Sterner at the animation of the Governor Colonel Beaumont. On Tuesday morning Sir William Waller drew from thence to Teuxbury and so to Gloucester, leaving order with me to throw down as much of the works as the conveniency of my time would afford, which I believe is so done that they are made unuseful, though not fully slighted, and to withdraw the forces from Teuxbury to Gloucester from whence he had sooner departed, had not the impossibility of either marching without money or getting it without the employment of his troops to collect it, a little hindered his speed. The country is much troubled at his departure, and unless my Lord General's motion shall divert the other forces they fear the worst." [N. XI., 269.]

SIR WALTER ERLE TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 3. Dorchester.—“Had not the enemy's sudden and near approach . . . cut off all intercourse betwixt this and London, necessity as well as duty would have obliged me to have given you an account ere this of the . . . condition of this county. . . The enemy is now removed though to a place no further distant from us than that where they formerly were yet the way is more open, and so the opportunity of conveying letters better than it was. . . Presently on their approach to Salisbury, seeing this county to be in a weak condition, and the forces we had in readiness being but a troop of horse and a company of dragoons and a foot company or two more, no way considerable for the opposing of such a force as was coming toward it, I resorted to Sir William Waller, being then but a day's journey from me. To him I represented the condition that we were in, making it plainly to appear that unless he came speedily with succours, . . . not only this place but the whole county would in all likelihood be lost, urging therewithal the consequences of it in regard of the port towns and the magazines, which I have often mentioned in the House to be of great importance. Him I found very ready and willing to answer my desires and to give order for the drawing of his forces together that he might presently march; so I returned full of hopes, that, he once advancing towards the enemy then at Salisbury, the course would be diverted. But I know not how, some other direction . . . intervening, he went a quite contrary way and sat down before Worcester, the enemies in the mean space increasing in strength, and after awhile advancing towards us and coming to Blandford 12 miles distant from us, there to take up their quarter. This, together with the being in a manner out of hope of receiving any aid . . . in time, was enough to startle us, the rather for that this place being our chief quarter could not by men of judgment be thought tenable, besides that those slender works which we had, wanted men wherewith to man them. Yet . . . we resolved to cast ourselves upon God Almighty's providence and protection, and, in case the enemy should come on, to defend ourselves the best that we could; and thereupon having some spare arms gotten in from the county, we got in more men, and put ourselves in a reasonable good posture; our soldiers upon all occasions being ready to answer the alarms, and manifesting much courage and resolution; all the magistrates, commanders, and officers obliging themselves by solemn protestation to live and die together in the defence of the place; which as it is supposed, coming to the enemy's knowledge made him to balk us, and to march away towards Sherborne, where he now is. Whilst our eyes were thus fixed upon Prince Maurice and the Marquess of Hertford, upon a sudden tidings came unto us, that the Cornish were advancing towards us on the other side, and were come within little more than a day's march of us. You may imagine what apprehensions this might cause; in plain truth, we thought the case so altered by our being beset with two armies that might upon a day's warning join . . . and sit down before this place, as that we were fain to betake ourselves to new counsels, the strength that we were to encounter being treble to what we had prepared for. Whilst we were with much anxiety deliberating what course to take, it pleased God to resolve our doubts by some intelligence . . . of the advancing of Colonel Popham with a good strength both of horse and foot towards us, and immediately thereupon also of Sir William Waller's being come away from Worcester and making all the haste he could to be with us. These tidings were and are a good comfort . . . to us, but . . . the enemy's forces on both sides by the help of the Posse Comitatus increase so fast, as that, unless some other force come in the rear, it will be a hard pull to clear these parts, as it is intended and desired. They get in all the arms, horses, &c., they make men compound for their arms that were by us taken from them, they plunder the best affected, and commit all manner of outrages. God of His mercy deliver this poor country from such guests as these. . . . Be pleased to acquaint the House with our miserable condition which is likely to be much worse and more miserable, if some speedy course be not taken. We were in a good way of raising money and of settling the peace of the county, but you see how we are interrupted. . . . I humbly desire that I may not be cast upon impossibilities, as I shall be if help be not afforded, when extreme necessity calls for it. I have a great burthen lying upon me, my fellow Deputy-Lieutenants being for their better safety retired into Poole and leaving me alone to manage the whole business.

Postscript :—Since the sealing up of my letter I have certain intelligence that the Cornish with all or most part of their army are advanced as far as Axminster within 22 miles of this place, and, as some of them give out and by the providing of carriages yesterday at Sherborne it seems probable, that both armies are to meet this day about Crookhorne; this being so, you may judge in what a condition we are." [N. XI., 270.]

SIR ROBERT COOKE, Colonel BURGHILL, and others the COMMITTEE
AT GLOUCESTER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

Same date. Gloucester.—“It is true that God’s blessing upon Sir William Waller’s weak forces hath often raised our admiration and engaged our thankfulness. . . . But at this time Sir Ralph Hopton is marching very strong from Cornwall, Prince Maurice with the Lord Marquess strong and increasing in power are advancing towards him; if they meet the conjunction will in time prove dangerous to you, presently to us. Our desires are to interfere and with hazard to endeavour a prevention, but our men are not only too few to encounter theirs, but, which is worse, too many to be paid by us, and the want of money hath bred such mutinous dispositions in the soldiers that no arguments will make them stir. If by your advice his Excellency would be pleased to supply us with forces proportionable to that party that is advanced from Oxford, whence we little expected spare forces for remote attempts, and that you would be pleased to supply us speedily with a good sum of money, we should hope, by God’s assistance, to afford you such an account as may justify your thrift for the Commonwealth in redeeming a heavy rent with a reasonable fine. You may perhaps hear a noise of new regiments raising, and so over-value the strength of these parts, but the truth is, for want of money neither can the new be completed, nor the old encouraged. If we can obtain no supply we must wait upon God, and petition him to list our preservation amongst his wonders; or if we sink under the burden, it must suffice that we have done our duty to our country in troubling you with these necessary though unpleasant lines.” (For these three letters see Commons’ Journals, iii. 116.) [N. XI., 272.]

SIR EDWARD AYSCOGH and JOHN BROXOLME to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 3. Lincoln.—“The cloud which hath long hung over this county, it hath pleased God . . . in some measure to disperse. For the malignant party at Gainsborough, being assured that the strength of our horse was joined to the great body about Nottingham, were puffed up with such boldness as . . . to range over the county to assess towns, to take prisoners and to drive men’s horses, and this course being long held by them, the 1^o June with some troops and horse and dragoons they passed to Market Rasen and from thence to many other places in this county, still doing their pleasure to the prejudice of the people. 2^o June they marched to and lodged at Louth. Their leaders were Sir John Brook, Sir Charles Dallyson, and Captain Whitecoat. We being advertised of the way they took, and assisted with 300 horse brought out of several parts to this town the day before, sent our men to waylay them in their return homewards, but such was the valour and vigilancy of the commanders and soldiers, as without rest to themselves or ease to their horses they arrived at Louth very early this morning, which they entered and subdued, and have this day by noon brought hither near 100 prisoners and as many horses with some arms and other considerable booty. The chief commanders of the enemy saved themselves by flight." . . . [N. XI., 271.]

The KENTISH COMMITTEE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 3. Maidstone.—Again complaining of the neglect of the Kentish members of the House, except Sir E. Patherich, to assist them in the weekly tax, sequestrations, and assessment. [N. XI., 273.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to the COMMITTEE at DERBY.

1643, June 3.—Replying to their letter of May 27th, and stating the arms, &c. to be delivered to their agents. (See Commons' Journals, iii. 111, 113.) [N. XI., 268.]

WILLIAM LENTHALL to SIR WILLIAM WALLER.

1643, June 9.—On behalf of the House, thanking him and his officers and assuring him "that although for the present they cannot send you relief proportionable to their desires and your merit, yet they have resolved to send you a further supply with as much speed as the condition of their affairs can admit, and have given an express command to two worthy members . . . to take a more particular care of you in the absence of Sir Arthur Hasilrigg." [N. XI., 274.]

SIR WILLIAM BRERETON and WILLIAM MOWBRAY to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 15. Namptwich.—"By the letters . . . from Sir Nicholas Byron, Governor of Chester, to the Lord Capel, taken amongst many others at Whitchureh, . . . dated April 5^o and . . . 28 . . . it appears that they then hoped shortly to receive good supplies out of Ireland, which are not to be taken notice of until they come, such is the expression of the letter dated Apr. 5^o 1643. In the other letter . . . Sir Nicholas Byron expresseth, that next the business of Reading, if it should miscarry, our retreat must be into these parts with those forces the King can make, and not stay in the midst of an enemy to be surrounded on all sides, but where we may countenance such succours as may easily come out of Ireland. . . In pursuance hereof some rebels are already landed and entertained, many more are daily expected, and this morning I was advertised from Liverpool that there were two barques of Irish rebels come into Chester Water, which our ships could not prevent, the wind having been constantly averse since their coming to Liverpool. The fortifications are as strong as the judgement and art of those men that command there can contrive them; their preparation of ordnance is suitable thereto, there being no less than 40 cannons as we have heard and the Castle victualled for three years . . . Some of them in their letters which I have seen have affirmed this city impregnable . . . We will only add the conclusion of Sir Nicholas Byron's letter. However things happen, Shrewsbury and Chester must be our last refuge, and so to provide for them in time, as no thought of quitting them must be entertained." (See Commons' Journals, iii. 143.) [N. XI., 275.]

PHILIP FRANCIS, Mayor, and others, to SIR JOHN YOUNG.

1643, June 15. Plymouth.—"We are here in a deplorable condition, our whole county being harrowed by Sir Ralph Hepton lately in their going forth, and the forces left behind them, joining with those of the Sheriff raised by his power, plunder as well in our parts in the South as those in the East about Exon, stopping all intelligence between us and them. It is no small addition to our unhappiness that our garrison soldiers being necessitated for want of pay . . . are many of them stolen out of town, and now that our Committees are come hither upon our earnest and often solicitations to levy money upon the 20th part of men's estates, we . . . perceive their purpose is to carry it all from us, unless they receive orders from the House to dispose of such money here as may be . . . necessary for our occasions." We therefore desire orders to them to leave as much money as they raise in this south division for the use of this garrison, the loss whereof is the loss of the whole county. [N. XI., 276.]

SIR WILLIAM WALLER to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 25. Bath.—Returning thanks to the House for the provision for "these poor troops, which came very seasonably to keep life in us, even then when we were in a gasping condition." [N. XI., 286.]

SIR PHILIP STAPILTON and others to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 26. Thame.—"Being commanded by my Lord General to acquaint you with the condition of the army we thought fit to inform you that the last money being paid out to the soldiers will provide them victuals until Monday next and no longer, if so long; for we find our living in the field so near the enemy altereth much the condition of our men, who whilst they lay in garrison, and had necessaries and victuals, they were in some measure contented, but now they are not, nor will be without constant pay, their provisions not being to be got without present money, which when the country find to grow short, they will forbear to bring in at all, without which the army cannot subsist. . . . We likewise offer to you other considerations, which are the continual decay of our horses occasioned by the daily hard service they are now put upon, since we took the field; the present supply whereof is of absolute necessity, yet orders for recruiting of our horse being only put into the hands of the Deputy-Lieutenants hath already weakened our strength in horse, the Deputy-Lieutenants to whom his Excellency writt not furnishing him with horses according to his letters, for remedy whereof we desire you would take some speedy and effectual course for the future, and that there being a great want of pistols and saddles you would please to take order for the provision of and sending down to the army such convenient provision of both as can be for the present procured. We further present unto you our want of men for recruits which we desire may be to the number of 2,000 to be sent up with all speed, as also of muskets, pikes, swords, bandoleers for those and other recruits of foot without which all those recruits will be altogether unserviceable." [N. XI., 287.]

THE EARL OF ESSEX TO WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 28. T[h]ame.—“The displeasure that the officers of this army are fallen into in general and I in particular came unexpected to me; however I received it with all obedience; for the plundering of the Cavaliers at Wickham, Newport, and other parts, thus much I can say, that I have often writt up, that it is impossible, if this army was three times as strong, to preserve the enemies from plundering; we had neither foot nor horse at any of those places, but one troop of the Association which was without order; and the enemy did not stay, as those that speaks with the most, above three quarters of an hour at Wickham. Sir Philip Stapilton and Colonel Middleton with most of the horse were sent presently out, but they were all retreated and in some confusion. I am sorry it should be conceived that through our neglect the countrys should be discouraged from sending any more men or money for the relief of the army. Sir, hitherto it is but the cries of poor people that suffer which have grieved me; but the last, that our neglect should bring dishonour to the Parliament in making men believe the subjects are much safer in the protection of the King's army than of the Parliament's, wounds us so deeply that I must be forced to say, that never army served with more fidelity than this; for my own particular, I thank God, my heart cannot accuse me either of want of care or hazard that I could conceive might be for the service of the State. It is well known to divers that sits in your House, how little ambitious I was of the great honour the Parliament was pleased to put upon me, not out of any want of respect to venture my life for the service of the State, I knowing my own disabilities to undertake so great a charge.

I shall take all the care I can that the army may secure these parts from the ranging of the King's horse and secure the counties between London and the army. My only suit is, that my imperfections may not be a means the army should disband for want of supply; but rather that the army may be paid, and there may be somebody placed in the head of it, in whom they may put confidence in." (For both these letters, see Commons' Journals, iii. 148.) [N. XI., 288.]

TORRELL JOCELYN to SIR HENRY MILDMAV.

1643, June 30. The fort at the Hermitage.—“I was counselled by you to repair to the House and there to declare the state of the Isle of Ely. But that very evening a messenger was sent unto me to let me know that those forces that were left under my command at Ely for the security of the Isle were in my absence thrust forth, and fearing that the like should be done at this fort, which is a very considerable passage, I made haste to secure it, and here I have been ever since and though daily threatened, yet I shall be able to make it good for one week.” [N. XI., 292.]

The COMMITTEE FOR CAMBRIDGESHIRE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

SIR WALTER ERLE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, June 30. Wareham.— . . . “Since the departure of Prince Maurice, and the Marquess of Hertford with their forces out of these parts, and their joining with the Cornish men upon the taking of . . . Taunton and Bridgewater, and the besieging of . . . Exeter, the consequence whereof hath been the overrunning and in effect the conquest of two of the greatest and richest counties of this kingdom, men’s hearts fail them exceedingly, so as we find them not anything so forward to engage their persons or estates as formerly; and as for the levying of moneys, whereupon depends the maintaining of those forces which we have gotten together; it is by reason thereof, and of the nearness of that great army, and those other forces, grown to be quite at a stand, every man being afraid, lest the bringing in of his money may be a means to expose him and his estate to rapine and plunder, if any strong party should break in upon us, as is likely enough there may, so as our troops are fallen much in arrear. And now when . . . we had escaped the danger of being swallowed up by that army that passed through our country, and by the way stayed well nigh a fortnight amongst us, we are come to be in a worse condition than ever; and for my part, I am sure, may truly say it, for such commands are laid upon us, as if they be obeyed will in all likelihood utterly ruin us, and if they be not obeyed, what censure we shall incur we know not. For instance now at this present time a command comes from Sir William Waller for me to march towards him with all the strength that I can make; at the very same instant, comes another to require me to provide 300 musketeers to be laid aboard my Lord of Warwick’s fleet, which is bound for the west, neither of which can any way consist with the safety of this county and those places of importance in it which hitherto have been kept for your service. . . . The demands are such, as if either of them be yielded unto, I shall . . . be brought into a far worse condition than ever I was in before, for whereas in the lowest estate that ever I was in for this twelvemonth, I was able to draw out two or three foot companies to assist me upon occasion, besides my troop of horse; now when as within 30 or 40 miles of me, there are upon the matter three several bodies of the enemy that may, whenever they will, send out parties to molest us, I shall not be able to look abroad with so small a number, and that one troop of mine will be the only troop remaining within 40 miles compass, those of the enemy excepted which are many; and this at such a time as we are upon the point of besieging, or at least blocking up of Corfe Castle, that begins exceedingly to annoy us; and when the Isle of Portland lately reduced begins to incline to a second revolt, which will with much more ease take effect, when Weymouth shall be left without a garrison, as it will be if both those commands be obeyed. . . . I rather was in hope . . . that we should have been reinforced with two or three troops of horse. with which I hope we not only should have cleared the western parts of this county, where a party or two, newly raised, begins to spoil and plunder, but all that part of Devonshire, which is betwixt us and Exeter. Thus you see what straits I am brought into. My humble request . . . is that the House may be made acquainted herewith, that so there may be some better course taken for the safety of this county . . . or at least, if businesses through want thereof should miscarry, it may not reflect upon me. . . . In the meantime in obedience to those commands . . . I have in the first place given order for two troops of horse, such as they are, to join with those of Hampshire, and to march towards Sir William Waller, though with no small hazard, and am now giving order for 200 musketeers to be put aboard the fleet, which I suppose will this day come in Portland Road." Postscript.—Desiring the presence of Mr. Brown, which will be very useful in raising money and other business. [N. XI., 294.]

THOMAS STOCKDALE to WILLIAM LENTHALL.

1643, July 1. Halifax.—“I writt to you . . . on Thursday last, since which time the state of our affairs are much altered, being changed from ill into worse. . . . Yesterday morning we drew our forces together consisting of 1,200 commanded men of the garrison of Leeds, seven companies of Bradford, 500 men of Halifax, Pomfret, Paddleworth, Almonberry, and the country thereabouts, twelve companies of foot brought out of Lancashire, and of horse we had ten troops of our own and three from Lancashire, but the troops for the most part weak; we had four pieces of brass ordnance with us and a great part of our powder and match, and many club-men followed us, who are fit to do execution upon a flying enemy, but unfit for other service, for I am sure they did us none; and with this strength, being not full 4,000 men horse and foot armed, we marched from Bradford against the enemy who lay about three miles of us in a village called Aldwalton or Atherton and the places thereabouts. They hearing of our preparation had left their quarters about Howley and chosen that place of advantage being both a great hill and an open moor or common, where our foot could not be able to stand their horse. Their army consisted of 8,000 of their old foot, and about 7,000 new men raised by the Commission of Array, and, as most men say, 4,000 horse, which I could not conceive by view, though the truth is they had 80 cornets, and so might have had more, if their companies had been full and well armed, but indeed there are many both of their horse and foot very slenderly armed. Upon Atherton moor they planted their ordnance and ordered their battalia, but they manned divers houses standing in the enclosed grounds betwixt Bradford and Atherton moor with musketeers, and sent out great parties of horse and foot by the lanes and enclosed grounds to give us fight. Our forlorn hope consisting of horse and foot and dragons was led by Captain Mildmay, to whom was joined Captain Askwith, Captain Morgan, Captain Farrar, Captain Salmon, and Captain Mudd. The van, wherein were placed the 1,200 commanded men from Leeds was led by Major-General Gifford, and the main battle wherein [were] the forces of Lancashire and 500 from the parts about Halifax and the moors had the Lord General himself,

Colonel Ashton, and Colonel Holland in it, and the rear with the garrison forces of Bradford were led by Lieutenant-Colonel Forbes. The horse were commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax, who should have led the main battle, if the Lord General could have been persuaded to absent himself. Our forlorn hope beat back the enemies out of the lanes and enclosed grounds, killing many and taking some prisoners, and then the van coming up fell upon the enemies on the left hand and the main battle upon those on the right hand, and after some dispute beat the enemy both out of the houses they had manned and from the skirts of the moor to the height, killing very many and amongst them two Colonels, one of them, as by description I conclude was Colonel Herne, and our horse very bravely recovered part of the moor from the enemy, and maintained it and the rear fell on in the middle and did good service. Thus far we had a fair day, but the success of our men at the first drew them unawares to engage themselves too far upon the enemies, who having the advantage of the ground, and infinitely exceeded us in numbers, at least five for one, they sent some regiments of horse and foot by a lane on the left hand to encompass our army, and fall on their rear, which forced us to retreat, and our men, being unacquainted with field service, would not be drawn off in any order, but instead of marching fell into running; the commanders did their best to stay them, but in vain, for away they went in disorder, yet they brought off two pieces of the ordnance, and lost the other two and many prisoners, but the estimate of the number I cannot give you. Sir Thomas Fairfax with five or six troops of horse brought off the most part of the main battle, wherein the Lancashire men were, and made his retreat to Halifax very well, for the enemy was gotten so far before him towards Bradford, as he could not reach that place, and with much importunity I persuaded the Lord General to retire, who stayed so long upon the field, until the enemies were got betwixt him and Bradford, yet he took byways and recovered the town. Our loss was not great in commanders, for I do not yet hear of any save Major Talbot killed and Lieutenant-Colonel Forbes taken prisoner. Our loss of prisoners taken by the enemy was great, but the number is not equal to the fear and distraction it hath begotten in the country, which is increased by the Lancashire forces, who are retired home, the commanders not being able to persuade them to stay, as they allege, only we have got some 20 horse and 200 foot of them to stay with us at Halifax, upon promise to pay them ready money for their entertainment, which otherwise absolutely refused. . . . The country is wasted and exhausted and tired out with the weight of the troubles continually falling upon this part of Yorkshire, the soldiers want pay, and, which is worse, arms and powder and other ammunition, and are overcharged with the most potent strength that opposeth the Parliament: insomuch as the soldiers disband and desert the service, and the country overawed cannot longer assist the army; and if speedy supply be not sent with some considerable succour of men, the Lord General will be constrained to accept of some dishonourable conditions from the enemy. . . . I am now at Halifax, to which place I came last night . . . and take opportunity to send this bearer with Sir Thomas Fairfax's warrant to get you speedy notice, lest we be so shut up in Bradford and Leeds as we cannot send. Sir Thomas Fairfax is gone himself to Bradford with some horse and foot that he brought hither yesterday. Hasten some relief to preserve the most constant part of the kingdom. Postscript.—As I was closing this letter, I received a letter and after that a messenger from the Lord General to tell me that the enemy have made eight great shot at the town this day, and have even now recovered certain houses without the works, which if he cannot get fired, will much endanger the loss of the town. Sir Thomas is gone with some succours from hence, and what can be had more, I will get up, but the people stir with fear seeing no succours appear." [N. XI., 295.]

SIR THOMAS PELHAM, SIR THOMAS PARKER, and others, to
WILLIAM LENTHALL.

164[8(?)], June 29. Lewes.—“The magazine at Horsham long since seized upon by the disaffected party, is now employed to arm themselves and adherents, and some numbers are already drawn into a body, which we fear will soon increase, unless timely course be taken . . . for they continue together, and by beating of drum invite men unto them; what influence this disaster may have upon other parts of this county we know not, but have just cause to suspect the worst.” (Dated 1643, but this is almost certainly a mistake for 1648. See letter of June 22, on p. 465.) [N. XI., 290.]

At the end of the Index Volume are “Collections out of a manuscript intituled ‘Memoirs written by the late Earl of Manchester, son to the Lord Privy Seal, made by his own hand.’” The first extract is identical with the latter part of the MS. in the British Museum numbered MSS. Additional 15,567 from page 30 to the end, parts of which are printed in Nalson, and in Gardiner, and then follows a fragment beginning with the passage printed in Nalson, ii. 272, and concluding thus:

“All things proving thus contrary to the endeavours of the king and cross to the hopes and expectations of the Earl of Strafford, his friends proposed to attempt the integrity of Sir William Balfore, then Lieutenant of the Tower, in order to his escape, and the Earl himself, not long before his death, did endeavour to persuade him to give way to his escape, assuring him that if he would connive thereunto he would give him 20,000*l.* and provide a good marriage for his son. But Sir William Balfour replied, he would not falsify the trust reposed in him by the Parliament, and that he was so far from concurring with his Lordship’s desires, as that he would not hearken to any motion tending to his escape.”

Fragment 2.

“In order to the trial of this great man, who was now fallen under so public an odium, as that by the clamour of the people and their tumultuary pressing for justice, it might have been thought that the three kingdoms had owned their hopes of present and future security to have depended on Strafford’s trial and sentence, whatsoever was desired of the Lords was granted and nothing omitted by either House that might [lead] to the discovery of truth. Therefore the House of Commons within few days after they had brought up their general accusation against the Earl of Strafford sent unto the Lords to let them know that they had divers witnesses which they were to produce, some were members of their own House, whom they had ordered to be ready to be examined, when their Lordships should require. Others were members or assistants of the House of Lords, and for those they desired that the Lords would order that they might be examined upon oath, if need required. And because some of the witnesses to be produced were of his Majesty's Privy Council, it was desired that the Lords would take such course as should seem best to their judgement that they also might be examined upon oath if need required. It was further urged by the Commons that Treason was such a crime as in the first preparation and design for the most part it walked in the dark, or, if it came abroad, it was with such disguise as it was hardly to be discovered and therefore it was with great instance recommended to the care and wisdom of their Lordships so to provide, that when any witnesses were produced they might be speedily examined, and both the name of the party and the matter of the interrogatory and answer might be kept secret, till there was occasion to make use of them; by this way subtle practices and combinations might be prevented and the truth secured from corruption and concealment. And it was desired by the Commons that some of their members might be present at those examinations to offer to the Lords such new interrogatories as should be thought necessary."

Fragment 3.

Begins with the first paragraph of the passage printed in Nalson, ii. 206, "When the king" down to "a false and unworthy servant." Then follows (out of order) Sir Henry Vane's paper printed on pages 208, 209, and then follows the rest of page 207 from "yet he thought" to the bottom of the page. It continues thus:

"In order to these preparatory examinations a Committee of the Lords was appointed, to whom an injunction was given that they should not reveal anything concerning the examination of witnesses touching the Earl of Strafford.

The Attorney-General and Mr. Sergeant Glanvil [were] appointed by the Lords to attend the Committee to set down in writing the examinations of witnesses and had an oath of secrecy administered unto them.

The Earl of Strafford being thus removed from power, sequestered from Parliament, and secured in the Tower, and all things in order to the discovery of his Treason being in a way of examination, the House of Commons fell upon the consideration of other persons, who were esteemed criminal, and in so long corruption of government by the intermission and dissolution of Parliaments they found many offenders in ecclesiastical and civil concerns."

Fragment 4.

"By this time the preparatory examinations in the case of the Earl of Strafford were finished; therefore the House of Commons sent to the House of Lords to desire that those examinations might be delivered to a Committee of their House that they might make use of them by way of addition, not of new matter but by reducing the generals into particulars, to the end that what shall appear in the examinations might be applied to the fortifying of the general articles.

They further signified to the Lords that they had entered a protestation in their House and desired it might likewise be entered in their Lordships' Books of Record, that they were not bound up to any course of proceeding, nor that this should be any precedent hereafter to bind them, but that they might proceed in generals, and that they would do so if they saw cause.

Upon this desire the Lords ordered that the examinations should be delivered to the House of Commons.

And now divers particulars coming into debate concerning the trial of the Earl of Strafford, it was referred to the Committee of Privileges to consider of the form and manner of proceeding against him, and likewise what time should be given him to put in his answer, and it was resolved to allow him fourteen days' time to put in his answer in writing to the further impeachment of the House of Commons. They likewise ordered that the Earl of Strafford should make use of counsel no further than the necessity for his defence did require, and wherein counsel might, with the justice of the House of Peers, be afforded to him, and that no delay should be in the proceedings, but all convenient expedition used, according to the desires of the House of Commons.

When the day came wherein the Earl was appointed to put in his answer, the King came to the House of Peers without any notice given, therefore the Lords were without their robes, which was unparliamentary, the King being present. The King being set, made this speech: 'My Lords, before the Earl of Strafford comes to the bar, I give you this reason of my coming, hearing that your Lordships have appointed this day for the Earl of Strafford to bring in his answer to the charge of High Treason. I am come to hear it read, the better to inform myself truly of the business whereby to govern myself the better. I desire you not to think that I do this in any kind to alter justice, nor to put you out of your ordinary way of debate, but I do it to know all that may be said on both sides.'

Then the Lord Keeper, kneeling to his Majesty, according to that reverend custom of that House, and returning to his own place, signified to the Lords that his Majesty's pleasure was that the prisoner should be brought to the bar and his answer read.

According to this direction, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, who is the attendant of that House, brought the Earl of Strafford to the bar, and the first general Articles were read by the Clerk of the Parliament, and then his Lordship's answer was read by one of his Counsel.

After this the particular Articles were read one by one by the Clerk of the Parliament, and the answers by one of the Earl's Counsel.

This being done, the Earl was appointed to withdraw and his Majesty departed from the House.

The Lords, taking into consideration the danger of such a precedent, as that the King should come to the House of Peers and take notice of what business was there to be consulted of: Resolved that they would proceed in the intended business of the day as if nothing had been done when the King was present, ordering that the Earl of Strafford should be commanded to put in his answer, according to former Order. And the Earl was again called to the bar, and demanded to put in his answer, but his Counsel was appointed to read it, and the Earl allowed a stool to sit on, because he was not well and had stood long before, during the King's sitting in the House.

When the Earl came in the Bishops withdrew.

The answer being read the Earl made these desires—

1. To have time to examine his own witnesses.
2. To have the names of those that were examined against him.
3. To cross-examine those witnesses or liberty to except against them.
4. To have liberty to examine his witnesses in writing.
5. To have warrants to bring in his witnesses.

But the Lords would give no answer to these particulars till they had communicated them to the House of Commons. But after a few days the Earl presented a petition to the Lords for an answer to his desires formerly made unto them, and it was ordered that the Earl of Strafford should have warrant from the Lords to produce such witnesses as would not come without warrant (Affidavit being made thereof), and this not to be any occasion of delay in his trial. It was further ordered that the Earl of Strafford should have liberty to examine such witnesses (without oath) at his trial as were necessary for his defence, and also that he might cross-examine witnesses at the Bar, viva voce (but not upon oath), if it were needful for his defence.

The Lords having considered the Earl of Strafford's answer, sent a copy of it to the House of Commons, whereupon they sent a message to the Lords.

(This message with one or two verbal differences is that printed in Rushworth, Trial of Strafford, p. 33.)

At the Conference the House of Commons declared that they thought it fit to have all their members present at the trial, that thereby they might be better satisfied in their consciences when they came to vote in demanding judgement. They likewise desired their Lordships to give directions for conveniency of room for so great a number, and that intimation was given that the space in the Lords' House without the Bar would be too strait to contain such as would be necessary to be present at the trial.

The Lords taking these propositions into consideration thought fit to put it upon the House of Commons to show precedents, when and where the place had been changed, for locally the judicature had been in their House. The House having received this answer from the Lords, they insisted on their desire of having a larger room than the Lords' House, and concerning precedents they instanced in the case of Gonime in 1^o R. II., the Parliament sat in the Black Chamber, and they further urged that the Parliament being summoned to appear at the King's Palace at Westminster, if one room were not convenient another might be appointed which was more proper.

The Lords being convinced that their House was not so fit as a larger place they acquainted the King with the desires of the Commons, and propounded to his Majesty Westminster Hall to be the place for the trial to which the King consented, and order was given to the Lord High Chamberlain to have all things prepared in order to the trial. And the Earl of Arundel, then Lord Steward for the time of Parliament, was appointed Speaker of the House of Peers during the trial.

Some things were offered for the resolutions of the Peers as relating to their own members.

First, whether those Lords who had proxies of absent Lords should make use of them, and it was resolved that at that time and in that case proxies should not be made use of yet with this salvo, saving to those absent Lords the right of Peers.

It was likewise questioned whether the Bishops should be allowed their votes in this cause of the Earl of Strafford, it being a charge of High Treason, and punishable by death, whereupon one of the Lords alleged that to his best remembrance the Bishop of Lincoln had at the Committee two or three days before deserted his claim therein both in his own name and in the name of the rest of the Bishops. But the Bishop of Lincoln replied that he did not desert his claim, nor durst he do so, knowing what his writ of summons to Parliament enjoined him to, but he said by his Majesty's gracious favour, and the favour of their Lordships, he would forbear to vote or to speak anything to the merits of the cause, which was now prosecuted against the Earl of Strafford, and he conceived his brethren the Bishops were also inclined so to do.

This was taken by the Lords as a modest expression, in confirmation whereof, when any question was put concerning the trial of the Earl of Strafford, the Bishops did forbear to vote.

They did further declare that at that time and in that case they would not make any procurator, saving to themselves their ancient rights.

All things being now so resolved in order to the trial, that the House of Commons should be present in Westminster Hall as a Committee, and that some of their members should manage the evidence against the Earl, the Lords thought fit to order, that the Earl of Strafford in matter of mere fact should not make use of his Counsel, but in matter of Law he might make use of Counsel; and if any doubt did arise concerning what was matter of fact and what was matter of Law the Lords would refer unto themselves the judgement thereof.

The House of Commons having these resolutions communicated unto them made this declaration. (Printed in Rushworth, Trial of Strafford, p. 38.)”
